Malice knowledge &c

Condition of mind—Rules 10 11 and 12 are no more than practical applications of the general principle laid down in r 2 above Malice fraudulent intention knowledge etc constitute in some cases the material facts of a party's case they must therefore be alleged in the party's pleading But the circumstances from which they are to be inferred need not be stated in the pleading

Malice—Malice is a necessary part of the cause of action in suits for slander of title and for malicious prosecution It must therefore be alleged by the plaintiff in his plaint Similarly where a defendant in an action of libel claims privilege, alleging that

6, the words complained of were used on a privileged occasion, the plaintiff may allege and prove malice, that is, improper motive

Knowledge—In a suit by a servant against his master for injury caused by the dangerous condition of a building where he is employed, the plaint must not only affirm the master's knowledge of the danger, but must also negative the servant's knowledge of it (u). To support an action for damages for the bite of a dog, the plaintiff must allege and prove that the dog had to the defendant's knowledge bitten or attempted to bite some person before it bit the plaintiff (v).

11. [New. R.S.C., O. 19, r. 23] Wherever it is material to allege notice to any person of any fact, matter or thing, it shall be sufficient to allege such notice as a fact, unless the form or the precise terms of such notice, or the circumstances from which such notice is to be inferred, are material.

Notice as part of cause of action—Notice, where it forms part of the cause of action, must be pleaded as a fact, e.g., notice of suit proposed to be brought against the Secretary of State for India [see s. 80], or against a Railway Company (w), or against a Municipality, notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange, notice to a tenant to quit, etc. It is not necessary to set out the notice verbatim in the plaint.

12 [New. R.S.C., O 19, r 24] Whenever any contract or any relation between any persons is to be implied from a series of letters or conversations or otherwise from a number of circumstances, it shall be sufficient to allege such contract or relation as a fact, and to refer generally to such letters, conversations or circumstances without setting them out in detail. And if in such case the person so pleading desires to rely in the alternative upon more contracts or relations than one as to be implied from such circumstances, he may state the same in the alternative.

Implied contract.—A contract may be expressed in one document, or it may have to be implied from a series of documents or conversations or from a number of other circumstances. Rule 9 applies in the former case the present rule, in the latter case. Circumstances in the conduct of two parties may establish a binding contract between them, although the agreement, reduced into writing as a draft, has not been formally executed by either (x). As regards contracts to be implied from a series of letters, it is to be noted that where a Court has to find a contract in a correspondence, and not in one particular note or memorandum formally signed, the whole of that which has passed between the parties must be taken into consideration (y).

13. [New. R. S. C., O 19, r. 25.] Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side, unless the same has first been specifically denied (e.g., consideration for a bill of exchange where the plaintiff sues only on the bill, and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim).

Presumption of law

Presumptions of law—A plaintiff need not, in his plaint, allege the consideration for which a bill of exchange was given to him, when he sues only on the bill, for it will be presumed in his favour that the bill was made for consideration (2). It will be for the defendant to plead that there was no consideration for the bill. But if the plaintiff sues on the consideration as a substantive ground of claim, he must allege the consideration specifically.

14. [Ss 51, 115] Every pleading shall be signed by the party and his pleader (if any) provided that where a party pleading is, by reason of absence or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading, it may be signed by any person duly authorized by him to sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf Omission to sign plaint—The signing of plaints is merely a matter of procedure (a). If a plaint is not signed by the plaintiff or by any person duly authorised by him in that behalf, and the defect is discovered at any time before judgment the Court may allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint by signing the same. If the defect is not discovered until the case comes on for hearing before an appellate Court, the appellate Court may order the amendment to be made in that Court. In any event the appellate Court should not dismiss the suit or otherwise interfere with the decree of the lower Court, merely because the plaint is not signed as required by this rule. The reason is that the omission to sign or verify a plaint is not such a defect as could affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court (b). see s. 99

Pleading to be signed

15 [Ss 51, 52, 115] (1) Save as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force,

Verification of pleadings

every pleading shall be verified at the foot by the party or by one of the parties pleading or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case

(3) The verification shall be signed by the person making it and shall state the date on which and the place at which it was signed.

Verification of plaint—The verification of a plaint is not evidence on which a suit can be decreed even if the defendant does not appear (c)

Omission to verify pleading—A pleading which is not verified in the manner required by this rule may be verified at a later stage of the suit, even after the expiry of the limitation period. The omission to verify a pleading is a mere irregularity within the meaning of s 99 of the Code (d). See notes to r 14 above 16 [New R. S. C., O. 19, r. 27.] The Court may, at any stage of the proceedings, order to be struck out or amended any matter in any pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit.

Striking out pleadings

Amending your opponent's pleading—This rule deals with amendments which a party desires to be made in his opponent's pleading. The next rule deals with amendments which a party desires to make in his own pleading

Striking out or amending pleadings—"It seems to me," said Bowen, L.J., in Knoules v. Roberts (e), "that the rule that the Court is not to dictate to parties how they should frame their case, is one that ought always to be preserved sacred. But that rule is, of course, subject to this modification and limitation, that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleading which have been laid down by the law, and if a party introduces a pleading which is unnecessary, and it tends to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the action, and the Court ought to be strict even to severity in taking care to prevent pleadings from degenerating into the old oppressive pleadings of the Court of Chancery" (f)

"Unnecessary."—This rule has been reproduced verbatim from O 19, r 27, of the English Rules. According to the English practice, the mere fact that a pleading contains matters which are unnecessary is no ground for striking out those matters (g). It only affects the costs of the pleading (h). An allegation in a pleading will not be struck out merely because it is unnecessary, unless it is scandalous, or tends to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the action. Thus, where in a suit against a Local Board the plaintiff alleged that a member of the Board had used his influence with the Board for his own private interest, and that in consequence thereof the Board had declined to meet the just demands of the plaintiffs, the allegations were ordered to be struck out (i) In such a case, the allegations are not only unnecessary, but they are scandalous : For the same reason, unnecessary allegations of dishonest conduct made against the defendant will be struck out under this rule (j) In an action to enforce a compromise of a former action, it is unnecessary and embarrassing for the plaintiff to set out in the plaint the original disputes between the parties : such allegations will therefore be struck out (k) Where a statement of claim contained immaterial facts and set out at great length documents which could not be material except as evidence by way of admission, so that the defendant could not know what case he had to meet, it was held that the whole statement of claim should be struck out as being unnecessarily prolix and embarrassing (l) In an action for slander it is unnecessary and embarrassing for the defendant to state in his defence that he did not say the words alleged in the plaint, but that he said something else, and that the something else which he said was true, such statements will therefore be struck out (m)

" Scandalous "—Every Court has an inherent power, quite independently of this rule, to strike out scandalous matter in any record or proceeding The Court has a duty to discharge towards the public and the suitors, in taking care that its records are kept free from irrelevant and scandalous matter (n) Scandal is calculated to do great and permanent injury to all persons whom it affects, by making the records of the Court the means of perpetuating libellous and malignant slanders, and the Court, in aid of the public morals, is bound to interfere to suppress such indecencies which may stain the reputation and wound the feelings of the parties and their relatives and friends (o). Thus where an application for bail to the High Court contained defamatory allegations against the trying Magistrate which were all irrelevant, the High Court of Bombay refused to allow the application to be filed, and ordered it to be returned (p) Similarly, where a memorandum of appeal alleged partiality against the Judge whose decree was in question, the High Court of Madras ordered the objectionable passages to be expunged (q) It must however, be noted that ' nothing can be scandalous which is relevant ' (r) Thus matters in aggravation of damages are relevant, they will not, therefore be struck out though scandalous (s) Similarly, allegations of dishonesty or fraud or conspiracy will not be struck out as scandalous, if they are relevant to the facts in issue They will be struck out only if they are irrelevant (t) An application to strike out scandalous matter may be made by any person whether or not he is a party to the suit or personally affected by the scandalous matter (u)

" Tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit "—In considering the question whether a pleading tends to prejudice embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit : a liberal interpretation should be given to the words trial of the suit Hence not only a pleading which tends to prejudice or embarrass a party at the actual trial of a suit but a pleading which tends to prejudice or embarrass a party at any stage of the proceedings in the suit, would be within this rule (z)

A pleading is embarrassing if it is so drawn that it is not clear what case the opposite party has to meet at the trial (w). But a pleading is not embarrassing merely because it is prolix (x). Nor is a pleading embarrassing merely because it contains allegations that are inconsistent or stated in the alternative (y). See notes to r ■ above, "Alternative and inconsistent allegations," on p. 441 above. See also notes above "Unnecessary."

The power of the Court under this rule should be exercised with great care and caution. Where a defendant sets up a contemporaneous oral agreement, the Court should not strike out his pleading on the ground that evidence of such agreement is inadmissible under s 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 and that the pleading is therefore embarrassing. Whether an oral agreement contemporaneous with a written document is admissible in evidence depends to some extent as to how the case is presented at the trial (z).

"At any stage of the proceedings"—The application under this rule should be made with reasonable promptitude, and as a rule before the close of the pleadings. If it is not so made, the Court may, in its discretion, refuse to make the order, though the Rule expressly states that an order may be made 'at any stage of the proceedings'. The reason is that the power to make the order under this rule is discretionary (a).

Practice.—The Court may, under this rule, order the whole pleading to be struck out as was done in the undermentioned cases (b), where the statement of claim consisted partly of unintelligible matters, partly of irrelevant matters, and the rest of scandalous matter, or it may order the objectionable matter only to be struck out, which appears to be the usual practice (c). Where the defect can be remedied by amendment, the Court may give leave to amend (d). Where a pleading is not so specific as it ought to be the Court may direct the party to amend his pleading or give further particulars (e).

17. [New R. S. C., O 28, r 1] The Court may at any stage of the proceedings allow either party to alter or amend his pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties

Different kinds of amendment.—Hitherto we have dealt with four kinds of amendment. The present rule deals with one more. All these may be grouped together as follows —

I ■ 152 [amendment of clerical and arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees and orders]

(1) Iordan v Greenwood (1878) 3 Ex D 251	(b) Cash v Craddock (1876) 3 C D 38 Dary v Garrett (1877) 7 C D 473

- 2 S 153 [amendment of proceedings in a suit by the Court, whether moved thereto by the parties or not, for the purpose of determining the real question or issue between the parties]
- 3 O 1, r 10, sub r (2) [striking out or adding parties]
- 4 O 6, r 16 [amending your opponent's pleading, compulsory amendment]
- 5 O 6, r 17 [amending your own pleading, voluntary amendment]

Amending your own pleading—The preceding rule deals with amendments which a party desires to be made in his opponent's pleading, as where the pleading contains irrelevant and scandalous matter, or where it may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit. The present rule deals with amendments which a party desires to make in his own pleading.

LEAVE TO AMEND WHEN GIVEN

As a general rule, leave to amend will be granted so as to enable the real question in issue between the parties to be raised on the pleadings, where the amendment will occasion no injury to the opposite party, except such as can be sufficiently compensated for by costs or other terms to be imposed by the order. (f) "I have had much to do in Chambers," said Bramwell, L.J., "with applications for leave to amend, and I may perhaps be allowed to say that this humble branch of learning is very familiar to me. My practice has always been to give leave to amend unless I have been satisfied that the party applying was acting malà fide, or that, by his blunder, he had done some injury to his opponent which could not be compensated for by costs or otherwise." (g) It does not matter that the original omission arose from negligence or carelessness. However negligent or careless may have been the first omission, and however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side. There is no injustice if the other side can be compensated by costs. (h) "I have found in my experience," said Bowen, L.J., "that there is one panacea which heals every sore in litigation, and that is costs." (i) It is immaterial to consider whether the error sought to be amended was accidental or not. There is no rule that only slips or accidental errors are to be corrected. The rule says, 'all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy.' There is no kind of error or mistake which, if not fraudulent or intended to overreach, the Court ought not to correct, if it can be done without injustice to the other party. (j) Thus a plaintiff in a suit for debt may be allowed to amend the plaint by setting out an acknowledgment passed to him by the defendant even after the defendant has filed his written statement raising the plea of limitation. (k) Even an admission made by mistake may be allowed to be withdrawn, and the pleading amended accordingly. (l) Misdescription of immovable property in a plaint may be corrected even in appeal. (m) The party applying, however, must not be acting malà fide; the application to amend must be bona fide and made in good faith. (n)

LEAVE TO AMEND WHEN REFUSED

It follows from what has been stated above that leave to amend should be refused—

- (1) Where the amendment is not necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties, as where it is—

- (i) merely technical, or
(ii) useless and of no substance

- (2) Where the plaintiff's suit would be wholly displaced by the proposed amendment.
(3) Where the effect of the amendment would be to take away from the defendant a legal right which has accrued to him by lapse of time
(4) Where the amendment would introduce a totally different, new and inconsistent case, and the application is made at a late stage of the proceedings.
(5) Where the application for amendment is not made in good faith

We shall deal with these five cases in order

1. Leave to amend will be refused where the amendment is not necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties—This happens where the amendment is merely (1) technical or (2) of no substance

Where the amendment is merely technical—Where after the evidence for the plaintiff has been taken, the defendant applies for an amendment for the purpose merely of enabling him to raise a purely technical objection to the plaintiff's right to sue, the application should be refused (o) B and C wrongfully remove A's furniture. A sues B for damages, and recovers judgment against him [B and C being joint wrong doers, the judgment against B, according to English law, precludes A from suing C for the same wrong] A afterwards sues C for damages for the same wrong. C does not plead the judgment against B in his defence, but, after the evidence for A has been taken, applies for leave to amend his written statement by pleading that the judgment against B is a bar to the suit against him. The application must be refused (p), for the amendment is not necessary to bring out the real questions between the parties, but purposes merely to enable C to avail himself of a technical rule of law (q)

Where the amendment is useless and of no substance—The object of the present rule being to enable the real questions in dispute being raised on the pleadings, leave to amend has been refused to the plaintiff where the proposed amendment would not help him in substantiating his claim (r), and to the defendant, where the proposed amendment would not help him in supporting his defence (s). Thus where A sued B, and finding that the suit against B would fail, applied to join C as a defendant, the application was refused on the ground that even if the plaint were amended by adding C as a party, the case was such that A would not be entitled to any relief even against C. In refusing leave to amend, Vaughan Williams, L.J., said: "One good reason for our not doing so is that looking at the case that he [plaintiff] tells us he would wish to present, that case, if presented by amendment, would, in my judgment, also fail, so that there is nothing to be gained by amendment" (t). Similarly, where A sued B for a libel, and B pleaded justification, and B afterwards applied to amend his defence by adding a paragraph which virtually contained a plea in mitigation of damages, but was no answer to the action, the application was refused (u). See notes to r. 2 above, "Matters affecting damages," § 43^a above

2 Leave to amend will be refused if the plaintiff's suit would be wholly O. 6, displaced by the proposed amendment—In Steward v The North Metropolitan Tramways Co (1), the plaintiff sued a tramway company for damages caused by their negligence in allowing their tramway to be in a defective condition. By their defence the company denied negligence. It was no part of the defence that the company were not the proper parties to be sued. More than six months after the delivery of the defence the company applied for leave to amend the defence by adding an allegation that by a contract between the company and the local authority of the district, the liability to maintain the roadway had been transferred to the local authority and that the company had ceased to be responsible for the railway. At the date of the application the plaintiff's remedy against the local authority had become barred by limitation. If the agreement had been pleaded earlier, the plaintiff could have maintained an action against the board. Under these circumstances the application was refused. It is clear from the above facts that if the amendment were allowed, the plaintiff might fail against the company, the company not being the proper defendants, and if he brought an action against the local authority, it would be too late. That would be an injury to the plaintiff such as could not be compensated for by any costs that the Court might order the company to pay to the plaintiff. "The test as to whether the amendment should be allowed," said Pollock, B., "is, whether or not the defendant can amend without placing the plaintiff in such a position that he cannot be recouped as it were, by any allowance of costs or otherwise. Here the action would be wholly displaced by the proposed amendment, and I think it ought not to be allowed."

3 Leave to amend will be refused where the effect of the proposed amendment is to take away from the defendant a legal right which has accrued to him by lapse of time, except in the special circumstances of a case (u)—The leading English case on the subject is Heldon v Neal (x). The facts of that case may be stated in the form of an illustration. A sues B for damages for slander. A afterwards applies for leave to amend the plaint by adding fresh claims in respect of assault and false imprisonment. These claims are at the date of the application barred by limitation, although they were not barred at the date of the suit. The application should be refused, for the effect of allowing it would be to take away from B the defence under the law of limitation and therefore unjustly to prejudice him. "We must act," said Lord Esher, M.R., "on the settled rule of practice, which is that amendments are not admissible when they prejudice the rights of the opposite party as existing at the date of such amendments. Under very peculiar circumstances the Court might perhaps have power to allow such an amendment, but certainly as a general rule it will not do so." In Chohan Dass v Amer Khan (y), their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "Though [the power of a Court to amend the plaint] should not as a rule be exercised where its effect is to take away from a defendant a legal right which has accrued to him by lapse of time, yet there are cases where such considerations are outweighed by the special circumstances of a case. Chohan Dass case was a case of that kind, and their Lordships, having regard to the special circumstances of the case, upheld an amendment of the plaint allowed by the Judicial Commissioner of the North West Frontier Province in second appeal. In that case the plaintiffs sued for a declaration

6, r. 17 of their right of pre-emption over certain land, but omitted to ask for consequential relief, namely, possession, as required by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. The trial Judge and the first appellate Court refused to allow the plaintiff to be amended by claiming possession on pre-emption since the time had expired for bringing a suit to enforce that right. Upon a second appeal the Court allowed the amendment to be made, and this was confirmed by the Privy Council. There was no ground for suspecting that the plaintiffs had not acted in good faith, "all that happened was that the plaintiffs, through some blundering, attempted to assert rights that they undoubtedly possessed under the statute in a form which the statute did not permit." The case of Kisandas v. Rachappa (2), decided by the High Court of Bombay, is another instance in which such an amendment was allowed on the ground that the circumstances of the case were so peculiar that it should properly be excepted from the general rule. The facts of the case may be stated in the form of an illustration: A, alleging that he had brought in Rs. 4,000 as capital under a partnership agreement between him and B, sues B, for dissolution of partnership and for accounts. It is clear from the proceedings before the Court of first instance that though the suit was in form one for dissolution and accounts A intended from the first to sue only for the recovery of his money, and B had actually pleaded to the money claim and the claim had actually been put in issue and evidence given in respect thereof. The lower Court finds as a fact that the sum was due, but dismisses A's suit on the technical ground that the agreement set up by A did not constitute a partnership between A and B. A appeals from the decree, and applies for the first time in appeal for leave to amend the plaintiff by adding a prayer for the recovery of Rs. 4,000. At this date the claim for money is barred by limitation. The amendment must be allowed notwithstanding the bar. The defence of limitation would never have been open to B had it not been for the inexpertness of the pleadings. There was no fresh claim sought to be set up as it was in Weldon v. Neal cited above. B knew what A's claim was, though the suit was wrongly framed. Similarly, where the plaintiff sued in the first instance for possession of the books of accounts of his shop from the defendants who he alleged were his servants and stated in the plaint that he would bring a separate suit for the money due by them, but subsequently applied for leave to amend the plaint by adding a further relief namely recovery of money, it was held that the amendment should be allowed even though the money claim was barred by limitation between the date of the plaint and the date of the application for amendment (a).

4. Leave to amend will be refused where the amendment would introduce a totally different, new and inconsistent case.—In Ma Shue Mya v. Maung Mo Hnawng (b) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "All rules of Court are nothing but provisions intended to secure the proper administration of justice and it is therefore essential that they should be made to serve and be subordinate to that purpose, so that full powers of amendment must be enjoyed and should always be liberally exercised, but none the less no power has yet been given to enable one distinct cause of action to be substituted for another, nor to change, by means of amendment the subject matter of the suit." This proposition follows directly from r. 17. The object of r. 17 is to allow an amendment for the purpose of determining the real questions in dispute between the parties. That being the purpose for which an amendment is allowed no amendment should be allowed which would introduce a totally new and different case (c).

An amendment of that character does not bring out the real issues in the suit; it implies, rather an abandonment of the real issues on the part of the party applying for the amendment. The result of the English cases is thus summed up in Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleadings (d). "Leave to amend may be refused where at the trial or hearing the party seeks to alter the whole nature of his case by an unexpected amendment which may require further evidence to be adduced by his opponent."

The above proposition may be split into two —

- A. Leave to amend a plaint should not be granted, if the amendment would convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character
- B. Leave to amend a written statement should not be granted, if the amendment would convert the defence into another of a different and inconsistent character [p 464 below]

We shall deal with these propositions in order

A. Leave to amend a plaint should not be granted if the amendment would convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character — A institutes a suit against B. B files his written statement. At the hearing of the suit, A finds that his case must fail as laid in the plaint, and that he can only succeed on a different case. He then applies for leave to amend the plaint. Should the leave be granted? It has been held under the corresponding English rule that no amendment should be allowed if it would "introduce an entirely different case from that which the defendant came to meet" (e) or, to put it in another form, if it would "change one action into another of a substantially different character" (f). Section 53 of the Code of 1882 which dealt with amendment of plaints, expressly provided that "a plaint shall not be amended so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character." That section has been omitted in this Code, and the present rule (which is a reproduction of O. 28, r 1, of the English Rules) now takes its place. But the decisions under the old section on the point now under consideration are still good law, and we proceed to examine them.

It must be observed at the outset that a plaintiff must in general be limited to the case which he puts forward in his plaint. There are, however, cases in which by some mistake or misapprehension the plaintiff has failed to state his case correctly and properly in the plaint. In such cases the Court may allow the plaint to be amended (g), for if the amendment is refused, the plaintiff may have to bring another suit, and the object of the rule allowing amendment of plaints is to avoid multiplicity of suits (h). But the Court ought not to allow an amendment, if it would convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character. "We cannot countenance the notion," said Straight, J., "that a plaintiff, coming into Court with one case, and hopelessly failing to prove it, should be permitted to succeed upon another and that directly in antagonism with his primary allegation." (i) The law prohibits every amendment that would change the fundamental character of the suit (j). It is not, however, to be supposed that if the fundamental character of the suit is not altered a plaintiff is entitled as of right to amend the plaint. As stated by the High Court of Bombay, "the power to get a plaint amended is subject to the discretion of the judge and is not claimable as a right of the suitor in all circumstances" (k).

Rules—"The general rule is that any amendment allowed must be such as is either raised in the pleadings, or is consistent with the case as originally laid and that the state of facts and the equities and ground of relief originally alleged and pleaded by the plaintiff should not be departed from. This is the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Eshen Chunder Singh v Shama Churn Bhutto (1), and this rule has been followed in numerous decisions of our Courts. (m)

From the general rule stated above, we deduce the following three rules each of which is borne out by the cases cited under it —

Rule I—Where a plaintiff bases his claim upon a specific legal relation alleged to exist between him and the defendant, he may not be allowed to amend the plant so as to base it on a different legal relation

Note—Even if the legal relation between the plaintiff and the defendant remains unchanged, the plant will not be allowed to be amended, if it completely alters the cause of action [ill (7)]

Rule II—Where a plaintiff bases his claim on a specific title, he may not be allowed to amend the plant so as to base it on a different title

Note—Even if the title by which the plaintiff claims remains unaltered, the plant will not be allowed to be amended, if it completely alters the cause of action

Rule III—When one kind of fraud is charged another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it

Illustrations of Rule I

1 A, alleging that B hired cargo boats from him, and that a balance of Rs 3 000 is due to him on that account, sues B for the amount. It is proved at the hearing that B did not himself hire the boats, but that he was merely A's agent to find hires for the boats. A then applies to amend his plant by claiming an account from B on the footing that B was A's agent. The amendment should not be allowed, because in the one case the legal relation between A and B is that of letter and hirer, and, in the other, that of principal and agent. Shibkrishno v Abdool (1890) 5 Cal 602

2 A sues B for the rent of a house alleged to have been let by A to B. B denies the lease and contends that he is the owner of the house. A will not be allowed to amend the plant by converting the suit into one for a declaration of ownership. Bai Sri Majirajba v Maganlal (1895) 19 Bom 303

3 A sues B for damages for wrongful occupation of his land and for injury done to his land. After the issues are framed A applies to amend the plant by claiming from B rent for the land on the basis of a subsisting tenancy. The amendment should not be allowed because it will convert a claim based on trespass into a claim on the basis of a subsisting lease. Narayan v Hari (1889) 13 Bom 664, Jhara Singh v Purthi Nalâ (1917) 2 Pat L J 69 38 I C 191 (n). See ill (5) below

4 A suit for possession on the footing of a subsisting lease cannot be converted at a late stage of the proceedings into a suit for ejectment. Neuby v Sharpe (1878) 8 C D 39 49, Laird v Briggs (1880) 16 C D 440

5 A suit for rent will not be allowed to be converted at the hearing into a suit for use and occupation.—A sues B to recover Rs 1,000 alleged to be the rent due under a lease executed by B. The Court finds that B was in occupation of the premises during the period for which the rent is claimed, but that the alleged lease was not executed by B.

At this stage A applies to amend his plaint by alleging that, though the lease was not executed by B, he is entitled to recover the amount for use and occupation of the premises. The amendment will not be allowed (o).

6 A suit for possession will not be allowed to be converted into a suit for redemption. In the former case the plaintiff sues as owner of the land, in the latter as mortgagor. Laxmishankar v Hamjabhai (1920) 44 Bom 515, 57 I C 426

7 A, who is P's agent to manage certain property belonging to P, appoints S to act as a sub agent for P, and gives him Rs 1,000 belonging to P, for the payment of Government revenue and other purposes. S fails to account for the money. P sues A to recover the amount paid by A to S, claiming the same on the ground that S was appointed sub agent without P's authority. It is found at the hearing that S was appointed sub agent with P's authority. P will not be allowed to amend the plaint so as to base his claim on the ground that A had not exercised ordinary prudence in selecting S as a sub agent for P. Hamilton v Land Mortgage Bank (1883) 11 All. 456. [This is an illustration of the proposition in the Note to Rule 1. If the amendment were allowed, the legal relation between the plaintiff and the defendant which is that of principal and agent, would no doubt remain unchanged, but the cause of action would be completely changed.]

Illustrations of Rule II

1 A alleging that B was the adopted son of C, and that he (A) is the heir of B, sues D to recover certain property forming part of the estate of B. The Court finds that the adoption of B was not valid. A then contends for the first time in appeal to the Privy Council that even if the adoption was not valid he is entitled to recover the property as the heir of C. This is a totally new case, and A cannot be permitted in appeal to set up an entirely new case. Gopee Lal v Chundralee (1872) 19 W R 12 I A. Sup Vol 131

2 A obtains a decree against X, and after the death of the latter, attaches certain immovable property in execution of the decree. B and C, sons of X, sue A for a declaration that the property is joint family property, and it is not liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree against the father, on the ground that the debts contracted by their father were for immoral purposes. It is proved that the debts were not incurred for immoral purposes. Thereupon B and C apply to amend the plaint by alleging that they had separated from their father before the date of the decree and that they were not therefore liable to pay the amount of the decree. The amendment cannot be allowed, because the plaintiff's claim as originally laid was on the footing that there was no partition between them and their father. Narayanrai v Jashircahu (1888) 12 Bom 431

3 A, a Hindu, claiming as the heir of his uncle sues the executors of his uncle's widow for possession of property left by the widow, alleging that the same belonged to the estate of his uncle, and that the widow had no power to dispose of it by will. The Court holds that the widow had power to will away the property. A will not be allowed to amend the plaint by adding that even if the widow had the power to dispose of the property by her will he was entitled to the residue as his uncle's heir as the same was left to charitable objects of an unspecified and general character and could not therefore be legally applied to charity. Damodar v Purianan (1883) 10 Bom. 150. [This is an illustration of the Note to Rule II. If the amendment were allowed, the title by which the plaintiff claims, namely, as his uncle's heir, would no doubt remain unchanged, but the cause of action would be completely altered.]

Illustration of Rule III

A, the official assignee of the estate of a deceased insolvent, sues B to recover Rs 1,50,000 alleged in the plaint to be unlawfully withheld from the estate in consequence of a payment fraudulently concealed from A's predecessor in office. It is proved that A's predecessor was aware of the payment. A applies to amend the plaint by alleging that though his predecessor consented to the payment, such consent was illegal as being a fraud, though of a different kind, upon the Court. The amendment cannot be allowed, because to allege fraud of one kind and to substitute fraud of another kind is to convert the suit into one of an inconsistent character. Abdul Hossain v Turner (1887) 11 Bom 620, 14 I A 111. See Notes to O 6, r 4 "Fraud and coercion," p 443 above.

B Leave to amend a written statement should not be granted if the amendment would convert the defence into another of a different and inconsistent character—As in the case of a plaint, so in the case of a written statement, the Court will not allow an amendment that would involve "a complete change of front in the defence" (p)

A agrees to grant a lease of a brickfield to B. No lease is executed but B enters into possession under the agreement. B then sues A for specific performance of the agreement, alleging that A, though frequently asked to do so had neglected and refused to grant the lease. A denies that he was asked to grant the lease and expresses his readiness to execute the lease. A also counter claims for Rs. 1,500 by way of rent. After the suit is set down for trial, A applies for leave to amend his defence and counter claim, and to join therewith a claim for possession of the land. The application must be refused. To allow A to amend would be to allow him to present 'a totally distinct, new and inconsistent case'. Clari v Wray (1886) 31 C D 68

5 Leave to amend will be refused where the application for amendment is not made in good faith—Leave to amend will not be given if the party applying is acting mala fide (g) as where there is no substantial ground for the case proposed to be set up by the amendment (r). Want of bona fides may be inferred from a great delay in making the application (s).

Amendment of plaint by adding new reliefs.—The amendment of a plaint by adding a new prayer may or may not convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character. If the amendment converts the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character, it will not be allowed. If the amendment does not convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character, it may or may not be allowed at the discretion of the Court. In the exercise of this discretion, the Court will not allow an amendment if the application for amendment is made at such a late stage of the proceedings that, if allowed, it would create a necessity of practically trying the case de novo (t), otherwise the amendment may be allowed (u). Thus a mortgagee suing for sale of the mortgaged property may be allowed to amend the plaint by asking merely for a simple money decree against the mortgagor. In such a case, the character of the suit is not fundamentally altered, nor could the defendant be possibly taken by surprise (t). Similarly, a purchaser suing for specific performance may be allowed to amend his plaint by asking in the alternative for a refund of the earnest (w). Where a plaintiff has framed his suit bona fide, believing that consequential relief is not open to him and that he is entitled to a declaration, the plaint may be allowed to be amended even in appeal by adding a prayer for possession (x). See notes "Leave to amend will be refused where the effect of the proposed amendment is to take away from the defendant," etc., on p 459 above

Amendment by adding a plea of fraud—It is "the universal practice, except in the most exceptional circumstances, not to allow an amendment for the purpose of adding a plea of fraud where fraud has not been pleaded in the first instance" (y). Where facts supporting the charge of fraud were disclosed in the cross examination of the defendant, leave was given to amend by adding a plea of fraud (z). Similarly, where the plaintiff sued on a mortgage, and the defendant in his written statement alleged that he was a minor at the date of the mortgage, leave was given to the plaintiff to amend the plaint by raising an alternative case that the loan was obtained by the defendant by the fraudulent representation that he had attained majority at the time (a). See Notes to O 6, r 4, "Fraud and coercion," on p 443 above

"AT ANY STAGE OF THE PROCEEDINGS"

Leave to amend may be granted at any stage of the proceedings. It may be granted on appeal (s 107, sub s (2)), or even on second appeal (s 108). In the undermentioned case (b), the plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint in appeal before the Privy Council. The appellate Court may allow an amendment whether leave to amend was asked for in the Court below or not. It may also allow an amendment even if the Court below offered leave to amend but the offer was declined (c).

More delay is not a ground for refusing an amendment. As a general rule, however late the amendment is sought to be made it should be allowed except in the five cases mentioned above (d). Before the hearing, there is as a rule little difficulty, in ordinary cases, in a party obtaining leave to amend on payment of the costs of and occasioned by the amendment and the application (e). Leave to amend may also be given at the hearing on proper terms as to the costs and the postponement of the hearing, if necessary, except, again, in the five cases mentioned above. Thus leave to amend has been granted at the trial where there was a defect in the parties and it became necessary to amend the proceedings in the suit (f). It would also be granted where both parties knew what the case was and there was no surprise (g). In a recent Rangoon case, A sued B on a promissory note for Rs 175. B denied execution of the note but admitted receipt of Rs 100 only. No alternative cause of action on the original consideration was pleaded. A failed to prove execution of the note. It was held that the plaint could be amended at any stage of the proceedings by the addition of the alternative plea and that the plaintiff could be given a decree for the Rs 100 after the a plaint was amended (h).

Appeal—No appeal lies under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order amending the title of a plaint by omitting the word 'summary' before the word 'suit,' and transferring the case to the Short Causes List (i).

- (e) the facts constituting the cause of action and when it arose,
- (f) the facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction,
- (g) the relief which the plaintiff claims,
- (h) where the plaintiff has allowed a set-off or relinquished a portion of his claim, the amount so allowed or relinquished, and
- (i) a statement of the value of the subject matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of Court fees, so far as the case admits

Statement of value—See notes to s 15, 'Where the subject matter of a suit does not admit of being satisfactorily valued' on p 79 above.

2 [S. 50, paras. 2, 3.] Where the plaintiff seeks the recovery of money, the plaint shall state the precise amount claimed

In money suits

But where the plaintiff sues for mesne profits, or for an amount which will be found due to him on taking unsettled accounts between him and the defendant, the plaint shall state approximately the amount sued for.

Suit for mesne profits or account.—See notes to s 6, 'Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees,' on p 15 above.

3 [New] Where the subject-matter of the suit is immoveable property, the plaint shall contain a description of the property sufficient to identify it, and, in case such property can be identified by boundaries or numbers in a record of settlement or survey, the plaint shall specify such boundaries or numbers

Where the subject matter of the suit is immoveable property

4. [S 50, para. 4.] Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character the plaint shall show not only that he has an actual existing interest in the subject-matter, but that he has taken the steps (if any) necessary to enable him to institute a suit concerning it

When plaintiff sues as representative

"Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character."—Where a person dies leaving a will, the executor named in the will may obtain probate of the will. Where a person dies intestate his heirs may apply for letters of administration. The person to whom letters of administration are granted is called administrator. The executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person is the legal representative for all purposes and all the property of the deceased vests in such person. A suit by a person as executor or administrator of a deceased person is brought by him in a representative character. There are some cases in which the executor or administrator of a deceased person may be entitled to a decree in respect of the estate of the deceased in a representative character to a decree in respect of the estate of the deceased. This will be seen from the following statement of the subject—

7, r. 4. 1 Europeans, Parsis, Jews and Armenians subject to the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, 39 of 1925—In this class of cases no decree can be passed in respect of any matter concerning the estates of the deceased unless a probate or letters of administration as the case may be are obtained

2 Hindu Wills—Probate is necessary in the case of Hindu wills where such wills are of the class specified in s 57 of the I S Act, 1925. These are wills made by Hindus within the territories which on 1st September 1870 were subject to the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal or within the local limits of the ordinary original Civil Jurisdiction of Madras and Bombay, and wills made outside those territories and limits so far as relates to immovable property situate within those territories or limits. No probate is necessary in the case of other wills. See I S Act, 1925, s 213.

No letters of administration are necessary where a Hindu dies intestate. See I S Act, 1925, s 212.

If a suit is brought to recover a debt due to the deceased, no decree can be passed against the debtor except on a production of a probate or letters of administration or a succession certificate. See I S Act, 1925, s 214.

3 Mahomedans—Neither a probate nor letters of administration are necessary in the case of Mahomedans. See I S Act, 1925, ss 212-213.

If a suit is brought to recover a debt due to the deceased, it is necessary to take out representation as stated above. See I S Act 1925, s 214.

4 Indian Christians—Up to the year 1901, Indian Christians were governed by the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, 1865. Hence it was necessary, where the deceased left a will, that the executor should obtain probate before he could establish any right as such to the property of the deceased (Succession Act, 1865, s 187). And where the deceased died intestate, letters of administration were required before any right could be established to any part of the property of the deceased in a Court of law (Succession Act, 1865, s 190). In the year 1901, an Act was passed called the Native Christian Administration of Estates Act (VII of 1901), declaring inter alia that the provisions of section 190 of the Succession Act, 1865, shall not apply to any part of the property of an Indian Christian who has died intestate, with the result that in case of intestacy no letters of administration were any longer necessary. Those Acts have now been repealed by the I S Act, 1925 but provisions similar to those above are reproduced in ss 212 and 213. Under s 213 a probate is necessary where the deceased has left a will. Under s 212 no letters of administration are necessary where the deceased has died intestate.

If a suit is brought to recover a debt due to the deceased, it is necessary to take out representation as stated above. See I S Act, 1925, s 214.

“Has taken the steps”—In those cases where a probate is necessary and those are cases specified in s 213 of the Indian Succession Act 39 of 1925 it has been held by the Privy Council that the grant of probate is not a condition precedent to the institution of the suit and that the executor or legatee may institute the suit without obtaining a probate, but that he will not be entitled to a decree until he obtains a probate (j)

Suppose that the deceased has left no will, and the case is one governed by s 212 of the Indian Succession Act 1925 so that letters of administration are necessary to establish a right to the property of the deceased in a Court of Law. Is it necessary in such a case that letters of administration to the estate of the deceased should be obtained before the institution of the suit, or is it enough if they are obtained before the decree is passed? It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that if letters of administration are not obtained before the institution of the suit, and the plaintiff does not show that the plaintiff has obtained letters of administration, the plaintiff should be rejected on presentation, but if the plaintiff is not rejected and the hearing has been allowed to proceed, there is nothing to prevent the Court from passing a decree for the plaintiff if letters of administration are obtained before the decree (k). The English law on the subject may thus be stated in the language of the Judicial Committee in Meyappa v Subramanian (l). An administrator derives title solely under his grant and cannot therefore, institute an action as administrator before he gets his grant. The law on the point is well settled see Comyns Digest, 'Administration' B 9 and 10, Thompson v Reynolds (m) Hoolley v Clark (n).

Title of suit—See Appendix A, '(2) Description of Parties in Particular Cases,' the last two forms. See also r 9 (2) below.

5. [S 50, para 5] The plaintiff shall show that the defendant is or claims to be interested in the subject-matter, and that he is liable to be called upon to answer the plaintiff's demand.

Defendant's interest and liability to be shown

6. [S 50, para 6] Where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation, the plaintiff shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed.

Grounds of exemption from limitation law

Grounds of exemption from limitation law—These grounds are set forth in sections 12 to 20 of the Limitation Act 1905. If no ground of exemption is shown in the plaintiff and the suit appears from the statement in the plaintiff to be barred by limitation the plaintiff shall be rejected [see r 11 cl (d) below]. But a plaintiff should not be rejected merely because the exemption is not claimed specifically. All that the

O. 7, r. 6, 7. rule requires ~~is~~ that the plaint shall show the ground of exemption (o) If a plaintiff does not show any ground of exemption, the Court of first instance should allow the plaintiff to be amended save under very exceptional circumstances (p). But a plaintiff should not be allowed to rely upon a ground of exemption from the law of limitation for the first time in appeal (q) See notes to O. 41, r. 2, below.

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay, that when a plaintiff does satisfy the requirements of this rule by stating what is in his opinion the ground upon which he intends to get over the bar of limitation, he ought not to be precluded from taking another and not inconsistent ground, should he be later advised that the latter is the true ground (r). According to the Calcutta (s) and Lahore (t) rulings, a plaintiff who has stated one ground of exemption may be allowed to take another and inconsistent ground

7. [New. N S.C., O. 20, r. 6.] Every plaintiff shall state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims either simply or in the alternative, and it shall not be necessary to ask for general or other relief which may always be given as the Court may think just to the same extent as if it had been asked for. And the same rule shall apply to any relief claimed by the defendant in his written statement.

Relief—Every plaintiff must state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims, whether it be damages, or specific performance, or an injunction, or a declaration, or an account, or the appointment of a receiver, or possession of land, or relief of any other kind. A plaintiff who omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all the reliefs to which he may be entitled in respect of the same cause of action will not afterwards be allowed to sue for any relief so omitted [O. 2, r. 2, sub r. (3)] But it is not necessary to ask for general or other relief.

Where a relief is claimed upon a specific ground the Court may grant it upon a ground different from that on which it is claimed in the plaintiff, if the ground is disclosed by the allegations in the plaintiff and the evidence in the case (u) Thus in a case in which a plaintiff claimed an easement by prescription, and it was found that he was not entitled to the easement by prescription, their Lordships of the Privy Council dealing with the case as a special appeal, decreed the claim on the presumption of title arising from a grant (v)

Where a plaintiff asks for more than what the plaintiff is entitled to, the Court may give him only that much relief as he is entitled to, but the suit must not be dismissed (w). Where a plaintiff asks for less than what the plaintiff is found to be entitled to, the Court cannot give him more than what is asked for in the plaint, unless the plaint is amended before judgment. Thus if a suit is brought upon a balance of accounts or for mesne profits, and the plaintiff, instead of claiming whatever may be found due on the taking of accounts and stating an approximate amount [O 7, r 2], states a specific sum as the amount claimed, the Court cannot, without an amendment of the plaint [O 6, r 17], pass a decree for more than what is claimed (x).

General or other relief—Under the system of pleadings hitherto followed in India, it was usual to add in the plaint a prayer for general relief called general prayer which ran thus: "The plaintiff claims such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require." Under the present rule it is no longer necessary specifically to ask for such relief. Such relief may now always be given to the same extent as if it had been asked for, provided it is not inconsistent with that specifically claimed as well as with the case raised by the pleading (y). In order, however, to entitle a plaintiff to a relief under the claim for general relief, it is necessary that the ground for such relief must be disclosed by the allegations in the plaint (z). A plaintiff cannot be entitled to relief upon facts or documents not stated or referred to by him in his pleadings. (a) Thus where a plaintiff sues for a declaration of title to certain property under a deed of sale he cannot be allowed to succeed on the basis of title by adverse possession (b).

With regard to the nature of the general or other relief which a plaintiff may have, the rule is that if the plaint contains allegations, offering issues on facts that are material, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which those facts will sustain, but he cannot desert the specific relief claimed, and under the claim for general relief ask for specific relief of another description unless the facts and circumstances alleged on the pleadings will, consistently with the rules of the Court, maintain that relief (c).

Where a suit is brought by a reversioner against a Hindu widow (1) for an injunction restraining her from waste (2) for appointment of a receiver, and (3) for further relief, the plaintiff, if he fails in the substantial heads of his claim is not entitled under cover of a request for further relief, to obtain a declaration that he is the next reversionary heir (d).

In a suit by a mortgagee for sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee may relinquish his claim for sale and ask for a simple money decree though such relief is not specifically claimed. This he may do under the claim for general relief. The Court has the power to grant that relief provided the mortgage contains a personal covenant to pay the mortgage debt (e). Similarly the Court may, under this rule award interest on a balance of account from the date of the institution of the suit although interest is not specifically asked for in the plaint (f). But the Court has no power under a claim for general relief to grant to a pro forma plaintiff the relief claimed by the active

7, r. 7. plaintiff, if it turns out that the pro forma plaintiff, and not the active plaintiff, is entitled to the relief claimed. This may be explained by an illustration. B sells his interest in certain property in the possession of C to A. A and B then sue C to recover possession of the property. B makes no claim, and he is joined merely as a formal party to the suit. The Court finds the sale to A void as champertous (Contract Act, s. 23). Such being the case, no decree can be passed in favour of A for possession. Nor should any decree be passed in favour of B awarding possession of the property to him under the claim for general relief, though the Court may find that C is in wrongful possession of the property, and the person really entitled to the property is B. B must bring a separate suit against C to recover possession (g).

Alternative relief—A plaintiff may rely "upon several different rights alternatively, although they may be inconsistent" (h), provided that his pleading is not thereby rendered embarrassing. A pleading is not embarrassing within the meaning of O 6, s. 16, because it contains inconsistent sets of facts (i). Thus a plaintiff may in the same suit claim to have a partnership agreement with the defendant cancelled on the ground that he was induced to enter into it by the fraud of the defendant, or, in the alternative, for a dissolution of partnership and accounts (j). Similarly a plaintiff may claim over the same plot of land a right of ownership, or, in the alternative, a right of easement (k). A plaintiff may in a suit for pre-emption base his claim in the alternative on contract, custom, or Mahomedan law (l). He may also in such a suit set up an alternative claim as owner (m).

In Mahomed Balsh v Hosseini Bibi (n), the Judicial Committee observed that where a plaintiff sues alleging that a deed purporting to be executed by herself is a forgery, the Court ought not to admit the inconsistent issue whether it was executed under undue influence. These observations were explained away in an Allahabad case where it was held that a plaintiff may sue for the cancellation of a bond on the ground that it was a forgery, or, in the alternative, that it was void for want of consideration (o). But quære whether the allegations of forgery and want of consideration are not inconsistent and embarrassing. The High Court of Calcutta has held that a plaintiff may sue to set aside a deed of gift on the ground that she executed it under a fraudulent representation that it was a power of attorney, or, in the alternative, on the ground that it was obtained by undue influence (p).

A plaintiff in a suit for specific performance may claim in the alternative that, if the contract cannot be enforced, it may be rescinded and delivered up to be cancelled (q). A purchaser in a suit for specific performance may claim in the alternative for a return of the earnest money. He may at the hearing give up his prayer for specific performance, and ask for a return of the earnest money, and the Court may direct the defendant to return the earnest money (r). In England in a case under the old practice it was held that a suit to set aside a transaction for fraud, or, in the alternative, for specific performance of a compromise, could not be sustained (s). It seems probable that the same conclusion would still be arrived at on the ground that the claims were inconsistent and embarrassing (t).

Rejection of plaint

11. [S. 54.] The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases:—

- (a) where it does not disclose a cause of action,
- (b) where the relief claimed is undervalued, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so;
- (c) where the relief claimed is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so,
- (d) where the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any law.

Change of law.—Clause (a) is new. See notes below, "Clause (a)"

Chartered High Courts—Clauses (b) and (c) of this rule do not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction. See O 49, r. 3 (1)

"Shall be rejected"—This rule may be applied at any stage of a suit. Therefore, a plaint may be rejected under this rule even after it has been numbered and registered as a suit (e)

The provision contained in this rule that the plaint shall be rejected in the four cases mentioned in the rule is mandatory. In a case, therefore, where the relief claimed was properly valued, but the plaint was written upon paper insufficiently stamped and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper failed to do so, it was held that the plaintiff should not be allowed to amend the plaint by omitting the prayer in respect of which the extra court fee was directed to be paid and that the plaint should be rejected (f)

Rejection of plaint in part—This rule does not justify the rejection of any particular portion of a plaint (g)

Clause (a)—Under the Code of 1852, s. 53, it was not obligatory upon the Court to reject a plaint if it did not disclose a cause of action. Under the present rule the Court is bound to reject a plaint if it does not disclose a cause of action. As to the meaning of cause of action see notes to s. 20, Cause of Action on p. 90 above

Clause (b) : Where the relief claimed is undervalued—Even if the correct valuation would render the Court incompetent to entertain the suit the Court should

Clause (c): Where a plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped—The following points are to be noted in connection with this clause—

2 If the plaintiff fails to supply the requisite stamp paper within the period fixed by the Court, the plaint may be rejected under this rule, even after it has been numbered and registered as a suit. The reason is that the power to reject a plaint under this rule is not exhausted when the plaint has been admitted and registered (j). See notes above. Shall be rejected.

3. A plant is presented on the last day allowed by the law of limitation. It is written upon paper insufficiently stamped. The plaintiff is ordered to supply the requisite stamp paper within a week. The order is complied with on the fourth day after the date of presentation of the plant. This would necessarily be after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the institution of the suit. Can the plant be admitted under these circumstances? Under this Code it can be [see s 149]. Under the Code of 1832 there was a conflict of decisions on the point. It was held by the High Courts of Calcutta (k), Madras (l), and Bombay (m) that the Court had power to admit the plant in the circumstances mentioned above, while it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the Court had no such power (n). The view taken by the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay High Courts was that the Court had power under s 54 of that Code, at any time and without any regard to limitation, to fix a time within which the requisite stamp paper should be supplied, and if the stamp was made good within the period fixed by the Court, the suit was to be deemed to be instituted when the plant was first presented and not when the requisite stamp paper was supplied. On the other hand, the view taken by the Allahabad High Court was that, though the Court had the power to give time to a plaintiff within which to supply the requisite stamp paper, it must be a time within limitation, and that s 54 did not give any power to the Court to extend the period of limitation. This conflict has now been set at rest by the provisions of s 149 of this Code. That section gives effect to the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay decisions. The Allahabad decisions are no longer law (o). S 149 empowers the Court at any stage to allow a plaintiff to make up the deficiency of court fees, and provides in effect that when the deficiency has been made up, the plant is as valid as if it had been properly stamped when presented. It follows from the provisions of s 149 that where a plant written upon paper insufficiently stamped is presented to the Court on the last day allowed by the law of limitation, and the Judge to whom the plant is presented directs extra court fee to be paid, but fixes no time for payment, and the plaintiff pays the extra court fee though it be after the expiration of the period of limitation and the Court accepts it, the plaintiff should be treated as if the full fee had been paid in the first instance, and the suit cannot be held to be barred by limitation (p). In a recent Patna case the plaintiff was given a week's time in which to make up the deficiency. Before the expiry of the week the Court closed for the vacation. The amount in deficit was tendered two days after the re opening of the Court and accepted, and the plaint was registered. The period of limitation for the claim had expired prior to the date of the acceptance of the deficit. It was held that the acceptance of the fee, although tendered late, and the subsequent registration of the plaint, amounted to an exercise by the Court of its discretion to allow the deficiency to be paid on the day when it was tendered, and, therefore, the suit was not barred by limitation (q).

The procedure prescribed by the present rule is not applicable to a case in which an appellate Court acts under s 12 of the Court Fees Act, 1870 (r).

Memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped—See notes (t) to s 149
 “ Appeals and Applications for review of judgment, on p 353 above

Clause (d)—Suit barred by any law—Where a suit appears from statements in the plaint to be barred by the law of limitation, but the plaint is not rejected when presented, the Court may in a proper case allow the plaint to be amended at the hearing (s). Where a suit is brought against the Secretary of State without giving the notice required by s 80, the plaint should be rejected under this clause (t).

Enlargement of time—The Court may enlarge the time fixed under cls (b) and (c). See s 148

Appeal—An order rejecting a plaint is a decree (s 2 (2)), and appealable as such (u).

Where a plaint is rejected under cl (b), the order rejecting the plaint is not appealable when such order is based on a question of valuation pure and simple. But if the order necessarily involves a decision of the category or class under which a suit falls, even though it incidentally decides a question of valuation, the order is appealable (v). These decisions turn on on s 12 of the Court Fees Act, 1870.

Revision—In a suit by A against B, B raises the objection that the relief claimed is under valued. The Court may in such a case either uphold the objection and require A to pay additional court fee, or it may hold that A's valuation is correct. Is this decision open to revision? It has been held by the Chief Court of the Punjab that an order directing a plaintiff to make up the deficiency in Court fee is not open to revision. The reason given is that if the plaintiff feeling that the order is wrong does not comply with it, it will under this rule result in the rejection of his plaint from which he has a right of appeal, an order rejecting a plaint being appealable as a decree (w). In a recent Calcutta case the Court of first instance held on an objection raised by the defendant, that the valuation put by the plaintiff on his claim was correct. The defendant applied for a revision. The High Court held that the decision was not open to revision on the ground

Inadmissibility of document not produced when plaintiff filed

(2) Nothing in this rule applies to documents for cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses, or in to any case set up by the defendant or handed to a merely to refresh his memory.

In what cases leave may be granted under this rule—object of rr 14 and 18 is to provide against false documents being set up after tution of a suit. In those cases, therefore, where there is no doubt of the document at the date of the suit, the Court, should, as a general rule, admit the document in evidence though it was not produced with the plaintiff or entered in the documents annexed to the plaintiff as required by r. 14 (f). But the Court, such a case refuse to receive it in evidence if it is produced at a very late stage proceedings, e.g., ten years after the date of the suit and a day before the was delivered, as was done in the undermentioned case (g).

ORDER VIII.

Written Statement and Set-off.

O. 8, rr. 1, 2. 1. [S. 110] The defendant may, and, if so required by the Court, shall, at or before the hearing or within such time as the Court may permit, present a written statement of his defence.

Written statement

Written statement—The written statement must contain, and contain a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his defence, but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved (O 6 r 2). The defendant may, by his written statement, raise as many distinct and separate and therefore inconsistent defences as he may think proper, provided the statement is not embarrassing (h). A written statement is not embarrassing within the meaning of O 6, r 10, merely because it sets up inconsistent defences (i). But where the defendant relies upon several distinct grounds of defence they must be stated separately and distinctly (r 7 below). See notes to O 8, r 2, "Alternate and inconsistent allegations" on p 441 above.

2 [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 15.] The defendant may, and, if so required by the Court, shall, at or before the hearing or within such time as the Court may permit, present a written statement of his defence.

fee to be paid, but fixes no time for payment and the plaintiff pays the extra court fee though it be after the expiration of the period of limitation and the Court accepts it, the plaint should be treated as if the full fee had been paid in the first instance, and the suit cannot be held to be barred by limitation (p). In a recent Patna case the plaintiff was given a week's time in which to make up the deficiency. Before the expiry of the week the Court closed for the vacation. The amount in deficit was tendered two days after the re-opening of the Court and accepted, and the plaint was registered. The period of limitation for the claim had expired prior to the date of the acceptance of the deficit. It was held that the acceptance of the fee although tendered late, and the subsequent registration of the plaint, amounted to an exercise by the Court of its discretion to allow the deficiency to be paid on the day when it was tendered, and, therefore, the suit was not barred by limitation (q).

The procedure prescribed by the present rule is not applicable to a case in which an appellate Court acts under s. 12 of the Court Fees Act, 1870 (r).

Memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped—See notes to s. 149
* Appeals and Applications for review of judgment on p. 303 above

Clause (d)—Suit barred by any law—Where a suit appears from statements in the plaint to be barred by the law of limitation but the plaint is not rejected when presented the Court may in a proper case allow the plaint to be amended at the hearing (s). Where a suit is brought against the Secretary of State without giving the notice required by s. 86 the plaint should be rejected under this clause (t).

Enlargement of time—The Court may enlarge the time fixed under cl. (b) and (c). See s. 148.

Appeal—An order rejecting a plaint is a decree [s. 2 (2)] and appealable as such (u).

Where a plaint is rejected under cl. (b) the order rejecting the plaint is not appealable when such order is based on a question of valuation pure and simple. But if the order necessarily involves a decision of the category or class under which a suit falls, even though it incidentally decides a question of valuation, the order is appealable (v). These decisions turn on s. 12 of the Court Fees Act 1870.

Revision—In a suit by A against B B raises the objection that the relief claimed is under valued. The Court may in such a case either uphold the objection and require A to pay additional court fee or it may hold that A's valuation is correct. Is this decision open to revision? It has been held by the Chief Court of the Punjab that an order directing a plaintiff to make up the deficiency in Court fees is not open to revision. The reason given is that if the plaintiff feeling that the order is wrong does not comply with it it will under this rule result in the rejection of his plaint from which he has a right of appeal. An order rejecting a plaint being appealable as a decree (w). In a recent Calcutta case the Court of first instance held on an objection raised by the defendant, that the valuation put by the plaintiff on his claim was correct. The defendant applied for a revision. The High Court held that the decision was not open to revision on the ground that the case did not fall under any of the three clauses of s 115, and on the further ground that the decision may be challenged in appeal from the final decree (x). The High Court of Patna has held that an order demanding an additional court fee involving the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit, is open to revision. The plaintiff is not bound to wait until his plaint is rejected for non payment of the additional court-fee (y)

Review.—An order rejecting a plaint under cl (c) of this section is open to review (z). So also, in a proper case, an order rejecting a plaint under cl (b) of the section (a)

12. [S. 55] Where a plaint is rejected the Judge shall record an order to that effect with the reasons for such order.

Procedure on rejecting plaint

Procedure on rejecting memorandum of appeal.—The same procedure is to be followed when a memorandum of appeal is rejected (b)

13. [S. 56.] The rejection of the plaint on any of the grounds hereinbefore mentioned shall not of its own force preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action.

Where rejection of plaint does not preclude present ation of fresh plaint

Documents relied on in plaint.

14. [S. 59.] (1) Where a plaintiff sues upon a document in his possession or power, he shall produce it in Court when the plaint is presented, and shall at the same time deliver the document or a copy thereof to be filed with the plaint

Production of document
on which plaintiff sues

(2) Where he relies on any other documents (whether in his possession or power or not) as evidence in support of his claim, he shall enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the plaint.

List of other documents

Production of documents relied upon.—A horoscope does not require to be entered in the list of documents mentioned in sub r (2). The reason is that it is not a document to be relied upon as a probative document in itself, but it is a record made by the maker of the horoscope to which he is entitled to refer for the purpose of refreshing his memory in the witness box (c)

Failure to produce documents.—The penalty for not producing the documents referred to in this rule is that prescribed in r 18 below, and not the rejection of the plaint (d)

Loss of document after production—Where a promissory note sued upon was produced and delivered to the Court as required by this rule, and it subsequently disappeared from the file, it was held by the Judicial Committee that the plaintiff was entitled to give secondary evidence under s 65 (2) of the Evidence Act, 1872, without showing how it disappeared (c)

15. [S. 60.] Where any such document is not in the possession or power of the plaintiff, he shall, if possible, state in whose possession or power it is

Statement in case of documents not in his possession or power

16. [S. 61.] Where the suit is founded upon a negotiable instrument, and it is proved that the instrument is lost, and an indemnity is given by the plaintiff, to the satisfaction of the Court, against the claims of any other person upon such instrument, the Court may pass such decree as it would have passed if the plaintiff had produced the instrument in Court when the plaint was presented, and had at the same time delivered a copy of the instrument to be filed with the plaint

Suits on lost negotiable instruments

17. [S. 62.] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1891, where the document on which the plaintiff sues is an entry in a shop-book or other account in his possession or power, the plaintiff shall produce the book or account at the time of filing the plaint, together with a copy of the entry on which he relies

Production of shop book

(2) The Court, or such officer as it appoints in this behalf, shall forthwith mark the document for the purpose of identification, and after examining and comparing the copy with the original, shall, if it is found correct, certify it to be so, and return the book to the plaintiff and cause the copy to be filed

Original entry to be marked and returned

Bankers Books Evidence Act 18 of 1891—The Bankers Books Evidence Act provides a special mode of proof of entries in bankers books by dispensing with the production of the books. S 4 of the Act provides that a certified copy of any entry in a banker's book is to be received as prima facie evidence of the existence of such entry, and that it should be admitted as evidence of the matter contained therein to the same extent as the original entry

O. 7, r. 18. 18. [S. 63.] (1) A document which ought to be produced in Court by the plaintiff when the plaint is presented, or to be entered in the list to be added or annexed to the plaint, and which is not produced or entered accordingly, shall not, without the leave of the Court, be received in evidence on his behalf at the hearing of the suit

Inadmissibility of document not produced when plaint filed

(2) Nothing in this rule applies to documents produced for cross examination of the defendant's witnesses, or in answer to any case set up by the defendant or handed to a witness merely to refresh his memory.

In what cases leave may be granted under this rule—The object of rr 14 and 18 is to provide against false documents being set up after the institution of a suit. In those cases therefore where there is no doubt of the existence of a document at the date of the suit, the Court, should, as a general rule, admit the document in evidence though it was not produced with the plaint or entered in the list of documents annexed to the plaint as required by r 14 (f). But the Court may even in such a case refuse to receive it in evidence if it is produced at a very late stage of the proceedings, e.g. ten years after the date of the suit and a day before the judgment was delivered, as was done in the undermentioned case (g)

ORDER VIII

Written Statement and Set-off

O. 8, r. 1, 2. 1. [S. 110] The defendant may, and, if so required by the Court, shall, at or before the first hearing or within such time as the Court may permit, present a written statement of his defence

Written statement

Written statement—The written statement must contain, and contain only a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his defence but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved (O 8 r 2). A defendant may by his written statement, raise as many distinct and separate and therefore inconsistent, defences as he may think proper, provided the pleading is not embarrassing (h). A written statement is not embarrassing within the meaning of O 8 r 10 merely because it sets up inconsistent defences (i). But where the defendant relies up on several distinct grounds of defence they must be stated separately and distinctly (r 7 below). See notes to O 8 r 11. Alternate and inconsistent allegations - on p 441 above

2 [New R S. C., O 19, r. 15] The defendant must raise by his pleading all matters which show the suit not to be maintainable, or that the transaction is either void or void

New facts must be specially pleaded able in point of law, and all such grounds of defence as, if not raised, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the plaint, as, for instance, fraud, limitation, release, payment, performance, or facts showing illegality.

Fraud—See notes to O 6, r 4, "Fraud and coercion" on p 443 above

Facts showing illegality—When a plaintiff sues upon a bond, and the defence is that there was no consideration, the Court should not entertain the plea that the consideration was unlawful, e g, stifling a criminal prosecution if the point was raised for the first time in the argument of counsel at the close of the hearing. The illegality of the consideration must be specifically pleaded (j) See notes to O 6, r 8, on p 450 above

Limitation—In India, a suit instituted after the expiry of the period of limitation shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence. Limitation Act 1908, s 3 In England limitation must be specifically set up as a defence

3 [New RSC, O 19, r 17] It shall not be sufficient for a defendant in his written statement to deny generally the grounds alleged by the plaintiff, but the defendant must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth, except damages

"Deal specifically with each allegation of fact"—The defendant must take each fact which is alleged against him separately, and say that he admits it or denies it, or does not admit it. It is not merely denial which is meant but the rule covers non admission for [the defendant] is to deal specifically with every allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth (l). Every allegation of fact in the plaint will be taken to be admitted if it is not denied specifically or by necessary implication or stated to be not admitted (r 5)

A defendant ought not to deny by his written statement plain and acknowledged facts which it is neither to his interest nor in his power to disprove (l) nor should he plead to any matter which is not alleged against him (m) See notes to O 6 r 2, Facts not yet material to a case on p 439 above

"Except damages"—It is not necessary for a defendant in a suit for damages, to deny specifically the damages. It is quite sufficient if he pleads generally to the damages (n) See notes to O 6 r 2 Matters affecting damages on p 435 above

4 [New RSC, O 19, r 21] Where a defendant denies an allegation of fact in the plaint, he must not do so evasively but answer the point of substance. Thus, if it is alleged that he received

 . 4. 5. he received that particular amount, but he must deny that he received that sum or any part thereof or else set out how much he received And if an allegation is made with divers circumstances, it shall not be sufficient to deny it along with those circumstances

Evasive denial—Where the plaintiff sets up an agreement and the defendant denies that the terms of the agreement between himself and the plaintiff were definitely agreed upon as alleged the denial is evasive 'He [defendant] is bound to deny that any agreement or any terms of arrangement were ever come to if that is what he means if he does not mean that he should say that there were no terms of arrangement come to except the following terms and then state what the terms were, otherwise there is no specific denial at all (o) Similarly, where the plaintiff alleges that 'the defendant offered to the plaintiff a agent a bribe of Rs 500 on 17th July 1908, at the defendant's office it is an evasive traverse for the defendant to plead 'the defendant did not offer to the plaintiff a agent a bribe of Rs 500 on 17th July 1908, at his office, for the defendant might have offered any other sum on another day and in another place Here the point of substance is that a bribe was offered The details as to the amount time and place are only circumstances The defendant should plead that he never offered a bribe of Rs 500 or any other sum (p) Where a denial is evasive leave to amend may be given under O 6, r 17, unless the Court is satisfied that the defendant was acting maia fide (q)

5 [New RSC O 19, r 13] Every allegation of fact specific denial in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted except as against a person under disability

Provided that the Court may in its discretion require any fact so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission

Admissions of fact in pleadings—The first paragraph of this rule states what amounts to admissions of fact in a pleading. Rule 2 requires that the defendant must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth. The present rule provides that every allegation of fact in the plaint if not denied in the written statement shall be taken to be admitted by the defendant (r). In Putter v Tregent (s) the statement of claim stated (paragraphs 1, 2 and 3) the original mortgage and the assignment by the mortgagees to the plaintiff in which the mortgagor joined (paragraphs 4 and 5) the charges created by the mortgagees subsequent to the assignment to the plaintiff of the first mortgage and (paragraph 6) the amount of principal money with interest due to the plaintiff. By their statement of defence the defendants stated that they did not admit the correctness of the statements set forth in paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 6 of the plaintiff's statement of claim, and required proof thereof. Defendant, the mortgagor, admitted that the subsequent charges were made as stated in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the statement of claim. Upon a motion for judgment as upon admission of facts in the pleadings, it was held that there was no sufficient denial of the facts alleged by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for foreclosure. Bacon, V C, said: "The defendants did not admit the correctness of the statements contained in the statement of claim, but they ought to state in what respect they disputed them." Similarly, where a defendant simply "puts the plaintiff to proof of the several allegations in the plaint," he will be deemed to have admitted the acts alleged in the plaint (t). Where in a suit for the recovery of money the plaintiff relies in his plaint upon a letter written by the defendant to save the bar of limitation, and all that the defendant says in his written statement as to the letter is, "the suit is not saved by the letter put in from the bar of limitation," the letter must be taken as admitted and it need not be proved by the plaintiff (u). But where in a suit by the reversioners of a deceased Hindu to recover possession of properties alienated by the widow of the deceased, the defendants pleaded that they did not admit that the widow died on the date stated in the plaint and further stated that the suit was barred by limitation, and an issue was framed as to the date of the widow's death, it was held that there was no admission by the defendants of the date of the widow's death, merely because they did not state in their written statement the date on which according to their case the widow died (v).

A plaintiff who claims a decree must prove all the material facts on which he relies in support of his claim. The importance of the present rule lies in this that, since facts that have been admitted need not be proved, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove facts which have been expressly admitted by the defendant or which must be taken to have been admitted by him within the meaning of this rule (see Evidence Act 1872, s. 58). The admission itself being a proof, no other proof is necessary. In the case, however, of facts which may be taken to be admitted by the defendant within the meaning of this rule, the Court may in its discretion require any facts so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission. That is to say, the Court may require the plaintiff to adduce such proof of the fact as it would have been necessary for him to adduce if no such admission had been made. This power which has been conferred upon the Court by the proviso to the rule is not new. The matter, it will be seen, is one of evidence, and a similar power is contained in the Indian Evidence Act I of 1872. The proviso to the rule, in fact, is a reproduction of the proviso to section 58 of the Evidence Act. That section runs as follows:—

No fact need be proved in any proceeding which the parties thereto or their agents agree to admit at the hearing, or which, before the hearing, they agree to admit by any writing under their hands, or which by any rule of pleading in force at the time they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings. Provided that the Court may in its discretion, require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions.

The proviso to section 58 as well as the proviso to the present rule indicates the intention of the Legislature that pleadings in India ought not to be construed with the same strictness as in England. Upon this principle the defendant has been allowed under special circumstances to traverse at the hearing allegations in the plaint which he had omitted to traverse in his written statement (w). The rule of pleadings in England

O. 8, is very stringent According to that rule a defendant who omits to traverse in his defence any allegation of fact in the statement of claim is not allowed to traverse that fact at the hearing The fact will be taken to be admitted by him, and the Court has no power to require the plaintiff to prove it in any case Strike out the proviso to the present rule, and you have the rule of English law In fact, the first paragraph of this rule is a reproduction of O 19, r. 13, of the English Rules made under the Judicature Acts The proviso has been added to modify the rigour of that rule

But though pleadings in India are not to be construed as strictly as in England, neither party will be allowed to set up at the hearing an entirely new and inconsistent case The plaintiff must be held to the state of facts alleged in his plaint or consistent therewith (x) Similarly, the defendant must be held to the state of facts alleged in his written statement or consistent therewith (y)

Omission to file written statement—This rule applies only where a pleading has been put in by the defendant Omission to file a written statement does not amount to an admission of the facts stated in the plaint (z)

6 [S III] (1) Where in a suit for the recovery of money the defendant claims to set off against the plaintiff's demand any ascertained sum of money legally recoverable by him from the plaintiff, not exceeding the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, and both parties fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit, the defendant may, at the first hearing of the suit, but not afterwards unless permitted by the Court, present a written statement containing the particulars of the debt sought to be set off.

(2) The written statement shall have the same effect as a plaint in a cross-suit so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment in respect both of the original claim and of the set-off: but this shall not affect the lien, upon the amount decreed, of any pleader in respect of the costs payable to him under the decree.

(3) The rules relating to a written statement by a defendant apply to a written statement in answer to a claim of set-off.

Changes in the rule—Sub rule (3) is new. See r 9 below

Conditions of applicability of the rule—A defendant may claim a set off under this rule if the following conditions are satisfied, but not otherwise —

I The suit must be one for the recovery of money

II As regards the amount claimed to be set off—

(a) it must be an ascertained sum of money [see ill (c), (d), and (e) above]

(b) such sum must be legally recoverable,

(c) it must be recoverable by the defendant or by all the defendants if more than one [see ill (g)],

(d) it must be recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff or all the plaintiffs if more than one [see ill (f)],

(e) it must not exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought, and

(f) both parties must fill, in the defendant's claim to set off, the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit [see ill (a), (b), and (h)]

The suit must be one for the recovery of money—In Van Karaj v Ko Hlane (a), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that it was doubtful whether a suit for an account was a suit for money. In a subsequent Allahabad case, it was held that a suit for a dissolution of partnership and for partnership accounts with a prayer that such balance as may be found due to the plaintiff upon taking the partnership accounts may be paid to him was a suit for money, and that a plea of set off might therefore be raised by the defendant in such suit (b)

The amount claimed to be set off must be "legally" recoverable—The amount claimed by way of set off under this rule must be "legally recoverable" It follows from this that if the defendant's claim is barred by the law of limitation at the date of the suit, it cannot be set up by way of set off under this rule (h) But this rule relates only to a legal set off The question arises whether a claim by way of equitable set off can be allowed if it is barred by limitation at the date of the suit It has been laid down that in cases where the plaintiff's claim and the defendant's claim relate both to the same estate or there is a fiduciary relationship between the parties, the defendant's claim to set off, though barred by limitation at the date of the suit may be entertained as an equitable set off It has thus been held that in a suit by an heir against his co-heirs for his one sixth share of the estate of the deceased, the latter are entitled to set off one sixth of the Government revenue paid by them in respect of the estate though a separate suit by them to recover from the plaintiff the proportionate part of the revenue payable by him would be barred by limitation (i) Similarly in mortgage suits sums are allowed to be set off in taking accounts of the mortgage even though barred by limitation (j) Upon the same principle it has been held that a trustee in possession of the trust estate is entitled to set up his right to be indemnified out of the trust estate when called upon for an account although his right to sue for the amount claimed by him by way of indemnity is barred by limitation (k) In a recent case (l) the High Court of Madras held that

8, r. 6. in a suit by a lessor for rent, it is not open to the lessee to set up by way of equitable set off an unliquidated claim for damages which was barred at the date of the suit. Seshagiri Ayyar, J., said "An exception to this rule [namely, that a time barred claim cannot be pleaded by way of set off] has been recognized in some cases. Where there is a fiduciary relationship between the parties as in the case of trustee and cestus que trust and there is accountability, even barred claims may be taken into account in passing the final accounts. This exception has been extended in some of the decided cases in India to mortgages, presumably on the ground that there is accountability between the parties. See Parasurama Pattar v Venkatachallam Pattar (m), Chidambara Mudaliar v Krishna swami Pillai (n), and Ramdhari Singh v Permanund Singh (o). It is not necessary to say now whether these cases have been rightly decided. I see no reason for extending the exception to suits between a lessor and a lessee."

In a Madras case (p) an agent sued his principal to recover money that might be found due to him on the taking of agency accounts. The defendant pleaded in his written statement that money would be found due to him on taking accounts and he asked for a decree for such sum as might be found due to him. The defendant's claim was not barred at the date of the suit, but it was barred at the date of the written statement. It was held that the defendant's claim should be allowed as an equitable set off to the extent of the plaintiff's claim, but that the defendant was not entitled to a decree for the balance found due to him as his claim was barred at the date of the written statement. To pass a decree for the balance would be, it was said, to enable the defendant to evade the law of limitation. The same view has been taken by the High Court of Bombay (q). In an Allahabad case (r) Oldfield, J., expressed the opinion that the set off, if not barred at the date of the suit, should be allowed in full, and not merely to the extent of the plaintiff's claim, even if it was barred at the date of the written statement. See notes to O 20, r 19, 'Decree in case of set off'."

Costs awarded to a tenant in a suit brought against him by the benamidar of the landlord cannot be set off by the tenant in a subsequent suit for rent brought against him by the landlord. The costs having been awarded against the benamidar, they are not legally recoverable from the landlord (s).

A separate debt cannot be set off against a joint and several debt.—Thus in ill (g), B cannot set off the debt due to him alone by A, for it is a separate debt, while the suit is to recover a joint and several debt. It has similarly been held that in a suit by a company against its directors no individual director is entitled to set off the amount due to him alone from the company (t).

The amount claimed to be set off must not exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought.—The valuation of a set off for the purpose of jurisdiction must be taken as relating to the whole amount pleaded as a set off, and without reference to any portion of the plaintiff's claim admitted by the defendant. I sues B in a Presidency Small Cause Court for Rs 1,000. B claims to set off a sum of Rs 2,700, and claims judgment for Rs 1,700, after giving I credit for Rs 1,000, admitted by B to be due to I. The Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try the claim as to set off, the value of the amount claimed as set off being above Rs 2,000 (u).

A plea of payment is distinct from a plea of set off. A sues B to recover Rs 1,500 in a Court of which the pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs 2,000. B alleges that he has paid Rs 1,000 to A on account, and admits his liability for the balance of Rs 500, but he claims a set off of Rs 1,700 being the amount due on a promissory note passed to him by A, and asks for a decree for Rs 1,200. The amount claimed to be set off is not Rs 1,000 plus Rs 1,700 = Rs 2,700, but Rs 1,700 only, and it is therefore within the jurisdiction of the Court (v).

Not only the amount, but also the nature of the set off, must be within the cognizance of the Court in which the suit is brought. Hence a Court cannot entertain a claim to a set off unless such claim, if made the subject of a suit, would fall within its jurisdiction (w).

Same character.—Ills (a) and (b) are cases in which the parties do not fill the same character (x).

A suit is brought by a Hindu son as the heir and representative of his father to recover from B a debt due by B to the father. B claims to set off a debt due to him by A's father. B may do so, for both the parties fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit (y). Similarly in a suit by A against B for an account for goods supplied by A to B, B may claim a set off of the amount due to him from A in respect of wages as A's gumasta (z).

Court-fee.—A written statement containing a claim of set off must be regarded as a plaint in regard to such set off, and must be stamped accordingly (a).

Set-off in winding up proceedings.—Though a director has no right to set off a debt due to him from the company against a claim made against him by the matured at the date of the suit, though it had not matured at the date of the order for winding up the company (d).

Set-off in insolvency.—See Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, s. 47 (e) and Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, s. 30.

Solicitor's lien for costs.—Before the year 1832 the Courts in England had a discretionary power as regards set off and a discretion as to the terms upon which they would allow it (f). This discretion was taken away under the General Orders of 1852 and the General Rules of 1853. Rule 93 of the General Rules of 1832 was in these words: "No set off of damages or costs between parties shall be allowed to the prejudice of the attorney's lien for costs in the particular suit against which the set-off is sought, provided nevertheless that interlocutory costs in the same suit, awarded to the adverse party,

r. 6. may be deducted " This rule was reproduced in identical terms in 1853. That state of things continued until the Judicature Act, 1873, came into force. O 45, r 14, made under that Act, provides exactly the contrary of that which had been the previous rule. The previous rule said that there should be no set off allowed, O 45, r 14, says that a set off may be allowed. The result is that in England the Courts under O 45, r 14, exercise now in matters of set off the discretion which was taken away by the General Rules of 1852 (g)

Sec 111 of the Code of 1877 provided that the Court may pronounce a final judgment in the same suit both on the original and on the cross claim, but it shall not off set the lien upon the amount decreed of any pleader in respect of the costs payable to him under the decree. This provision was reproduced in sec 111 of the Code of 1882, and it is reproduced in the present rule also. It is clear from the language of this rule that the Courts of this country have no discretion in the matter of a solicitor's lien in cases comprised within this rule.

A solicitor has at common law a lien for his costs over property recovered or preserved or the proceeds of any judgments obtained for the client by his exertions (h). The lien attaches to property of every description, such as, for instance, money payable to the client under a judgment including costs ordered to be paid to the client, or the proceeds of an execution in the hands of a Sheriff, money paid into Court, whether as security for costs or by way of defence, or otherwise, and money received by way of compromise [see Halsbury, vol 20, sec 1343, p 821]. Where there are assets of a partnership in the hands of a receiver appointed in a partnership suit, the solicitors engaged in that suit are entitled to a lien on those assets in priority to the creditors of the partnership.

It is to be borne in mind that the solicitor's lien in the High Courts of India is governed exclusively by the law as had existed in English Courts before the passing of 23 and 24 Vict ch 127 by which that lien was very much extended (i). At common law a solicitor had no lien on realty. Lien on realty was first conferred by the above statute. The High Court of Calcutta has held that in India an attorney is entitled to a lien on immovable property recovered for his client in the suit (j).

A solicitor's lien for his costs extends to all the moneys of his client which are lying in Court. It makes no difference that the moneys are brought into Court by attachment at the instance of a decree holder. The lien, however, does not exist when moneys are once distributed to the creditors of the client. So long as the moneys are in Court, the Court has power to direct payment to the solicitor of his costs out of the moneys (k). A obtains a decree against B. C who has obtained a decree against A attaches the amount of the decree obtained by A against B in B's hands. A's attorney is entitled to a lien for his costs on the sum so attached, but the only order that can be made in such a case is an order to the defendant not to pay the sum attached to any one without notice to the attorney (l).

Parties to an action may compromise without the intervention of solicitor, but there must be no intention to cheat the solicitor of his charges, and the Court will exercise its equitable interference to enable a solicitor to proceed in the action for his costs, though no notice of his lien has been given, in cases where it is made out that there is an intention to cheat the solicitor, but unless there has been notice or collusion, the solicitor, if the client has compromised, can only look to his client for his costs (m)

Although the High Courts possess a summary jurisdiction to enforce a solicitor's lien upon the fruits of his exertion, it will not do so when the circumstances would make it unfair to any of the parties or compel the Court to go into complicated questions of fact, especially when charges of fraud or collusion are made, or where a solicitor has deliberately taken additional fresh security for the purpose of securing his costs and has not relied on his lien under the summary jurisdiction. In such a case the Court will refer the solicitor to a regular suit (n)

On an application by a solicitor made in a suit in which costs have been awarded to his client against the opposite party, the Court has jurisdiction to enforce, in a proper case, the solicitor's lien by making a direct order for payment to the solicitor by the opposite party of such costs. Thus where the original client was dead and it appeared that his legal representatives were not men of substance and that they were unable to pay, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that it was a proper case in which the Court in the exercise of its discretion would make a direct order for payment of such costs to the solicitor by the opposite party (o)

A solicitor in England has no right of retainer in moneys realised by him in one cause for his dues in other causes conducted by him. An attorney in India has no larger rights (p)

By a decree passed in a suit for redemption of a mortgage brought by A against B, A is directed to pay the mortgage debt to B, but B is directed to pay to A the costs of the suit. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the suit being one for redemption B's attorney is not entitled to a lien for his costs on the whole of the mortgage money, but to the mortgage money less the costs payable by B to A, which costs A is entitled to set off against the mortgage money (q). See O 20, r 19, and O 21, r 10

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where A obtains a decree against B for Rs 1,451, and B subsequently obtains a decree against A for Rs 1,000, A is entitled to have satisfaction of B's decree entered, notwithstanding the lien of B's attorney for his costs. Reliance was placed in the judgment on the fact that B's attorney had not stated that there was no chance of recovering his costs from his client [B] and that the decree which B had against A was the only property out of which his claim could be satisfied (r). There is no reference in the judgment to the provisions of O 8, r 6 (2)

Appeal—Unless the whole suit is disposed of, an appeal does not lie from an order disposing of a defendant's claim as to set off made under this rule, though the question as to that claim may have been tried as a preliminary issue. Such an order is not a preliminary decree. See O 20, r 19, which shows that there should be only one decree drawn up in a suit in which a set off is claimed (s)

ORDER IX

rr.Appearance of Parties and Consequence of Non appearance.

1. [S 96] On the day fixed in the summons for the defendant to appear and answer, the parties shall be in attendance at the Court-house in person or by their respective pleaders, and the suit shall then be heard unless the hearing is adjourned to a future day fixed by the Court

Parties to appear on day fixed in summons for defendant to appear and answer

2. [S 97] Where on the day so fixed it is found that the summons has not been served upon the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the Court-fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed.

Dismissal of suit where summons not served in consequence of plaintiff's failure to pay costs

Provided that no such order shall be made although the summons has not been served upon the defendant, if on the day fixed for him to appear and answer he attends in person or by agent when he is allowed to appear by agent.

Defendant—The expression 'defendant' in this rule does not include the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant (w)

Appeal—The order or dismissal under this rule is a form of dismissal for default. It is not a decree [s 2 (2)] and no appeal lies from it. The plaintiff's remedy is under r 4 of this Order (x)

Revision—The Court has no power under this rule to dismiss the suit in a case where the plaintiff has paid the requisite Court fee for the service of the summons, but the office does not issue the summons in time. If the Court dismisses the suit in such a case the High Court has power to set aside the order in revision (y)

- 3 [S. 98] Where neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed.

Where neither party appears suit to be dismissed

Where neither party appears—4 sues B and C. 4 and C do not appear when the suit is called on for hearing but B appears. The Court makes an order dismissing the suit. As between 4 and B the order is one under r 8, so as to attract the applicability of r 9. But as between 4 and C, the order is one under the present rule so that r 4 applies and not r 9 ()

If the plaintiff appears on the date fixed for the hearing but the defendant does not appear, and the suit is dismissed owing to failure on the part of the plaintiff to adduce evidence in support of his claim, the dismissal is on the merits and not under this rule (a)

"May make an order that the suit be dismissed"—These words have been substituted for the words "the suit shall be dismissed" [Code of 1882 s 98] to make it clear that the dismissal under this rule is not a decree, but an order See s 2 (2)

4 [S 99.] Where a suit is dismissed under rule 2 or rule 3, the plaintiff may (subject to the law of limitation) bring a fresh suit, or he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his not paying the Court-fee and postal charges (if any) required within the time fixed before the issue of the summons, or for his non-appearance, as the case may be the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit

Plaintiff may bring fresh suit or Court may restore suit to file

Sufficient excuse for plaintiff's non-appearance—A bona fide mistake which is not unreasonable is a sufficient excuse within the meaning of this rule (b)

Whether this rule applies to proceedings in execution—See notes to s 9 under the same head on p 502 below

5 [S, 99A] (1) Where, after a summons has been issued to the defendant, or to one of several defendants, and returned unserved, the plaintiff fails, for a period of three months from the date of the return made to the Court by the officer ordinarily certifying to the Court returns made by the serving officers, to apply for the issue of a fresh summons the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed as against such defendant, unless the plaintiff has within the said period satisfied the Court that—

Ex parte decree.—If the defendant does not appear, and it is proved that the summons was duly served upon him, the Court may proceed ex parte. If the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case, the Court may pass a decree for the plaintiff. If the plaintiff fails to make out a prima facie case, the Court may dismiss the plaintiff's suit. "Every Judge in dealing with an ex parte case should take good care to see that the plaintiff's case is at least prima facie proved." The mere absence of the defendant does not of itself justify the presumption that the plaintiff's case is true (d) The Court has no jurisdiction to pass an ex parte decree without any evidence being given by or on behalf of the plaintiff (e) It is to be noted that the Court has no power to pass an ex parte decree before the returnable date mentioned in the summons (f)

Ex parte decree for amount in excess of sum actually due.—If the plaintiff obtains an ex parte decree for a sum in excess of that which is due to him, the defendant is entitled ex debito justitiae to have such decree set aside (ff), except where the error was due to an accidental slip within the meaning of s. 152 in which case the Court may on the plaintiff's application allow the decree to be amended by reducing it to the proper amount (fff)

"Appears"—As to the meaning of the word "appears," see notes to r. 9, "Appearance," on p. 498 below

Remedies open to a defendant in the case of an ex parte decree—See s. 13 and notes, "Remedies in case of ex parte decree," on p. 504 below.

7. [S 101] Where the Court has adjourned the hearing of the suit ex parte, and the defendant, at or before such hearing, appears and assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may, upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise, be heard in answer to the suit as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance.

This rule was applied in the undermentioned case (g)

8 [S 102.] Where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed unless the defendant admits the claim, or part thereof, in which case the Court shall pass a decree against the defendant upon such admission, and, where part only of the claim has been admitted, shall dismiss the suit so far as it relates to the remainder

Non appearance of parties—If neither party appears on the day fixed for the hearing of the suit the procedure laid down in r 3 is to be followed. If the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear the procedure laid down in r 6 is to be followed. If the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear, the procedure laid down in the present rule is to be followed. All that a defendant is entitled to under this rule is to have the plaintiff's suit dismissed. He is not entitled to call any evidence even though it be to disprove charges of fraud or the like that may have been made against him in the plaint (A)

If the plaintiff does not appear—See notes to r 9, Appearance on p 498 below. This rule does not apply to the case of non appearance by reason of death. Where a sole plaintiff dies before the hearing of a suit and the suit is dismissed for non-appearance under this rule, the fact of his death not being known to the Court, there is inherent jurisdiction in the Court under s 151 to set aside the dismissal and thus rectify the mistake which has been inadvertently made. It is then for the legal representative of the plaintiff to apply to be brought on the record under O 22 r 3 (i)

More plaintiffs than one—This rule provides for the case where a single plaintiff or all the plaintiffs if there are more than one, do not appear. Rule 10 provides for a case where there are more plaintiffs than one and one or more of them appear and others do not appear (j)

Remedies in case of dismissal under r. 8—See notes to r 9 on p 498 below

* The Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed.—These words have been substituted for the words 'the Court shall dismiss the suit' [Code of 1882 s 102]. An order of dismissal under this rule for default of plaintiff's appearance is not a decree and is not therefore appealable. See s 2 (2) (b) and notes. Order of dismissal for default on p 8 above

9. [S 103] (1) Where a suit is wholly or partly dismissed under rule 8, the plaintiff shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. But he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non appearance when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit

(2) No order shall be made under this rule unless notice of the application has been served on the opposite party.

Remedies in case of dismissal under r. 8.—A plaintiff, whose suit is dismissed under r. 8 for default of appearance on the day fixed for the hearing, cannot appeal from the order of dismissal, as such an order is not a decree [s. 2, cl. (2), sub cl. (b)], but he may—

(1) apply for a review of the order under O 47, r. 1 (1). But the High Court of Bombay (12) has held that since the decision of the Privy Council in Chajju Ram v. Neli (13) a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed under r. 8 has no remedy by way of review. Or he may

(2) apply under this rule for an order to set aside the order of dismissal.

He is entitled to apply for a review without a previous application to set aside the dismissal under this rule (14). The period of limitation for an application for a review of the order is 10 days from the date of the order in the case of an order made by the Provincial Court of Small Causes, 20 days from the date of the order in the case of an order made by any of the chartered High Courts in the exercise of its original jurisdiction and 90 days from the date of the order in other cases (1). The period of limitation for an application under this section is 30 days from the date of the dismissal of the suit (m).

The first remedy is open to any plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed, whatever the ground of dismissal may be, whether it is dismissed for default of appearance at the hearing or on the merits after a hearing. But the second remedy, that is, the remedy provided by this rule, can only be availed of by a plaintiff who does not appear at the hearing and the suit is dismissed for default of appearance under r. 8 above. The remedy given by this rule is not open to a plaintiff whose suit is dismissed on any ground other than default of appearance. Hence if a plaintiff's suit is dismissed on his failure to establish his case by reason of non attendance of his witnesses (n) or for want of evidence (o) the dismissal is not one under r. 8, and he cannot therefore avail himself of the remedy provided by this rule.

There is a conflict of decisions whether if a defendant does not apply under this rule within the 30 days allowed by law, he is entitled to apply for a review under O 47, r. 1 after the expiration of that period. The Patna High Court has held (p), following an earlier decision of the Calcutta High Court (q), that he is not, on the other hand, the Calcutta High Court has held in a latter case that he is (r). The ground of the Patna decision is that to allow a review in such a case would be an evasion of the rule of limitation.

"Appearance"—A plaintiff or a defendant will be deemed to have 'appeared' on the day fixed for the hearing of the suit, if he appears—

(1) in person, or

(2) by a pleader either himself duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or accompanied by some person able to answer such questions [O 5, r. 1, sub r. (2)].

First, as regards Appearance of a party in person—The mere presence of a party in Court at the hearing is sufficient to constitute "appearance" within the meaning of this Order. It does not matter for what purpose he appears or what action he takes on the appearance. A plaintiff appearing and applying for an adjournment on the ground that his witnesses are not present will be deemed to have 'appeared'. If the application is refused, and the suit is dismissed owing to his inability to establish his case in the absence of witnesses, the dismissal is not one under r 8, for the plaintiff did appear, and he cannot therefore avail himself of the provisions of this rule (*). Similarly a defendant appearing and applying for an adjournment on the ground that he had no time to prepare his case, will be deemed to have "appeared". If the application is refused, and a decree is passed against him owing to his unpreparedness to defend the suit, the decree is not ex parte under r 6, for he did appear, and he cannot therefore avail himself of the provisions of r 13 below (†).

Next, as regards Appearance of a party by a pleader—Different considerations arise when a party is represented by a pleader. Appearance by a pleader within the meaning of this Order does not, like appearance by a party in person, mean mere presence in Court: it means appearance by a pleader "duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit" or by a pleader "accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions" [O 5, r 1]. Hence a party cannot be said to "appear" by a pleader, if the pleader appears at the hearing and states that though he has filed his vakalatnama, he has not received any instructions from his client with regard to the case, and that he is therefore unable to go on with the suit (u). Similarly, a party cannot be said to "appear" by a pleader if the pleader has no instructions other than to apply for an adjournment, and, on the adjournment being refused, withdraws from the suit, stating that he has no further instructions to go on with the case (v). In neither case can it be said that the party appeared by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit. But what if the party himself is also present in person in Court at the time? According to the Madras (u), and Patna (x) High Courts, it makes no difference that the party himself is present in Court and he cannot be deemed to have "appeared". According to the Bombay High Court, he must be deemed to have "appeared," the reason given being that if the pleader is not duly instructed to answer material questions, the Court may, under O 10, r 1, ask the party questions relating to the suit and it may examine his witnesses (y). A different view, however, was taken in a subsequent Bombay case where it was held that even if a party is present in person, he cannot be said to have "appeared" if he is accompanied by a pleader who is not "duly instructed" within the meaning of O 5, r 1 (z).

A pleader appears at the hearing on behalf of a plaintiff, and applies for an adjournment on the ground that he had no time to prepare himself with the case or on the ground that the papers being left with his senior he could not proceed with the case. The application is refused, and the pleader being unable to go on with the case, the suit is dismissed. Can it be said under these circumstances that the plaintiff appeared by a pleader? It has been held in the undermentioned cases that the plaintiff must be held to have appeared by a pleader, and that the order of dismissal could not therefore be said to be one made under r 8 so as to entitle the plaintiff to apply under this rule (a).

9, r. 9. "Suit"—An application under s 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1835, is not a 'suit' within the meaning of r 8 or this rule (b)

Fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action—If the plaintiff fails to appear, and the suit is in consequence dismissed under r 8, the dismissal does not operate as res judicata (c). But the plaintiff will be precluded in such a case by the provisions of this rule, from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. Thus if A sues B for damages for breach of a contract, and the suit is dismissed for default of A's appearance, A cannot bring a fresh suit to recover damages for breach of the same contract. A's only remedy in such a case is to apply for a review, or to apply under this rule for an order to set aside the dismissal. But if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit the subsequent suit will not be barred under this rule. Thus the dismissal for default of a suit by a reversioner against a Hindu widow for an injunction to restrain her from making a gift of immoveable property inherited by her from her husband is no bar to a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff against the widow for a declaration that a gift of the property made by the widow after the first suit is inoperative (d). Similarly if A sues B for the rent of certain lands, and the suit is dismissed for default of A's appearance under r 8, the dismissal does not operate as a bar to a suit by A against B for possession of the lands (e). It is, however, important to note that a suit will be barred under this rule if the cause of action in the suit is the same as that in the previous suit, e.g., redemption of a mortgage, though the mode of relief prayed is varied (f).

This rule does not apply to a suit for partition. The reason is that the right to enforce partition is a legal incident of a joint tenancy, and as long as such tenancy subsists so long may any of the joint tenants sue for partition of the joint property (g).

The dismissal under r 8 of a suit filed by the Voluntary Liquidator against a share holder for the recovery of money alleged to be due to the company is a bar to a subsequent application by the Official Liquidator to have the name of the defendant placed in the list of contributories in respect of the same claim (h).

Minor plaintiff—A fresh suit notwithstanding the provisions of this rule, may be instituted in respect of the same cause of action, where the first suit was brought by a next friend on behalf of a minor, and was dismissed under r 8 for default of the next friend's appearance owing to gross want of care and diligence on his part (i). See notes to r 13 below, "Ex parte decree against minor defendant," on p 508 below.

Sufficient cause—What is sufficient cause is in each case a question of fact—

(1) A plaintiff left the Court house, believing that a part heard case which preceded his case would occupy some time, he returned in about half an hour and found that his suit had been called on and dismissed owing to his absence. He then applied to set aside the order of dismissal. Held refusing the application, that the above circumstances did not amount to sufficient cause for non appearance. Manilal v Gulam Husain (1889) 13 Bom 12.

(3) The rule of practice to be observed in the subordinate Courts in the Bombay Presidency is that when a party arrives late before the Judge, and finds that his suit has been dismissed before his arrival, he is entitled to have his suit restored, though there may be no sufficient cause for his late arrival, on payment of such costs as may have been incurred by reason of his default by the defendant Chhotalal v Ambalal (1925) 27 Bom L R 680, 19 I C 225, (2) A II 423, Sorabji v Ramjilal (1924) 26 Bom L R 321, 80 I C 237 (24) A B 392

(4) A litigant should not be deprived of a hearing unless there has been something equivalent to misconduct or gross negligence on his part Arunachala v Subbaramiah (1923) 46 Mad 60, 63, 68 I C 971, (23) A M 63 [delay caused by inevitable accident]

Inherent power to restore suit dismissed for default—It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (j), and Bombay (k), that this rule does not take away the inherent power of a Court to restore a suit dismissed for default, if there be a just and reasonable cause for restoring it, even if no "sufficient cause" is shown within the meaning of this rule for the plaintiff's non appearance. Thus where a case was called on at 12 o'clock, and the plaintiff's pleader being under the impression that the case would be taken up at 2 o'clock was engaged in other cases in other Courts, and the plaintiff himself was waiting in his pleader's room and neither the plaintiff nor his pleader appearing the suit was dismissed, it was held that though there was no sufficient cause for non appearance within the meaning of this rule, the case was one in which the Court should in the exercise of its inherent powers restore the suit to the file (l). Similarly where a plaintiff believing that his case which was fourteenth on the list would not be reached immediately did not attend the Court, but went to bring his principal witness, and the suit being called on in the meantime his counsel applied for an adjournment on the ground that his client was not in Court, but the application was refused and the suit dismissed, it was held that even if there was no 'sufficient cause' within the meaning of this section the Court had inherent power to restore the suit having regard to the special facts of the case (m). On the other hand, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, that a Court has no power apart from the provisions of this rule to restore a suit, or apart from the provisions of s 13 to set aside an ex parte decree (n). The Patna High Court has followed the Madras ruling (o).

Appeal—An appeal lies under O 43, s 1 (c) from an order rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) made under this rule but no appeal lies from an order granting the application (p). As regards an order rejecting an application to set aside the dismissal of a suit made by a single Judge sitting on the original side of the High

9, r. 9. Court, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that it is appealable not only under O 43, r 1 (c), but also as a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent (g), but that an order granting the application is not appealable either under O 43, r 1 (c), or as a "judgment" under cl 15 of the Letters Patent (r)

Where an application is made by a plaintiff under this rule, but the application is dismissed for default, no appeal lies from the order of dismissal (s)

Revision—Where there is no sufficient cause for setting aside the dismissal, the Court has no power to make an order setting it aside as a matter of grace because the amount involved is large. If the lower Court does so, the High Court has power to set aside the order in revision, though the suit has been subsequently tried and decreed (t)

Whether this rule applies to proceedings in execution—We now proceed to consider whether the provisions of Order 9 which relate to suits apply to proceedings in execution. Let us take an illustration. A, a judgment debtor, whose property is sold in execution of a decree, applies under O 21, r 90, to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity in conducting the sale. Notice of the hearing of the application is given to B, the decree holder, and to C, the auction purchaser. Suppose, first, that none of the parties appears at the hearing of the application and that the application is dismissed for non appearance. Suppose, next, that B and C appear at the hearing, but A does not, and the application is dismissed for A's non appearance. Suppose, lastly, that A appears at the hearing, but B and C do not, and that an ex parte order is made granting A's application and setting aside the sale. The question is whether the provisions of Order 9 apply to A's application which is a proceeding in execution. If Order 9 does apply, the dismissal of the application in the first case could be treated as a dismissal under O 9, r 3, and the provisions of O 9, r 4, will apply. Similarly the dismissal in the second case could be treated as a dismissal under O 9, r 8, and the provisions of O 9, r 9, will apply. Likewise the ex parte order made in the last case could be treated as one made under O 9, r 6, and the provisions of O 9, r 13, will apply. Now the provisions of Order 9 which relate to suits could apply to execution proceedings, if at all, only through the medium of s 141 of the Code corresponding with s 647 of the Code of 1882. As to that section (i.e., s 647) it was held by the Judicial Committee that the proceedings spoken of in that section included original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships and so forth, and not proceedings in execution (u). S 141 is a reproduction of the old s 647 with some alterations in language. Having regard to these alterations the question arose whether s 141 applied to proceedings in execution which were excluded from s 647. After some conflict of opinion it has now been held that s 141 has not effected any change in the law and that it does not apply to proceedings in execution, with the result that the provisions of Order 9, which could only apply to execution proceedings through the medium of s 141, do not also apply to proceedings in execution. This is the effect of the decisions of the High Courts of Calcutta (v), Patna (w), and Madras (x) cited in the foot notes. See notes to s 141, 'This section does not apply to execution proceedings', on p 335 above.

Dismissal for default of application for restoration of suit—

This rule provides for the revival of a suit dismissed for default. Does it apply where an application to set aside the dismissal of a suit is itself dismissed for default? A suit by A against B is dismissed for A's default. A applies under this rule to set aside the dismissal. A does not appear at the hearing of the application and the application is dismissed for A's default. Can the application be restored under this rule? No, according to the Patna High Court, the reason given being that O 9 does not apply to such an application (y). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (z), and Allahabad (a) that such an application may itself be treated as an application to restore the suit, provided it is made within the period prescribed for the original application. In a later Allahabad case (b), the Court held that the second application may be entertained under s 151. The same principles apply to applications to restore an application to set aside an ex parte decree which has been dismissed for default.

Limitation—Where no application to set aside a dismissal is made within the period of limitation, the Court has no inherent power under s 151 to set aside the dismissal after the expiry of the period (c). See notes above, Remedies in case of dismissal under r 8.

- 10. [S. 103.] Where there are more plaintiffs than one, and one or more of them appear, and the others do not appear, the Court may, at the instance of the plaintiff or plaintiffs appearing, permit the suit to proceed in the same way as if all the plaintiffs had appeared, or make such order as it thinks fit.

Where party directed to appear in person—This rule applies to all cases where a party has been ordered to appear in person and fails to do so. This is clear from the fact that the words “under the provisions of section 65 or section 436” [now O 5, r 3 and O 29, r. 3, respectively] which occurred in the corresponding s 107 of the Code of 1882 have been omitted from the present rule (d).

13. [S. 108.] In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside; and if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served, or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him upon such terms as to costs, payment into Court or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit:

Provided that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant only it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants also.

Old section.—This rule corresponds with s 103 of the Code of 1882. The words “as against him” have been added after the words “shall make an order setting aside the decree”. The proviso to the rule is also new. See as to the effect of these changes notes, ‘Proviso to the Rule,’ on p 508 below.

Remedies in case of ex parte decree.—A defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been passed under r 6 for default of appearance at the hearing, has the following courses open to him (e) —

(1) he may appeal from the ex parte decree under s 96,

(2) he may apply for a review of judgment under O 47, = 1 (f),

(3) he may apply under this rule for an order to set aside the ex parte decree, provided the application is made, in cases to which the Limitation Act, 1908, applies within 30 days from the date of the decree, or where the summons was not duly served, when he has knowledge of the decree (g), and in cases to which the Limitation Act, 1877, applies within 30 days from the date of executing any process for enforcing the judgment (h). As to “Knowledge of the decree,” it has been held that it must be knowledge of a particular decree passed against the defendant in a particular Court in favour of a particular person and for a particular sum, and not merely the knowledge that a decree has been passed by some Court against him (i).

Where the right to make the application is barred under the Act of 1877, the bar arising before the Act of 1908 came into force, the provisions of the Act of 1908 cannot revive the right (j). Save as aforesaid, the law of Limitation to be applied to applications under the present rule made after January 1, 1909, is art 161 of the Limitation Act of

1908, and not art 164 of the Limitation Act of 1877, though the ex parte decree was passed when the Limitation Act of 1877 was in force (1)

The first two remedies, that is, the remedies by way of appeal and review, may be availed of by any person against whom a decree is passed, whether the decree is ex parte or not. But the third remedy, being the one provided by this rule can only be availed of if the decree is passed ex parte, that is to say, it is passed against the defendant for default of appearance under r. 6. The remedy given by this rule is not open to a defendant if the decree is passed on grounds other than his non appearance.

Whether remedies concurrent—A defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed is at liberty, as stated above, to apply to set aside the decree under this rule, or to appeal from the decree, or to apply for a review of the judgment. He is entitled to apply under this rule to set aside the decree, and at the same time to appeal rule, and his application is rejected, he is entitled under O 43, r 1 (d), to appeal from the order rejecting the application. But he is not bound to appeal from the order, he may appeal under s 56 from the ex parte decree itself.

Suppose that a defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed does not apply under this rule to set aside the decree, but appeals from the decree. In such a case two questions arise for consideration, namely,—

- (1) Whether the appellate Court can go into the question touching the defendant's non appearance at the hearing and determine whether the lower Court was right in hearing the suit ex parte, or whether the only question with which the appellate Court is concerned is whether the evidence on the record is sufficient to support the ex parte decree, in other words, whether the decree can be sustained on the merits and
- (2) whether, if the appellate Court can deal with the question touching the defendant's non appearance, and does deal with it, and comes to the conclusion that the suit ought not to have been heard ex parte, it has the power to remand the case for re hearing to the lower Court.

Upon these points there is a conflict of decisions. In a case under the Code of 1852, the Calcutta High Court held that the only question with which the appellate Court was concerned was whether the decree was wrong in law or based on insufficient evidence, and that it could not deal with the question whether the lower Court was right in proceeding ex parte (n). In a Bombay case also decided under the Code of 1852, it was held that the appellate Court may deal with the question touching the defendant's non appearance, but it had no power to remand the case to the lower Court for re hearing, the reason given being that an order of remand can only be made under s 562 [now O 41, r 23] when a suit is disposed of on a preliminary point, and the disposal of a suit ex parte was not a disposal on a preliminary point (o). These decisions were disented from by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Sadhu v. Appan (p) which also was a case under the Code of 1852, where it was held that the appellate Court may deal with the question touching the defendant's non appearance, and, further, that if it came to the conclusion that the lower Court ought not to have proceeded ex parte, it had the power to remand the case

O. 9, r. 13. to that Court for re hearing The Madras ruling was followed by the High Court of Bombay in Jethalal v Paraylal (p2), where it was held that even if the appellate Court had no power under the Code of 1882 to remand a case except under s 562, it has power now to make an order of remand under s 151 of the present Code and also under O 41, r 33 The High Court of Rangoon has followed the Calcutta ruling (p3)

Suppose that a defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed applies under this rule, and his application is rejected, but he does not appeal from the order rejecting the application under O 43, r 1 (d), and appeals from the ex parte decree In such a case it has been held that the appellate Court has no power to go into any question touching his non appearance at the hearing, but it can only hear the appeal on the merits (p4)

As to review, see notes to r 9, "Remedies in case of dismissal under r 8," on p 498 above

Where written statement filed—A defendant against whom a decree is passed ex parte for default of appearance is entitled to apply under this rule to set aside the decree, though he may have filed his written statement (q)

Prevented from appearing—As to the meaning of "appearing," see notes to O 9, r 9, "Appearance," on p 498 above

Hearing of application pending appeal.—It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (r), Madras (s), and Allahabad (t), that where a defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed applies under this rule to set it aside, and at the same time prefers an appeal from it, the proper Court to hear the application is the Court which passed the decree, and not the appellate Court A obtains an ex parte decree against B B applies under this rule to have the decree set aside At the same time he prefers an appeal from the decree Has the Court that passed the decree jurisdiction to hear the application, or should the application be heard by the Appellate Court? The answer is that the only Court that has jurisdiction to hear the application is the Court that passed the decree The reason is that the matter for investigation in a proceeding under this rule is entirely distinct from the matter for determination in the appeal from the ex parte decree, the one being concerned with the due service of summons, and the other with the determination of the merits of the controversy between the parties Suppose now that A sues B and C, that B does not appear and an ex parte decree is passed against him, and that C appears and defends the suit and a decree is passed against him after a hearing Suppose, further, that B applies under this rule to have the ex parte decree set aside, and that C appeals from the decree passed against him (C) Which is the proper Court to hear B's application? The answer is that the only Court that has power to hear the application is the Court which passed the decree It makes no difference that the application is made by one defendant and the appeal is preferred by another defendant, provided the decree was one and indivisible

Hearing of application after disposal of appeal.—It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (v), Madras (z), and Allahabad (u) that where an appeal is preferred from an ex parte decree, and the decree is confirmed or otherwise disposed of in appeal under O. 41, s. 32, the Court which passed the ex parte decree has no longer any power to entertain an application under this rule to set aside the ex parte decree even it is otherwise where the Court which passed the decree. The reason is that where the decree of the lower Court is confirmed or otherwise disposed of under O 41, r 32, it is merged in the decree of the appellate Court, but an order dismissing an appeal for default is not a decree (s 2 (2)), and there can therefore be no such merger (x). See notes to s. 36, "Merger of decree," on p. 116 above.

Where a defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed is not joined as a party to the appeal preferred by other parties to the suit, and the appellate Court has not adjudicated upon his case, the ex parte decree against him does not merge in the decree of the Court of appeal so as to preclude him from applying under this rule to the Court that passed the ex parte decree to set aside the decree. A sues B, C, and D, and obtains an ex parte decree against B and a decree after a hearing on the merits against C and D. C and D appeal from the decree. B is not joined as a party to the appeal. The appellate Court confirms the decree of the Court of first instance passed against C and D. This does not preclude B from applying to the Court of first instance to set aside the ex parte decree against him (v).

Ex parte decree obtained by fraud—A regular suit does not have to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground solely of non service of summons (a) But where an ex parte decree is alleged to have been obtained by a plaintiff by fraud, the defendant is entitled to institute a regular suit to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud (a) The suit is maintainable even though the defendant was unsuccessful in his application made under this rule to set aside the ex parte decree and though he did not appeal from the order rejecting his application (b) But if the very fraud that is set up by the defendant in his suit was set up in his application, and the Court after going into the question of fraud rejected the application, the suit would be barred as res judicata unless the fraud alleged was of such a nature that it could not properly come within the scope of enquiry under this rule. A applies under this rule to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud in respect of the service of summons upon him. The Court, after going into the question of fraud, rejects the application. A then institutes a regular suit to set aside the ex parte decree, basing his suit on the very fraud that was alleged by him in the application. The suit is barred as res judicata (c) In a recent Calcutta case A sued B in a Munsif's Court on a hand note and obtained an ex parte decree for Rs 50. B applied to set aside the decree, but the application was refused. B then sued A in the District Court to set aside the decree on the grounds, (1) that the summons was not duly served, and (2) that the decree was obtained by perjured evidence. It was held that the issue as to service of summons was not res judicata, the reason given being that the suit included matters which could not have been raised on the application to set aside the decree (d) This decision, it is submitted, is not good law.

9, r. 13. Application by legal representative of deceased defendant—Under the Code of 1882, it was not settled whether, where a defendant against whom an ex parte decree was passed died, his legal representative could apply for an order to set aside the ex parte decree. The High Court of Calcutta held that he could (e). The High Courts of Madras (f), and Allahabad (g), held that he could not. But the Allahabad Court maintained that if the application was made by the defendant, and he died during the pendency of the application, the proceedings could be continued by his legal representative (h). Under this Code (s. 146) such an application may be made by the legal representative of the deceased defendant (i).

Grounds on which ex parte decree may be set aside—These are stated in the second paragraph of the rule, the one being that the summons was not duly served upon the defendant (j), and the other that though the summons was duly served, the defendant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing (k). A summons cannot be said to be duly served if it is a misleading document having no relevance to the real proceedings which are contemplated and having no reference to the order ultimately passed (l). When a summons was served upon a purdanashin lady, to whom the serving officer was not able to obtain access by affixing a copy of the summons on the outer door of her dwelling house under O 5, r 17, and it appeared that the lady had no knowledge of the suit against her, the Court set aside the ex parte decree passed against her on the ground that she was prevented by "sufficient cause" from appearing at the hearing of the suit (m). In restoring a case under this rule, the Court may make it a condition that the decretal amount or some portion thereof be paid into Court (n). As to "sufficient cause," see notes to r 9 under the same head on p 500 above.

Inherent power to set aside ex parte decree—See notes to r 9, "Inherent power to restore suit dismissed for default," on p. 501 above.

Ex parte* decree against minor defendant—It is no ground for setting aside an ex parte decree passed against a minor defendant, that the Nazir who was appointed guardian ad litem of the minor did not appear and defend the suit, where the failure to defend was owing to the fact that the Nazir did not receive instructions from any person to defend the suit. It would be otherwise if fraud, collusion, or gross negligence on the part of the Nazir were proved (o). See notes to r 9 "Minor plaintiff," on p 500 above.

Proviso to the Rule—We now proceed to consider the cases in which there are two or more defendants, and

- (1) where the decree is ex parte against all the defendants, but the application to set aside the decree is made by some of them only,
- (2) where against some of the defendants the decree is passed ex parte, but against others who have appeared and defended the suit it is passed after a hearing, and the application to set aside the decree is made by one or more of the defendants against whom the decree was passed ex parte.

The question is, whether, if the decree is set aside as against the applicant, the Court can set aside the decree as against the other defendants also, so as to re-open the whole suit, and, if so, in what cases? This is a point of some difficulty, for which there was no provision made in the old section. The present rule expressly provides for these cases. The rule says that where a defendant against whom a decree is passed ex parte applies for an order to set it aside, and satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served upon him, etc., the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him [that is the applicant] (p), provided that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant only, it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants. The rule primarily applies to the case only of the particular defendant who has applied to have the decree set aside. But under certain circumstances it may be necessary, in the interests of justice, to set aside the decree against the other defendants also. For this provision has been made in the proviso to this rule. By virtue of the proviso the Court to which an application is made to set aside an ex parte decree may set it aside not only as against the defendant who applies to have it set aside, but as against the other defendants also, where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against the applicant only. As a general rule we may say that a decree may be set aside not only as against the applicant but as against the other defendants also, if the interests of justice require it (q), e g. —

O. 9,

- (1) where the decree is one and indivisible (r),
- (2) where the suit would result in inconsistent decrees, if the decree were not set aside as against the other defendants also (s),
- (3) where the relief to which the applicant is entitled in the suit could not effectively be given otherwise than by setting aside the decree as against the other defendants also (t),
- (4) where the decree proceeds on a ground common to all the defendants (u)

The cases now under consideration may be divided as pointed out at the beginning of this paragraph, into two classes.

Class I — Here the decree is ex parte passed against all the defendants but the application to set aside the decree is made by some of them only

(a) B, C, and D who constitute a joint Hindu family execute a mortgage of their joint property in favour of A. A sues B, C and D to enforce the mortgage. D is served with the summons, but not B and C. None of the defendants appears at the hearing and an ex parte decree is passed against all the defendants for a sale of the mortgaged property. B and C apply for an order to set aside the decree on the ground that the summons was not served upon them. Here the decree being one and indivisible the Court may set aside the decree not only as against B and C but also as against D, though he was served with the summons and there was no sufficient cause for his non appearance. *Ajathya Pershad v. 9, r. 13. (b) A sues B and his minor sons C and D, members of a joint Hindu family, to recover Rs 1,000, alleged to have been advanced to B as manager of the family. None of the defendants appears at the hearing, and an ex parte decree is passed against all the three. All the three defendants apply to have the decree set aside. As to C and D it is proved that no summons was served upon them. As to B it is proved that the summons was duly served upon him. Here the decree being one and indivisible (v), the Court may set aside the decree not only as against C and D, but also as against B, though the summons was served upon him and there was no sufficient cause for his non appearance. Further, this is a case where the relief to which the minors C and D are entitled could not effectively be granted unless the decree was set aside as against B also. For if the decree were allowed to stand as against B, B's share in the joint family property could be attached and sold though the sons might succeed in showing at the re trial of the suit that the debt never was incurred or that it had been discharged, or that from its nature the joint family property was not liable. The sale of the father's share in the joint family property would be a manifest injury to the sons, and this could only be avoided by setting aside the decree against the father also, and re opening the whole suit. Bhura Mal v Har Kishan Das (1902) 24 All 387, at pp 400 and 401.

(c) X, alleging that A and B are in joint possession of certain immovable property, sues A and B, and asks for a declaration that he is in joint possession with them. A is served with the summons, but B is not. Neither defendant appears at the hearing and a decree ex parte is passed against both the defendants. B applies to have the decree set aside, and it is set aside as against him, but not as against A. At the hearing B establishes that X has no title whatever to the property. There would in such a case be two absolutely inconsistent decrees, namely, the ex parte decree held by X against A declaring X to be jointly in possession with A and B, and the decree against X passed at the rehearing that X was not in joint possession with A and B. This is therefore a case in which the decree must be set aside not only as against B, but as against A also: see Bhura Mal v Har Kishan Das (1902) 24 All 387, at p 388.

(d) X sues A and B on a promissory note executed by A. B is A's nephew, and he is joined as a defendant on the ground that A and B are members of a joint Hindu family, and that the note was for a debt binding on the family. Neither defendant appears at the hearing, and an ex parte decree is passed against both the defendants. The decree against A proceeds on the ground that the note was passed by him, and against B on the ground that the debt was incurred for a family purpose. B applies for an order to set aside the decree, alleging that the summons was not served upon him and that the debt in respect of which the note was passed by A was not incurred for a family purpose. It is not disputed that the amount was actually advanced to A. Such being the case the decree may be set aside as against B but it must not be set aside as against A. Justice does not require it, for the contention of B that the debt was one not binding on him is a defence peculiar to him alone and not one common to him and A. Gopala Chetti v Subbier (1903) 26 Mad 601.

(e) A sues B, C, and D, personally and as managers of a devasam to recover Rs 2, being revenue paid by him on behalf of the defendants. None of the defendants appears.

of a similar decree that it was one and indivisible.

9, r. 13. old section that the decree should be set aside not only as against H2 and H3 but also as against A and H1, the ground of the decision being that the decree was one and indivisible Mahomed Hamidulla v Tohurennissa Bibi (1898) 25 Cal 155, 160, Monomohini v Nara Narayan Roy (1899) 4 C W N 456, 458 See the next illustration

(c) A sues B and C, Native Christians, upon a promissory note jointly passed by them. B appears at the hearing and defends the suit. C does not appear. A decree is passed against both defendants for the amount of the note. Here the decree so far as regards B, is passed after a hearing, and, as regards C, it is ex parte. C applies for an order to set aside the decree, alleging that the summons was not served upon him. The Court finds that the summons was not served upon C. Upon these facts the High Court of Bombay held under the old section that if the decree were set aside as against C, it would not reopen the case as against B, B having appeared and defended the suit. Manakn v Sitaram (1894) 18 Bom 142. It is difficult indeed, to distinguish this case from the Calcutta case cited in the preceding illustration, for if the decree in the Calcutta case was one and indivisible, it must be regarded as such in the Bombay case. If the Bombay decision means that the setting aside of a decree ex parte against a defendant does not ipso facto revive the suit as against a defendant who has appeared and defended the suit, the decision is still good law, for an express order is necessary for that purpose. Put if it means that where a decree is passed ex parte against A and after a hearing against B, the Court can set aside the decree only against A, and cannot set it aside in any case against B, the decision is no longer law [see the proviso to the rule]. The Bombay decision, however, may be supported on the ground that the decree could not be said in such a case to be one and indivisible.

(d) A sues B and C for a declaration of title to certain lands, and D and E for possession of the lands. B and C appear and defend the suit. D and E do not appear. The Court passes a decree against all the four defendants as against B and C, declaring that the lands belong to A, and as against D and E, directing them to deliver possession of the lands to A. Here the decree against D and E is ex parte, for they did not appear at the hearing. D alone applies for an order to set aside the decree, alleging that the summons was not served upon him. The Court is satisfied that the summons was not served. Should the decree be set aside as a whole or should it be set aside in part, and if so, to what extent? The decree should not be set aside as a whole, for the decree is not one and indivisible. The relief granted to A as against B and C is the declaration of A's title to the lands. The relief granted to A as against D and E is that they should deliver up possession of the lands to A. In fact, the decree, though nominally one, really consists of two decrees each against one set of defendants, the relief granted against each set being separately specified. Hence the Court should not make an order setting aside the decree as against B and C, for the relief granted against B and C is distinct from that granted against D, who alone applied for an order to set aside the decree. But the decree should be set aside, not only as against D, but also as against E, for the decree against D and E is one and indivisible, namely, delivery up of possession. Monomohini v Nara (1899) 4 C W N 456

Where ex parte decree has been executed —The fact that an ex parte decree has been satisfied does not preclude the defendant from applying to the Court for an order to set it aside under this rule. A obtains an ex parte decree against B, and attaches C's goods in execution of the decree. B pays the amount of the decree under protest, and applies for an order to set aside the decree on the ground that the summons was not served upon him. The Court may make an order setting aside the decree, notwithstanding that the decree has been satisfied (x).

Ex parte decree against firm—An ex parte decree against a firm cannot be said to be ex parte against a partner in the firm, because he has not appeared at the hearing. An ex parte decree against a firm can be set aside on the ground that the summons was not duly served on the firm. If the summons was duly served upon the firm, the decree cannot be set aside because one of the partners was not served. Under O 30, r 3, it is not necessary to serve every partner. A sues X Y & Co a firm. The firm consists of two partners X and Y. The summons is served on X alone as a partner, Y is not served with the summons. Neither X nor Y appears at the hearing, and an ex parte decree is passed against the firm. The summons having been duly served on the firm, the decree against the firm cannot be set aside because Y was not served and he did not appear at the hearing (y).

Appeal—Where an application under this rule is rejected, an appeal lies against the order rejecting the application [O 43, r 1, cl (d)]. But where the application is granted, no appeal lies against the order granting the application (z). Where an application to set aside an ex parte decree has been dismissed for default, and a fresh application is made to set aside such dismissal, and the fresh application is rejected, no appeal lies from the order rejecting the fresh application (a).

Revision—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that an order setting aside an ex parte decree is not subject to revision under s 115, the reason given being that the validity of the order may be attacked under s 105 in an appeal from the final decree (b).

Dismissal for default of application to set aside ex parte decree—See notes to r 9, 'Dismissal for default of application for restoration of suit' on p 503 above.

Limitation—A sues B and C for a decree against them jointly in respect of a joint mortgage debt. A preliminary decree for sale is passed against B and C in 1900 and it is made absolute in 1901. As against B, however, the decree was ex parte, and it is set aside as against him on his application. A decree is then passed on the merits against B in 1902. B appeals from the decree, but the appeal is dismissed in 1904, and as against him the decree is made absolute in 1905. A then applies in 1905 for execution both against B and C by a sale of the mortgaged property. C contends that as the decree as against him was made absolute in 1901 the application for execution is barred by limitation, it having been made more than three years from that date. The application is not barred by limitation, for the period of three years must be calcu-

The decree of 1905 for the first time justified A in applying for the joint execution of the decree against B and C (c) In a recent case it was held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that a rule framed by that Court applying s. 5 of the Limitation Act, 1908 to applications under r. 13, was infra vires (d) See notes above * Remedies in case of ex parte decree

Where no application to set aside an ex parte decree is made within the period of limitation, the Court has no inherent power under s. 151 to set it aside after the expiry of the period (e)

Whether this rule applies to execution proceedings—See notes under the same head to r. 9 on p. 502 above

ORDER X

Examination of Parties by the Court.

1. [S 117] At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall ascertain from each party or his pleader whether he admits or denies such allegations of facts as are made in the plaint or written statement (if any) of the opposite party, and as are not expressly or by necessary implication admitted or denied by the party against whom they are made. The Court shall record such admissions and denials relating to the suit by whom such party or his pleader is accompanied, may be examined orally by the Court, and the Court may, if it thinks fit, put in the course of such examination questions suggested by either party.

Object of examination under this rule.—The object of examination under this rule is not to take evidence or ascertain what is to be the evidence in the case, but to determine the matters in dispute between the parties (A)

3. [S 119] The substance of the examination shall be reduced to writing by the Judge, and shall form part of the record

4. [S 120] (1) Where the pleader of any party who appears by a pleader or any such person accompanying a pleader as is referred to in rule 2, refuses or is unable to answer any material question relating to the suit which the Court is of opinion that the party whom he represents ought to answer, and is likely to be able to answer if interrogated in person, the Court may postpone the hearing of the suit to a future day and direct that such party shall appear in person on such day

Consequence of refusal or inability of pleader to answer

(2) If such party fails without lawful excuse to appear in person on the day so appointed, the Court may pronounce judgment against him, or make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit

Direct that such party shall appear in person—Under this rule an order directing a party to appear in person can only be made if the pleader who represents him has refused or is unable to answer material questions (1) See O 9 r 12

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order pronouncing judgment against a party under sub r (2) (O 43, r 1 cl (e)) Where in a suit by A against B C and D the Court struck off B's defence owing to his failure to appear in person but ultimately decided the case on the merits and passed a decree against all three defendants their defences being similar it was held that B was not entitled to appeal from the order striking off his defence but that he was at liberty to appeal from the final decree and to call in question upon that appeal the order striking off his defence [e 100] (j)

ORDER XI.

Discovery and Inspection.

1, r. 1.

1 [R E C., O 31, r. 1 Cf S 121] In any suit the plaintiff or defendant by leave of the Court may deliver interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite parties or any one or more of such parties, and such interrogatories when delivered shall have a note at the foot thereof stating which of such interrogatories each of such persons is required to answer. Provided that no party shall deliver more than one set of interrogatories to the same party without an order for that purpose. Provided also that interrogatories which do not relate to any matters in question in the suit shall be deemed irrelevant, notwithstanding that they might be admissible on the oral cross examination of a witness.

Discovery by interrogatories—Every party to a suit is entitled to know the nature of his opponent's case (k), so that he may know beforehand what case he has to meet at the hearing (l). But he is not entitled to know the facts which constitute exclusively the substance of his opponent's case the reason being that it would enable an unscrupulous party to tamper with his opponent's witnesses and to manufacture evidence in contradiction and to shape his case as to defeat justice (m). The nature of a plaintiff's case is disclosed in his plaint. The nature of a defendant's case is disclosed in his written statement. But a plaint or a written statement may not sufficiently disclose the nature of a party's case. In such a case either party may administer interrogatories in writing to the other through the Court. Interrogatories may also be administered by a party to his opponent to obtain admissions from him to facilitate the proof of his own case. The party to whom interrogatories are administered must answer them in writing and on oath (r 8). This is called discovery by interrogatories, the party to whom the interrogatories are administered discovers or discloses by his affidavit in answer to the interrogatories the nature of his case.

Every suit contemplates two sets of facts namely, (1) facts which constitute a party's case and (2) facts by which a party's case is to be proved (see D 6, r 2). The first set of facts discloses the nature of a party's case. The second set forms the evidence of his case. Thus if A sues B for damages for breach of a contract A must prove (1) the contract and (2) breach of the contract. These two facts constitute A's case, and it is to these facts that one should turn to determine the nature of A's case. Hence B may administer interrogatories to A for information as to the particulars of (1) the contract and (2) the breach thereof. He may also interrogate A to obtain admissions from him to facilitate the proof of his own case. But he is not entitled to administer interrogatories seeking information as to the evidence by which A will prove these two facts. Thus in the above case it is not permissible to B to ask who was present at the time when the alleged contract was made, in other words, it is not permissible to ask the names of A's witnesses (n). But if the name and address of a person is itself a relevant fact, an interrogatory as to that name and address is not rendered inadmissible merely by the fact that the answer will disclose a witness's name (o). In a suit for the recovery of the amount of a hundi alleged to have been drawn by the defendant in consideration of Rs 5,000 advanced to him by the plaintiff, and to have been dishonoured by non payment, the defendant is entitled to discovery of the form in which the loan is alleged to have been made, and of the time and place the hundi was drawn and accepted and the time and place and the names and addresses of the persons by whom it was presented. All these are material facts which constitute the plaintiff's case (p). See notes to O 6, r 4, "Object of particulars," on p 412 above, and "Interrogatories relating to names of persons," on p 516 below.

What interrogatories may be allowed—In England, interrogatories are allowed for the following purposes—

- 1 To ascertain the "nature of your opponent's case or the material facts constituting his case" (q)

We have dealt with this proposition in the preceding paragraph

- 2 To support your own case, either
 - (a) directly, by obtaining admissions, or
 - (b) indirectly, by impeaching or destroying your adversary's case (r)

Illustration of Case 2—A sues B to recover Rs 5,000 for making model machinery for exhibition. The defence is that the machinery was defective and unworkable. A may interrogate B whether the machinery did not obtain a prize at the exhibition. If it did, it is clear that the answer would tend to destroy B's case, and support A's case (s). Moreover, the answer will serve as an admission from B and the getting of admissions by interrogatories is always allowed, for it supports the party's case (t).

There is one exception to the rule in Case II (b). A sues to eject B from a piece of land alleging that the land belongs to him and that B is wrongfully in possession thereof. This is an action of ejectment. A is plaintiff in ejectment, and B is defendant in ejectment. In an action of ejectment, the plaintiff must prove his own title affirmatively. It is not enough for him to impeach or destroy the defendant's title. If he does not establish his own title to the land, he will not be entitled to a decree though he may succeed in impeaching or even destroying the defendant's title. The reason is that the defendant being in possession, he cannot be dispossessed of the land except by proof of title on the part of the claimant. Hence the plaintiff in ejectment should not be allowed to interrogate the defendant for the purpose merely of destroying or impeaching the defendant's title (u). And this is the Exception above referred to. But the plaintiff in ejectment is entitled to interrogate the defendant as to any matter relating to the defendant's title that may support his case directly (v). The same principles apply in the case of discovery by production of documents.

The High Court of Calcutta has expressed the opinion that interrogatories in India should not be allowed for the first of the above purposes—that is, to ascertain the nature

11, r. 1. of your opponent's case but that they may be allowed for the second, that is, to support your own case (u) The opinion is based on the ground that where a party has not sufficiently disclosed his case, it is the Court that has to determine the exact nature of his case by procedure under O 8, r 7, and O 14, rr 1 2, and that it is not therefore permissible to the opposite party to get that information by discovery But the provisions of the said rules are, it is submitted, intended not to supersede, but to supplement the provisions for discovery to ascertain the case of a party to a suit, and there is no reason why any distinction should be drawn between the English and the Indian practice (x)

What interrogatories may not be allowed—These may be divided into three classes —

1 A party is not entitled to administer interrogatories for obtaining discovery of facts which constitute exclusively the evidence of his adversary's case or title (y)

2 A party is not entitled to interrogate as to any confidential communications between his opponent and his legal advisers

3 A party is not entitled to exhibit interrogatories which would involve disclosures injurious to public interests

For fuller information on the above rules, see notes to § 13 below, "Grounds of objection to production of documents," p 524 below.

Interrogatories relating to names of persons—Interrogatories relating to the names of persons not already parties to the action are only allowable where the object is either to make the proceedings complete and effective for all purposes or to enable the plaintiff more effectively to substantiate the case which he makes against the existing defendant (z) Such interrogatories are not allowable in any other case Thus in a suit by the vendor against the purchaser for specific performance of a contract for sale, the plaintiff is not entitled to interrogate the defendant for the purpose of discovering whether he was acting as agent for an undisclosed principal The only object of such an interrogatory is to give the plaintiff the opportunity, if he is so minded of releasing the defendant from all liability under the contract, and of securing for the plaintiff some other person liable under the contract in substitution for, and not jointly with, the defendant (a)

As to interrogatories as to names of witnesses, see notes "Discovery by interrogatories," on p 514 above and notes to O 6, r 4 "Object of particulars," on p 442 above As to interrogatories as to names of informants in defamation cases, see the undermentioned cases (b)

Foreign law—An interrogatory involving a question of foreign law is not permissible unless the party interrogated is shown to be an expert in that law (c)

Time for delivery of interrogatories—A plaintiff may, under this rule deliver interrogatories to a defendant even before the filing of the written statement But there is this difference, if the English practice is to be followed here, that in what are called common law actions, interrogatories, if delivered before filing the written statement, will as a rule be struck out under r 7 as unnecessary and vexatious unless sufficient reasons are given by the plaintiff why the interrogatories are necessary at that stage of the suit (d), while in suits of the nature of chancery actions (e), they may, as a rule, be allowed though no written statement has been filed (f)

A defendant, as a rule, is not allowed to deliver interrogatories to the plaintiff before he has filed his written statement (g)

Leave of the Court.—The application for leave to administer interrogatories is, as a rule, made ex parte. In determining whether leave should be granted, the Court should consider whether it is a fit and proper case for administering interrogatories. Leave should be refused if the interrogatories are scandalous or are an abuse of the process of the Court. But it is not the duty of the Court, when granting leave, to consider what particular questions the party interrogated should be compelled to answer. The proper time for considering that question is after the party interrogated has made his affidavit in answer [r 8] (h). See r 2 below.

“Opposite party.”—These words do not include solely the relation of plaintiff and defendant. Hence one defendant may administer interrogatories to another defendant, provided there is some right to be adjusted in the action between them (i).

Where opposite party is a minor or a lunatic.—Where a party to a suit is a minor or a lunatic, interrogatories may be administered to his next friend or guardian ad litem, as the case may be. See r 23 below.

Points of distinction between interrogatories and cross-examination:—

- (1) Not every question which could be asked to a witness in the box may be put as an interrogatory. Thus, questions which are put only to test the credibility of a person will not be allowed, although of course they may be asked in cross examination (j).
- (2) Interrogatories can be administered only to a party to a suit and not to a witness (k).

Impleading party for discovery.—A person cannot be made a party to a suit solely for the purpose of discovery (l).

Distinction between pleadings and interrogatories.—Interrogatories are not like pleadings confined to the material facts on which the parties rely in support of their claim or defence. Interrogatories may be administered not only to ascertain the nature of your opponent's case, but to obtain admissions from him of everything which is material on the pleadings, so as to facilitate the proof of your own case, and thus save yourself the expense of proving facts admitted by your opponent in answer to the interrogatories (m).

Probate proceedings.—O 11 applies, by virtue of s 266 of the Indian Succession Act 1925, to proceedings in probate (n).

2. [New R S C, O 13, r 2] On an application for leave to deliver interrogatories, the particular interrogatories proposed to be delivered shall be submitted to the Court

Particular Interrogatories to be submitted

In deciding upon such application, the Court shall take into account any offer, which may be made by the party sought to be interrogated to deliver particulars, or to make admissions, or to produce documents relating to the matters in question, or any of them, and leave shall be given as to such only of the interrogatories submitted as the Court shall consider necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs

Power of Court under this rule—It is to be noted that the Court has no power under this rule to settle interrogatories but to state only what interrogatories should be administered (o) Further the allowance by the Court of interrogatories to be administered to a party does not amount to a decision that the party is bound to answer them but leaves him at liberty to take any objection to answering which he might otherwise have taken (p) See rr 67 below

Running down cases—In running down cases only such interrogatories should be allowed as may be necessary for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs within this rule (q)

3. [R S C, O 31, r 3 C/ S 123] In adjusting the costs of the suit inquiry shall at the instance of any party be made into the propriety of exhibiting such interrogatories and if it is the opinion of the taxing officer or of the Court either with or without an application for inquiry, that such interrogatories have been exhibited unreasonably, vexatiously, or at improper length, the costs occasioned by the said interrogatories and the answer thereto shall be paid in any event by the party in fault

Costs of interrogatories

4. [New R S C, O 31, r 4] Interrogatories shall be in Form No 2 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require

Form of Interrogatories

5. [R S C., O 31, r 5 C/ S 124] Where any party to a suit is a corporation or a body of persons whether incorporated or not, empowered by law to sue or be sued, whether in its own name or in the name of any officer or other person, any opposite party may apply for an order allowing him to deliver interrogatories to any member or officer of such corporation or body, and an order may be made accordingly.

Delivery of interrogatories to an officer of a corporation—A corporate body cannot answer for itself, and it is necessary that some officer should answer for it. His answer is the answer of the Company, and can be read against the Company. Such being the case, he is only bound to answer as to his knowledge acquired in the course of his employment by the Company, and as to the result of inquiries made by him of the other officers and agents of the Company with regard to their knowledge acquired in the same way. He is not bound to answer as to his own knowledge, or to make inquiries of the other officers or agents of the Company as to their knowledge acquired accidentally or in some other capacity (r)

6 [R S C, O 31, r 6 Cf S 125] Any objection to answering any interrogatory on the ground that it is scandalous or irrelevant or not exhibited bona fide for the purpose of the suit, or that the matters inquired into are not sufficiently material at that stage, or on any other ground, may be taken in the affidavit in answer.

Objections to interrogatories by answer

Scandalous Interrogatories.—Certainly nothing can be scandalous which is relevant (s). Interrogatories which tend to incriminate a party are not scandalous if they are relevant (t).

Irrelevant Interrogatories—The discovery by interrogatories, as distinguished from cross examination, must be directly relevant to the matters in issue (u). Thus in an action for damages against the defendant for seducing the plaintiff's daughter, the defendant cannot be asked how rich he is as it is perfectly irrelevant in such cases whether the defendant is rich or poor the true measure of damages being the amount of compensation to be paid to the plaintiff for the injury he has sustained by the seduction of his daughter. But interrogatories as to whether the defendant had had sexual intercourse with the daughter, and whether he had stated that he believed that she had not had such intercourse with any other man are allowable (v). Similarly interrogatories will not be allowed if the defence at which they aim would be no defence in law to the suit (w).

Where a party seeks discovery of documents and the opposite party alleges that the documents are not relevant the procedure to be followed is that laid down in r 18, sub r (2) below. A party should not be compelled to give discovery of documents by means of interrogatories the relevancy of which is denied (x).

Not exhibited bona fide for the purpose of the suit—Though an interrogatory may be relevant, it may be objected to on the ground that it is put with a view to serve an ulterior object beyond that of helping the suit.

rr. 6, 7.

"Not sufficiently material at that stage."—An interrogatory may be perfectly relevant to a suit, further it may be put bona fide for the purposes of the suit, but it may be premature, in which case it will not be allowed (y) This may be illustrated by the following cases —

- (1) A sues B for breach of an alleged trust and for profits made by B by such breach B denies the alleged trust A is not entitled to interrogate B so as to require from him an account of profits of the alleged trust fund unless the trust is proved (z), but it is otherwise if the breach of trust is admitted (z).
- (2) In Fennessy v Clark (b), the plaintiff's interrogatories to prove the amount of damages were held premature, as it was not yet decided whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages at all. Cotton, L.J., said "The Court is always unwilling before the right to relief is established, to make an order for discovery which may be injurious to the defendant and will only be useful to the plaintiff if he succeeds in establishing his title to relief."

"Or any other ground."—Besides the three specific grounds mentioned in the rule, a party interrogated may object to answer an interrogatory on the ground that it is prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous (r 7), or on the grounds specified in the notes to r 1, "What interrogatories may not be allowed," on p 516 above

"Fishing" interrogatories not allowed—The questions asked must not be "fishing," that is to say, they must refer to some definite and existing state of circumstances, and must not be put merely in the hope of discovering something which may help the party interrogating to make out some case (c) See Odgers on Pleading 8th Ed, ¶ 298 For instances of "fishing interrogatories," see Ali Kader v Gobind Das (d)

Contracts by way of wager—In cases where the defence of wager is set up the Court will refuse to allow the party setting up this defence to interrogate his opponent generally as to his business transactions apart from the particular transactions in the suit, the reason being that it is manifestly unfair to compel a person to disclose his general dealings on the chance that thereby his opponent may discover something that will support his case (e)

Defamation—Where a statement of claim in an action for slander alleges publication to one named person, and publication also to various other persons unnamed, it is not generally permissible to ask the defendant whether he uttered the words complained of to any person or persons other than the person named, and the names of the other persons if any. Such an interrogatory is a fishing interrogatory, the object being to find out some cause of action against the defendant other than the specific cause of action alleged in the plaint (f)

7. [New. R S C, O 31, r. 7] Any interrogatories may be set aside on the ground that they have been exhibited unreasonably or vexatiously, or struck out on the ground that they are prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous, and any application for this purpose may be made within seven days after service of the interrogatories

Setting aside and striking out interrogatories—A, as trustee in the bankruptcy of C, sues B for a declaration that a piece of land purchased by B and C in 1883 was purchased by B and C in partnership. B denies the partnership. A exhibits interrogatories to B asking for particulars of purchases of land by B and C previous and subsequent to 1883 to prove that they had been co partners in various other purchases similar to that of 1883. The interrogatories are irrelevant and oppressive, and must be struck out. To ask the defendant to take the trouble to go through his books and papers for so many years is vexatious and oppressive (g)

The present rule does not apply where the interrogatories are merely irrelevant. An objection that an interrogatory is irrelevant must be taken in the affidavit in answer (r 6), and is no ground for setting aside the interrogatory under this rule (h)

There is no foundation for the opinion that a person who has a ground for refusing to answer [an interrogatory] is precluded from availing himself of that ground because he has not applied to have the interrogatory struck out (i)

Answers as to matters done by agent or servant of party interrogated—A party to a suit is not excused from answering interrogatories relevant to the question in issue on the ground that they are as to matters which are not within such party's knowledge, but are only within the knowledge of his agents or servants, if derived in the ordinary course of their employment and he is bound to obtain the information from such agents or servants, unless he shows that it would be unreasonable to require him to do so, as that, either such agents or servants have left his employment or it would occasion unreasonable expense or an unreasonable amount of delay or the like (j). A party's banker or solicitor is his agent within the meaning of the above rule (k). But a party is not bound to disclose matters that have come to the knowledge of his agents or servants otherwise than in the ordinary course of their employment (l)

11. [R. S. C., O. 32, r. 11, S. 127.] Where any person interrogated omits to answer, or answers insufficiently, the party interrogating may apply to the Court for an order requiring him to answer, or to answer further, as the case may be. And an order may be made requiring him to answer or answer further, either by affidavit or by viva voce examination, as the Court may direct.

Application for further answer to interrogatories.—An application for a further answer to interrogatories ought to specify the interrogatories or parts of interrogatories to which a further answer is required (m)

"Answers insufficiently."—"With regard to an answer to interrogatories, what the Court has to consider is this simply, whether the answer is insufficient, not to go into the question of the truthfulness of the answer, but to see whether it is sufficient or not, and if it is insufficient, then only can it require a further answer" (n)
"When an answer is couched in a form which makes it embarrassing, that is to say which prevents the person who asks for it from using it without having thrust upon him irrelevant matters as part of it, the answer is insufficient, and the proper course to pursue is to ask that a further answer shall be made" (o)

Privilege.—Where in an answer to interrogatories the party interrogated declines to give further information on the ground of privilege, and the privilege is properly claimed in law, the Court will not require a further answer to be put in, unless it is clearly satisfied, either from the nature of the subject matter for which privilege is claimed, or from statements in the answer itself, or in documents so referred to as to become part of the answer, that the claim for privilege cannot possibly be substantiated. The mere existence of reasonable suspicion which is sufficient to justify the Court in requiring a further affidavit of documents is not enough when a claim for privilege in an answer to interrogatories is sought to be falsified (p). See notes to r. 13, "Conclusiveness of affidavit of documents," on p. 525 below

12. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 12, S. 129] Any party may, without filing any affidavit, apply to the Court for an order directing any other party to any suit to make discovery on oath of the documents which are or have been in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question therein. On the hearing of such application the Court may either refuse or adjourn the same, if satisfied that such discovery is not necessary, or not necessary at that stage of the suit, or make such order, either generally or limited to certain classes of documents, as may, in its discretion, be thought fit: Provided that discovery

13. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 13, S. 129, 2nd para] The affidavit to be made by a party against whom such order as is mentioned in the last preceding rule has been made, shall specify which (if any) of the documents therein mentioned he objects to produce, and it shall be in Form No 5 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

Affidavit of documents

Discovery and production of documents—Having dealt with discovery by way of answer to interrogatories, we now proceed to consider another species of discovery called discovery of documents. The parties to a suit may have in their possession or power documents relating to the matters in question in the suit. These documents may be divided into two classes—

- (i) those which the adversary is entitled to inspect, and
- (ii) those which he is not entitled to inspect

Documents which belong to class (ii) are described and classified below, under the head 'Grounds of objection to production of documents'. As to class (i) of documents we may say that the adversary is entitled to inspection of all documents which do not come within class (ii). Speaking generally, we may say that the adversary is entitled to inspection of all documents which do not of themselves constitute exclusively the party's evidence of his case or title. But how is inspection to be obtained? If A wants to inspect documents in the possession of B which he is entitled to inspect, it is clear that he cannot inspect them unless they are produced by B. A must therefore call upon B to produce the documents. But how can A do this, unless he knows what documents are in the possession or power of B? To enable him to obtain this information, A is entitled to discovery from B of the documents in his possession or power. For this purpose, A may apply to the Court for an order requiring B to make an affidavit, called affidavit of documents, stating what documents are in his possession or power relating to the matters in dispute in the suit. On the order being made B is bound to make his affidavit of documents. If he fails to do so, he will be subjected to the penalties specified in r. 21 below. After the affidavit of documents is made by B disclosing the documents, A may require B to produce for his inspection such of the documents as he is in law entitled to inspect.

Contents of affidavit of documents—A party who is ordered to make his affidavit of documents should set forth in the affidavit all documents which are or have been in his possession or power relating to all matters in question in the suit. As to documents which are not but have been in his possession or power he must state what has become of them and in whose possession they are in order that the opposite party may be enabled to get production from the persons who have possession of them. For the same reason, if there are any documents in which he has a joint property with other persons not before the Court, he must state the names of those persons. Rule 13 provides that every affidavit of documents should also specify which (if the documents therein set forth the declarant objects to produce for the inspection of the opposite party

D. 11, r. 13. together with the grounds of such objection (see App C, Form, No 5) : These grounds are three in number and are given below. The Court will go into these grounds when it is called upon to make an order for production of the documents in a party's possession for the inspection of the opposite party (r 14)

Grounds of objection to production of documents—There are three grounds on which production of documents can be resisted as of right, (1) as disclosing the party's evidence, (2) as being within the doctrine of legal professional privilege, and (3) as being injurious to public interests. We proceed to consider these grounds in detail.

1 A party is not bound to produce for the inspection of his opponent documents which "of themselves evidence exclusively" the party's own case or title (r)—Documents constituting evidence of the party's case or title are not protected unless they are solely or exclusively evidence of it. Where a document is or may be evidence for the adversary as well as the party, the party cannot withhold inspection of it from the adversary (s), although his own evidence may be thus disclosed (t). It is not enough for a man to say such and such documents are the title deeds of his property: it is no ground for refusing their production, if they are necessary to support the adversary's case (u). But a document is protected from production and inspection if it exclusively evidences a party's own case, and does not support the adversary's case (t). To entitle the party to this protection, the privilege must be properly claimed, that is, he must state in his affidavit that the documents constitute evidence of his own case or title, that they contain nothing supporting or tending to support the adversary's case or title, and that they contain nothing impeaching his own case or title (w). As to discovery in actions of ejectment, see notes to r 1, "What interrogatories may be allowed," on p 515 above.

2 A party is not bound to produce any confidential communications between him and his legal adviser (x)—The reason of the rule is to enable persons to obtain legal advice safely and effectually (y). The following are amongst the confidential communications between a client and his legal adviser that are protected from production and inspection: (1) statement of facts drawn up by the client for submission to his solicitor and documents prepared by him for the purpose of providing the solicitor with evidence and information to conduct his case (z), (2) advice given by the solicitor with reference thereto (a), (3) entries in the solicitor's diary of communications between himself and his client (b), (4) memoranda or minutes made by the client of the communications between himself and the solicitor (c), (5) communications between solicitor and counsel with reference to the client's case (d), (6) draft pleadings (e), (7) case laid before counsel for his opinion and other briefs for counsel (f), (8) solicitor's bill of costs, it being virtually the solicitor's history of the transaction in which he was concerned (g) But the communication to be privileged must be of a confidential nature (h) And, further, it must have been made to the legal adviser with a view to obtain professional advice (i) It is not necessary that it should have been made either during an actual or even an expected litigation. A communication with a legal adviser is protected, though it relates to a transaction which is not the subject of litigation provided it be a communication made to him for the purpose of obtaining professional advice (j) But no privilege attaches to communications between a solicitor and his client which are in themselves facts of a criminal or unlawful proceeding (k) Where one of the trustees of a will is a solicitor and acts as the solicitor for the trustees, communications passing between him and his co-trustees, which would be privileged if the solicitor were not a trustee, are privileged notwithstanding that he is a trustee (l) But confidential communications between a principal and an agent who is not a legal agent e.g., a commercial agent, are not privileged, whether they are made after litigation has become imminent and after legal advice has been taken, or even after litigation has commenced (m) See Evidence Act, 1872, ss 126, 129

3 A party is not bound to produce any public official document if its production would be injurious to public interests (n) — This head of privilege applies as a rule when a party to a suit is a public officer. See Evidence Act, 1872, ss 123, 124

In all the three heads of privilege mentioned above, the privilege must be claimed in the affidavit of documents, and the grounds of privilege must be sufficiently disclosed. If the affidavit of documents does not sufficiently raise the claim of privilege, the party may be allowed to put in a further affidavit in support of that claim (o)

Is a party bound to give discovery of documents which will tend to criminate him or expose him to a penalty or forfeiture? No, according to the English law (p) Yes, it would seem, according to the Indian law. See Evidence Act, s 132, where the term 'witness' obviously includes a party to a suit

Conclusiveness of affidavit of documents: Further affidavit — If a party states in his affidavit of documents that he has no documents relating to the matters in question in the suit other than those set forth in the affidavit, his oath is conclusive and the other party cannot cross-examine upon it, nor adduce evidence to contradict it, nor administer interrogatories asking whether he has not in his possession or power documents other than those set forth in his affidavit (q) The oath of the party being conclusive, the Court will not order him to make a further affidavit of documents, though the opponent may state on oath that the party has got other documents in his possession (r), the reason being that in all questions of discovery the oath of the party making the discovery is conclusive as against the oath of the party claiming the discovery (s) The only case in which the Court may require a party to make a further affidavit is where there is a reasonable probability or presumption or even ground for suspicion, derived from certain sources, that he has other relevant documents in his possession (t) The sources into which the Court may look for this purpose are (1) the 11, r. 13. affidavit of documents itself, (2) the documents therein referred to, and (3) the leadings (u). Unless the affidavit is shewn from any of these sources to be insufficient, the general rule is that no further affidavit can be ordered. But this rule is qualified where the basis on which the affidavit has been made turns out to be wrong. Thus if the party making the affidavit has misconceived his case so that the Court is practically certain that if he had acted on a proper view of the law he would have disclosed further documents, then the Court will refuse to recognise the affidavit as conclusive and order a further affidavit (r).

The affidavit of documents is also conclusive as to the facts constituting the grounds of objection to production. Thus if a party sets forth five documents in his affidavit, and objects to produce two of them on the assertion that they relate exclusively to his own title, and that they contain nothing tending to support the adversary's title, the Court will not go behind the affidavit (w), and will not order production, unless the Court is reasonably satisfied or reasonably certain from the sources specified in the preceding paragraph that the nature of the documents as described by the party has been misconceived by the party, or that the documents are of such a character that the party cannot properly make such an assertion (x). Mere suspicion that the documents are not of the character described by the party, though it is sufficient to justify the Court in ordering the party to make a further affidavit of documents (see preceding paragraph), does not entitle the Court to order their production (y).

In a suit for the price of materials supplied to the defendant in which the defence was that the materials were defective, the defendant objected to produce his engineer's report on the ground that it formed evidence of his own case exclusively, but the Court ordered production on the ground that the defendant had set forth the nature of the report in his written statement, and the statement showed that the report was not of the character described by the defendant (z).

Inspection by Court of documents for which privilege is claimed—Where on an application for an order for inspection privilege is claimed for any document, the Court may inspect the document for the purpose of deciding as to the validity of the claim of privilege. See r. 19, sub r. (2).

Sufficient description of documents—It being one of the objects of the affidavit of documents to enable the Court to make an order for production of the documents mentioned therein, the affidavit ought to contain a sufficient description of the documents. A description will be held sufficient, if it is of such a character that if an order for production is made, the Court can determine whether the very documents that were ordered to be produced have actually been produced (a). Where there are numerous documents, the practice is to tie them up in bundles, to schedule the bundles, and number the documents, or otherwise ear mark them in such a way that the other party may ask for those which he wants to see (b).

When a party claims to withhold certain documents from production, although some description may be necessary, he need not give such a description as would enable the adversary to know their contents (c). Thus where privilege is claimed for letters, it is not necessary to state the dates or the names of the writers, nor such other particulars as might enable the opponent to discover indirectly the contents (d).

"Not necessary at that stage of the suit"—See notes to r 6, "Not sufficiently material at that stage, on p 520 above

Relating to any matter in question in the suit—Every document which will throw any light on the case is a document relating to a matter in dispute in the suit (e) though it may not be admissible in evidence (f). A document may not be admissible in evidence, and yet it may contain information which may either directly or indirectly enable the party seeking discovery either (1) to advance his own case or (2) to damage his adversary's case, or which may fairly lead him to a train of inquiry which may have either of these two consequences (g). Every such document must be included in the affidavit of documents and the opposite party is entitled to inspection of such documents. Thus a plaintiff may be required to produce for inspection of the defendant correspondence containing mere matter of opinion by a non legal agent as to the prospect of the plaintiff's success in the case, though the correspondence may not be admissible in evidence (h).

Non-disclosure of documents—Presumption—It is open to a litigant to refrain from producing any document that he considers irrelevant, if the other litigant is dissatisfied, it is for him to apply for an affidavit of documents, and he can obtain inspection and production of all that appears to him in such affidavit to be relevant and proper. If he fails so to do, neither he nor the Court at his suggestion is entitled to draw any inference as to the contents of any such documents. It is for the litigant who desires to rely on the contents of documents to put them in evidence in the usual and proper way, if he fails to do so, no inference in his favour can be drawn as to the contents thereof (i). But where an order for discovery is made upon a party, and it is alleged by him as to some of the documents that they may have been destroyed or may have perished it is incumbent on him to give evidence of diligent search and of failure to find them. If no such evidence is given the presumption arises that the contents of the documents not accounted for are, as regards the issue in dispute, unfavourable to that party (j).

Several plaintiffs or several defendants—Where there are several plaintiffs or several defendants, all must join in making the affidavit of documents unless some specific reasons to the contrary are shown. The fact that some of the parties reside in England is no reason why they should be excused from making such affidavit (k).

Minors and lunatics—The next friend or guardian ad litem as the case may be of a minor or a lunatic may be required to make an affidavit of documents (r 23).

Affidavit of documents from a co-defendant—An affidavit of documents may be required by a defendant from a co-defendant if there is an issue joined between them but not otherwise (l). See notes to r 1, Opposite party, on p 517 above.

Advocate-General—No order can be made against the Advocate-General, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, requiring him to give discovery on oath. Hence no affidavit of documents can be required from the Advocate-General. But an affidavit of documents may be required from the relators (m). See s 92.

Official Liquidator—The Official Liquidator, being an officer of the Court, should not in the absence of special circumstances be required to make an affidavit as to documents in his possession though he is bound to produce to the adverse litigant the documents which the latter requires to see (n)

Marine Insurance—The affidavit of ship's papers which underwriters are entitled to require from the plaintiff in an action on a policy of marine insurance on cargo is not limited to documents in the possession of the plaintiff or other persons interested in the insurance but extends to all material documents in whomsoever's possession they may be (o)

Sealing up parts of documents—Where one part of a document relates to matters in dispute in the suit and another part does not the latter may be sealed up and so concealed from inspection. Similarly where protection from discovery can be claimed for one part of a document and not for another part the part which can be protected may be sealed up (p). In some cases the Judge has ordered the sealed parts to be unfastened in order that he might inspect them himself (q). See r 19 sub r (?)

Production of documents

Production of documents—Discovery of documents must be distinguished from production of documents. The rule as to discovery is the exact contrary of that as to production. You must set out every document in your possession whether you are bound to produce it or not (s). If the document is privileged from production it must be disclosed and privilege claimed for it. This rule provides for production of documents upon oath. In actual practice production is now obtained by notice under r 15 or by order under r 18. The Court has no discretion under this rule to refuse an order for production unless the documents are privileged (t). At the same time no order should be made under this rule against a party unless he has directly or indirectly admitted the document to be in his possession or power (u). Indian Evidence Act, ss 163-164—Under s 163 if A calls for a document which he has given B notice to produce, and the document is produced in Court and inspected by A, B can compel A to put the document in evidence. Under s 164 a party refusing to produce a document cannot use it in evidence without the consent of the other side or the order of the Court.

Waiver of privilege—Where a document is privileged, the fact that a portion of it has been read out by the plaintiff's solicitor to the defendant's solicitor does not amount to a waiver of privilege on the part of the plaintiff as regards the part not read (1).

Partner—One partner of a firm represents the other partners for the purpose of production of documents (w).

Revision—The High Court will not in revision interfere where a lower Court, in the exercise of its discretion, refuses inspection of documents produced before it under this rule (x).

Right to take copies—The inspecting party is entitled to take copies of documents, produced for inspection (y). In a proper case, as where a document is alleged to be forged, the Court may allow a party to a suit to take a photograph of the document in the possession of the other party (z).

15. [R. S. C., O 31, r. 15, S. 131.] Every party to a suit shall be entitled at any time to give notice to any other party, in whose pleadings or affidavits reference is made to any document,

Inspection of documents referred to in pleadings or affidavits to produce such document for the inspection of the party giving such notice, or of his pleader, and to permit him or them to take copies thereof, and any party not complying with such notice shall not afterwards be at liberty to put any such document in evidence on his behalf in such suit unless he shall satisfy the Court that such document relates only to his own title, he being a defendant to the suit or that he had some other cause or excuse which the Court shall deem sufficient for not complying with such notice, in which case the Court may allow the same to be put in evidence on such terms as to costs and otherwise as the Court shall think fit.

Inspection of documents referred to in pleadings and affidavits—Rules 15 to 18 are confined to documents referred to in the pleadings or affidavits. They are intended to give the opposite party the same advantage as if the documents referred to had been fully set out in the pleadings (a).

The machinery for the production of documents is of two kinds. We have first rule 12 of this Order which enables a party with nothing any affidavit to apply for an order directing any other party to the suit to make discovery on oath of the documents in his possession or power relating to any matter in question in the suit. Under that rule, a defendant is not, as a rule, entitled to discovery before he has filed his written statement (b). Rule 15 provides for immediate inspection of any documents which a party has referred to in his pleadings or affidavits. Under this rule, a defendant is entitled to inspection of documents referred to in the plaint, although he has not filed his written statement (c). But he is not entitled, as a rule, to inspection of documents not referred to in the plaint unless he has filed his written statement (d). It has been held in Bombay following Quiller v Heally (e), that r. 15 applies also to documents relied on by the plaintiff (f). But Quiller v Heally was a case of documents referred to in the statement of claim. In a later case (g), the same Court held that r. 15 does not apply to documents other than (1) those referred to in the pleadings, and (2) those relied upon by the plaintiff. The High Court of Calcutta has held that r. 15 does not apply to documents relied upon by the plaintiff (h). Where a document not at all material to the suit is casually referred to in the plaint the defendant is not entitled to inspection thereof (i).

A party who is required under this rule to produce a document referred to in his pleadings for the inspection of the opposite party may claim privilege for the document. It is not to be supposed that where a document is referred to in the pleadings, all privilege with regard to it is gone. The rule only says that "if a party will not produce a document to which he has referred in his pleadings, he shall not afterwards be at liberty to put such document in evidence. That is the penalty. He may prefer to lose part of his claim rather than produce the document. [This] rule does not take away the privilege of the documents, but only prevents them from being put in evidence unless produced (j).

Where a plaintiff by his plaint refers to letters written by himself, he is not bound to produce copies of those letters for the inspection of the defendant, there being no reference to copies in the plaint (k). As regards exhibits to an affidavit, it has been held that "any one who has a right to see an affidavit has also a right to see an exhibit referred to in the affidavit so as to be made part of it, just as if it were annexed to the affidavit" (l). A party is entitled under this rule to inspection of letters referred to in an affidavit of the opposite party, though the affidavit has not been filed, provided it is sworn and a copy thereof is furnished to him (m).

Inspection by party or his pleader—No one is entitled under this rule to inspection except a party or his pleader. The term "party" includes the authorised agent of the party (n). But if such agent was formerly in the employ of the opposite party and in charge of his books, the Court ought not to permit inspection to be taken by him (o).

16. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 16] Notice to any party to produce any documents referred to in his pleading or affidavits shall be in Form No. 7 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

17. [R S C, O 31, r 17, S 132] The party to whom such notice is given shall, within ten days from the receipt of such notice, deliver to the party giving the same a notice stating a time for inspection when notice given a time within three days from the delivery thereof at which the documents, or such of them as he does not object to produce, may be inspected at the office of his pleader, or in the case of bankers' books or other books of account or books in constant use for the purposes of any trade or business, at their usual place of custody, and stating which (if any) of the documents he objects to produce, and on what ground. Such notice shall be in Form No 8 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require

Documents —This rule applies to all documents mentioned in r 15, it is not confined to cases where there has been an affidavit of documents under rr 12 and 13 (p)

Business books —See r 13 below

Usual place of custody —A, who owns a ginning factory at Broach, agrees with B in Bombay to gin B's cotton in his factory at Broach. B sues A in Bombay for damages for breach of the contract, and requires inspection of A's books in Bombay. A offers to give inspection at Broach where the books are kept. B is not entitled to inspection in Bombay, for Broach is the place where the books are kept (q)

18. [R S C, O 31, r 18, Ss 133, 134] (1) Where the party served with notice under rule 15 omits to give such notice of a time for inspection or objects to give inspection, or offers inspection elsewhere than at the office of his pleader, the Court may, on the application of the party desiring it, make an order for inspection in such place and in such manner as it may think fit. Provided that the order shall not be made when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs

(2) Any application to inspect documents, except such as are referred to in the pleadings, particulars or affidavits of the party against whom the application is made or disclosed in his affidavits of documents, shall be founded upon an affidavit showing of what documents inspection is sought, that the party applying is entitled to inspect them, and that they are in the possession or power of the other party. The Court

O 11, rr. 18, 19. shall not make such order for inspection of such documents when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs

'Served with notice —No order for inspection can be made under this rule unless notice has been served under r 15 (r)

Sub-rule (2)—This sub rule provides for the inspection amongst others of documents not disclosed in the affidavit of documents and the Court may under this sub rule direct a party to give inspection of such documents. The principle that an affidavit of documents is conclusive as to the documents set forth therein [see p 525 above] is no answer to an application under this sub rule for inspection of documents not disclosed therein (s)

Appeal—No appeal lies under the Code from an order for inspection. Nor does an appeal lie under cl 15 of the Letters Patent, for an order directing inspection to be given is not a judgment within the meaning of that clause (f)

Bankers Books Evidence Act—In ordering inspection under the Bankers Books Evidence Act, the Court is guided by the general rules regulating the inspection of documents before trial (u)

19. [Nen R S C, O 31, r 19A] (1) Where inspection of any business, books is applied for, the Court may, if it thinks fit, instead of ordering inspection of the original books, order a copy of any entries therein to be furnished and verified by the affidavit of some person who has examined the copy with the original entries, and such affidavit shall state whether or not there are in the original book any and what erasures, interlineations or alterations. Provided that, notwithstanding that such copy has been supplied, the Court may order inspection of the book from which the copy was made

(2) Where on an application for an order for inspection privilege is claimed for any document, it shall be lawful for the Court to inspect the document for the purpose of deciding as to the validity of the claim of privilege

(3) The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit at any time, and whether an affidavit of documents shall or shall not have been already been ordered or made, make an order requiring any other party to state by affidavit whether any one or more specific documents, to be specified in the application, is or are, or has or have at any time been, "

possession or power; and, if not then in his possession, when he parted with the same and what has become thereof. Such application shall be made on an affidavit stating that in the belief of the deponent the party against whom the application is made has, or has at some time had, in his possession or power the document or documents specified in the application, and that they relate to the matters in question in the suit, or to some of them.

Specific documents.—To justify an application under sub r (3), the party making the application must in his affidavit name and specify so that they can be identified, the particular documents of which he desires discovery. It is not sufficient to make a general affidavit based on a priori reasoning that certain classes of documents must be in his opponent's possession or power (1).

20. [R. S C., O. 31, r. 20, S. 135.] Where the party from whom discovery of any kind or inspection is sought objects to the same, or any part thereof, the Court may, if satisfied that the right to the discovery or inspection sought depends on the determination of any issue or question in dispute in the suit, or that for any other reason it is desirable that any issue or question in dispute in the suit should be determined before deciding upon the right to the discovery or inspection, order that such issue or question be determined first, and reserve the question as to the discovery or inspection.

Issue to decide upon right to inspection.—The object of the rule is to enable the Court to decide an issue in a suit as distinguished from the suit itself for the purposes of discovery (2). See notes to r C. Not sufficiently material at that stage on p 520 above.

21. [R. S C., O. 31, r. 21, S. 136.] Where any party fails to comply with any order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection of documents, he shall, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution, and, if a defendant to have his defence, if any, struck out and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and the party interrogating or seeking discovery or inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect, and an order may be made accordingly.

Dismissal of suit.—This rule cannot be applied unless there has been an order for discovery under r 12 or for inspection under r 15 (3). And even where such an order has been made, it is only when the default is wilful, and as a last resort, that the Court should dismiss the suit or strike out the defence (y) If the parties concerned are pardanashin ladies, this should be taken into account before making the order (z) The word "production," which occurred after "discovery" in the corresponding s 13b of the Code of 1882 has been omitted in the present rule It has hence been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (a), and Madras (b), that this rule does not apply to cases where there has been non compliance with an order for production of documents made under r 14 According to a Lahore decision (c), this rule applies also to orders made under r 14

Contempt—Besides the penalty prescribed by this rule, a party before a High Court who has failed to answer or give inspection is liable to be committed for contempt by that Court This power has been conferred on Chartered High Courts by their Letters Patent (d) An order of committal for contempt is appealable according to the Bombay decisions (e), but not according to the Allahabad decisions (f)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule under O 43, s 1 (f) below (g)

22. [New. R. S. C., O. 31, r. 24.] Any party may, at the trial of a suit, use in evidence any one or more of the answers or any part of an answer of the opposite party to interrogatories without putting in the others or the whole of such answer: Provided always that in such case the Court may look at the whole of the answers, and if it shall be of opinion that any others of them are so connected with those put in that the last-mentioned answers ought not to be used without them, it may direct them to be put in.

ORDER XII.

Admissions.

1. [R. S. C., O. 32, r. 1] Any party to a suit may give notice, by his pleading, or otherwise in writing, that he admits the truth of the whole or any part of the case of any other party.

Notice of admission of case

Different kinds of admissions—The object of obtaining admissions is to do away with the necessity of proving facts that are admitted [see Evidence Act, 1872, s. 58] Admissions are of three kinds, namely,—

I Admissions in pleading—

- (1) actual, that is, those contained in the pleadings (O 7, r. 5) or in answer to interrogatories (O 11, r. 22)
- (2) constructive, that is, those which are merely the consequence of the form of pleading adopted (O 8, rr. 3, 4, 5)

II Admissions by agreement

III Admissions by notice

Admissions by notice are dealt with in this Order

The importance of admission consists in the fact that either party may, at any stage of the suit move for judgment on the admissions made by the other side (r. 6)

2. [R. S. C., O 32, r. 2, S 128] Either party may call upon the other party to admit any document, saving all just exceptions, and in case of refusal or neglect to admit, after such notice, the costs of proving any such document shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs, and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed unless such notice is given, except where the omission to give the notice is, in the opinion of the Court, a saving of expense

Notice to admit documents

Admissions between co-defendants.—Admissions between co-defendants, to which the plaintiff is not a party cannot be entered as evidence against the plaintiff (A)

3. [New R. S. C., O 32, r. 3] A notice to admit documents shall be in Form No 9 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require

Form of Notice

4. [New R. S. C., O 32, r. 4] Any party may, by notice in writing, at any time not later than nine days before the day fixed for the hearing, call on any other party to admit, for the

Notice to admit facts

12, purposes of the suit only, any specific fact or facts mentioned 4-6. in such notice. And in case of refusal or neglect to admit the same within six days after service of such notice, or within such further time as may be allowed by the Court, the costs of proving such fact or facts shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs. Provided that any admission made in pursuance of such notice is to be deemed to be made only for the purposes of the particular suit, and not as an admission to be used against the party on any other occasion or in favour of any person other than the party giving the notice. Provided also that the Court may at any time allow any party to amend or withdraw any admission so made on such terms as may be just.

5. [New. R. S. C., O. 32, r. 5] A notice to admit facts shall be in Form No. 10 in Appendix C, Form of admissions and admissions of facts shall be in Form
No. 11 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

6. [New. R. S. C., O. 32, r. 6] Any party may at any stage of a suit, where admissions of fact Judgment on admissions have been made, either on the pleadings, or otherwise, apply to the Court for such judgment or order as upon such admissions he may be entitled to, without waiting for determination of any other question between the parties and the Court may upon such application make such order, or give such judgment, as the Court may think just.

Scope of the rule—This rule is new. It is a reproduction of O. 32 r. 6, of the English Rules. It enables either party at any stage of the suit to move for judgment on the admissions which have been made by the other side. Either party may, by availing himself of this rule get rid of so much of the suit as to which there is no controversy (1). The rule however, is permissive, it does not preclude a party, who does not avail himself of it and proceeds to trial in the ordinary way, from relying at the trial on the admissions made by the opposite party (2).

“The Court may make such order or give such judgment as the Court may think just”—A judgment on admissions is not a matter of right but is in the discretion of the Court. If a case involves questions which cannot be conveniently disposed of on a motion under this rule, the Court may in the exercise of its discretion, refuse the motion (3).

There is no hard and fast rule that where the defendant admits part of the plaintiff's claim and denies the rest of the claim, the Court should, if it gives judgment under this rule for the plaintiff as to the portion of the claim admitted by the defendant, refuse to allow the plaintiff to proceed with the suit as to the remainder of his claim. If there is a clear and unambiguous admission by the defendant as to part of the plaintiff's claim, the Court has jurisdiction to enter judgment as to that part of the plaintiff's claim, and it is in its discretion, having regard to the nature of the case and the allegations contained in the pleadings and the admissions made in Court, whether it should allow the plaintiff to proceed to prove the remainder of his claim (l). A sues B for Rs 6,800. B admits that only Rs 4,500 are due, and alleges as to the rest of A's claim that it was in respect of goods as to which there was a separate arrangement between the parties. The issue as to the balance of A's claim being an issue independent of the other part of the claim, the Court may pass judgment for A for Rs 4,500, and give leave to A to prove his claim to the balance. It is clear that even if the issue as to the balance of A's claim were decided in B's favour, it would not, having regard to B's admission, reduce A's claim below Rs 4,500 (m).

In the United Telephone Co v Donohoe (n), the plaintiffs sued the defendant for infringement of a patent, claiming injunction and damages. The defendant admitted ten instances of infringement, but denied he had committed any others. The plaintiffs thereupon moved for judgment upon the admissions in the pleadings. In the Court of first instance the Vice Chancellor granted an injunction against infringement by the defendant of the plaintiff's patent, but he refused an enquiry as to damages. The Court of Appeal held that the plaintiffs were entitled to an enquiry as to damages, but that it must be limited to the instances of infringement admitted, and that the judgment having been obtained upon a motion for judgment upon the pleadings, the plaintiffs were bound to take the negative as well as the affirmative allegations therein. Referring to this case, Handerson, C.J., said in the Calcutta case cited above (o) that the question whether the Judge, who in the first instance heard the application, would have had jurisdiction to give judgment on the admissions and to allow the plaintiffs to proceed to prove the rest of their claim as to the other alleged infringements, if such an application had been made, was not before the Court.

Admissions on pleadings—Under this rule either party may move for judgment upon admissions of fact made on the pleadings or otherwise. Admissions in pleadings are either actual or constructive. Actual admissions consist of facts expressly admitted either in pleadings or in answer to interrogatories (O 11, r 22). The patent case cited in the preceding paragraph is an instance of actual admissions. Constructive admissions, on the other hand, are admissions which are inferred or implied from pleadings as a consequence of the form of pleading adopted (O 8, rr 3, 4, 5). Constructive admissions usually arise where a defendant has not specifically dealt with some allegation of fact in the plaint of which he does not admit the truth (O 8, r 3), for as we have seen, every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the written statement, will be taken to be admitted except as against persons under disability (O 8, r 5). Constructive admissions also arise where a defendant denies an allegation of fact in the plaint evasively and does not answer the point of substance (O 8, r 4).

Illustrations.

1. A, alleging that he and B having agreed to carry on certain business in partnership, draft articles of partnership were prepared and approved by B, and that they both thereupon proceeded with the partnership undertaking, sues B for a declaration that he and B were partners and claims that the partnership may be dissolved. B in his written statement admits that he agreed to enter into partnership as alleged, but adds that "the terms of the arrangement between himself and the plaintiff were not definitely agreed upon as alleged." This is an evasive denial of the fact of partnership (O. 8, r. 4), and it will therefore be construed as an admission by B of the partnership. A is therefore entitled under this rule to a decree for dissolution of partnership, without adducing any evidence to prove the partnership. But though the written statement will be construed as an admission of the fact of partnership it will not be construed as an admission of the terms of the partnership. B may therefore claim an inquiry by the decree as to the terms of the arrangement of partnership, and if such inquiry is claimed, the Court will direct it by its decree (p).

2. A defendant, by his written statement, simply "puts the plaintiff to proof of the several allegations in the plaint." The denial not being specific (O. 8, r. 3), the defendant will be deemed to have admitted the facts alleged in the plaint (O. 8, r. 5), so as to entitle the plaintiff to a decree under this rule without adducing any evidence in support of his case (q).

In applying the present rule in India, it is to be noted that, where a plaintiff applies for a decree upon constructive admissions in a written statement, the Court may in its discretion refuse to pass the decree, if it thinks, in the special circumstances of the case, that the defendant must not be held to have admitted facts not specifically denied in his written statement (r). See the proviso to r. 5 of O. 8, and notes thereto, p. 452.

An order on admissions on the pleadings will not be made, unless the admissions are clear and unequivocal (s). Further, a plaintiff moving for judgment on admissions in the defendant's written statement must have a clear case, and the mere admission by the defendant of a right asserted by the plaintiff, but which has in fact no existence in law, is not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment establishing his right (t).

Judgment upon admissions made otherwise than on pleadings.—A judgment may be given under this rule not only upon admissions made on the pleadings, but upon admissions otherwise made. The words "or otherwise" in this rule are not confined to admissions made under r. 1 or r. 4 of this Order, but are of general application, and justify the giving of an immediate judgment when an admission is made by letter of facts which show that the defendant has no defence to the action (u). A judgment may be given under this rule even upon a verbal admission where the same is clearly proved (v).

Orders which may be made under this rule.—This rule "was framed for the express purpose, that if there was no dispute between the parties, and if there was on the pleadings such an admission as to make it plain that the plaintiff was entitled to a particular order, he should be able to obtain that order at once upon motion. It must, however, be such an admission of facts as would show that the plaintiff is clearly entitled to the order asked for, whether it be in the nature of a decree, or a judgment, or anything else. The rule was not meant to apply when there is any serious question of law to be argued. But if there is an admission on the pleadings which clearly entitled the plaintiff to an order, then the intention was that he should not have to wait, but might at once obtain any order which could have been made on an original hearing of the action. (u) An order amounting to what is called a preliminary decree in this Code the plaintiff should wait until the action was set down for trial, the Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to an order directing the usual inquiries upon the admissions of the defendant, and that he was not bound to wait (x) [O 20, r 18]. Such orders have also been made in administration actions (y) [O 20 r 13], in actions for dissolution of partnership (z) [O 20, r 15], in actions for partnership accounts (a) [O 20, r 15], in actions for accounts between principal and agent (b) [O 20, r 16], and in actions for the execution of the trusts of a settlement (c).

Practice—Motions in England under the corresponding English rule are brought on upon an ordinary motion day after notice to the other side. As to form of application see Daniel's Ch. Forms, 270. The practice in England is when an order is made amounting to what is called a preliminary decree in this Code, to adjourn the further hearing of the case without requiring any further prior hearing, the words generally used in the order being, "and without requiring any further prior hearing than this motion of the said cause, the further hearing of the said cause is adjourned" (d). See Seton on Decrees Vol I, p 399, form No 5.

'At any stage'—A plaintiff may move for judgment upon admissions in the written statement at any stage of the suit and notwithstanding that he has joined issue on the defence (e).

Co-plaintiffs.—An application under this rule for an order against a defendant on admissions of fact must be made by all the plaintiffs, and not merely by some of them. If the application is made by some of the plaintiffs only, it must be refused (f).

Withdrawal of admission—Where it is shown that an admission was made by mistake, the party may be allowed to amend his pleading under O 6, r 17, for the purpose of withdrawing it upon such terms as to the Court may appear just (g).

Appeal—An order rejecting an application for judgment on admission is a 'judgment' within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent, and is appealable (h).

7. [New. R. S C., O. 32, r. 7.] An affidavit of the pleader or his clerk, of the due signature of any admissions made in pursuance of any notice to admit documents or facts, shall be sufficient evidence of such admissions, if evidence thereof is required.

8. [New R. S. C., O. 32, r. 8] Notice to produce documents shall be in Form No. 12 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require. An affidavit of the pleader, or his clerk, of the service of any notice to produce, and of the time when it was served, with a copy of the notice to produce, shall in all cases be sufficient evidence of the service of the notice, and of the time when it was served.

Notice to produce documents.—It is always desirable, when a document is in the possession or power of the opposite party, to give him notice to produce the same, for unless such notice is given secondary evidence of the document cannot be given see Indian Evidence Act, 1872, s. 65, cl (a), and s. 66.

9. [New R. S. C., O. 32, r. 9.] If a notice to admit or produce specifies documents which are not necessary, the costs occasioned thereby shall be borne by the party giving such notice.

ORDER XIII.

Production, Impounding and Return of Documents.

r. 1.

1. [Ss 138, 140] (1) The parties or their pleaders shall produce, at the first hearing of the suit, all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power, on which they intend to rely, and which has not already been filed in Court, and all documents which the Court has ordered to be produced.

(2) The Court shall receive the documents so produced: provided that they are accompanied by an accurate list thereof prepared in such form as the High Court directs.

"Shall produce at the first hearing."—This rule does not exclude the discretion of the Court to receive documentary evidence at a subsequent stage of the proceedings (i) See r 2 below

Form of list of documents produced by parties.—See App H, Form no 5

(1) Imambandi v Muteaddi (1918) 45 I A 73, 80 81 43 Cal 878, 888 889, 47 I C 511

2. [S. 139.] No documentary evidence in the possession or power of any party which should have been but has not been produced in accordance with the requirements of rule 1 shall be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof; and the Court receiving any such evidence shall record the reasons for so doing.

Effect of non production of documents

"Unless good cause is shown."—This rule has been enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents. But no suspicion can attach to certified copies of public documents, such as records of Government or records of judicial proceedings. Such copies therefore may be received in evidence though they have not been produced at the first hearing (j). The rule, however, is not confined to public documents only. The Court may, in its discretion, admit other documents also at a subsequent stage of the proceedings (l). See notes to r 1 above

Appeal.—The fact that further documentary evidence is admitted after the first hearing is not a good ground of appeal (l). Nor can an appellate Court reject evidence admitted by the Court of first instance simply on that ground (m)

3. [S. 140.] The Court may at any stage of the suit reject any document which it considers irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible, recording the grounds of such rejection.

Rejection of irrelevant or inadmissible documents

Rejection of inadmissible documents.—Questions as to the admissibility of evidence should be decided as they arise, and should not be reserved until judgment in the case is given (n)

When a Court is doubtful as to whether a document is admissible or not, and its decision is open to appeal, it is better to admit than to exclude the document (o)

4. [S. 141.] (1) Subject to the provisions of the next following sub-rule, there shall be endorsed on every document which has been admitted in evidence in the suit the following particulars, namely:—

Endorsements on documents admitted in evidence

- (a) the number and title of the suit,
- (b) the name of the person producing the document,
- (c) the date on which it was produced, and
- (d) a statement of its having been so admitted;

and the endorsement shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

(2) Where a document so admitted is an entry in a book, account or record, and a copy thereof has been substituted for the original under the next following rule, the particulars aforesaid shall be endorsed on the copy and the endorsement thereon shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

"Or initialled"—These words which occur after the word "signed" in sub rr (1) and (2), are new

"Shall be endorsed"—The rule as to endorsement of documents admitted in evidence must be strictly followed. In Sadul Hasan Khan v Hashim Ali Khan (p), where some of the documents were not so endorsed, the Judicial Committee said "Their Lordships, with a view of insisting on the observance of the wholesome provisions of this rule, will, in order to prevent injustice, be obliged in future on the hearing of Indian appeals to refuse to read or permit to be used any document not endorsed in the manner required." Documents admitted on the record without the making the endorsement prescribed by this rule cannot be regarded as being legally before the Court (q).

5. [S 141 A.] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1891, where a document admitted in evidence in the suit is an entry in a letter-book or a shop-book or other account in current use, the party on whose behalf the book or account is produced may furnish a copy of the entry.

Endorsements on copies of admitted entries in books accounts and records

(2) Where such a document is an entry in a public record produced from a public office or by a public officer, or an entry in a book or account belonging to a person other than a party on whose behalf the book or account is produced, the Court may require a copy of the entry to be furnished—

- (a) where the record, book or account is produced on behalf of a party, then by that party, or
- (b) where the record, book or account is produced in obedience to an order of the Court acting of its own motion, then by either or any party.

(3) Where a copy of an entry is furnished under the foregoing provisions of this rule, the Court shall, after causing the copy to be examined, compared and certified in manner mentioned in rule 17 of Order VII, mark the entry and cause the book, account or record in which it occurs to be returned to the persons producing it.

6. [S 142] Where a document relied on as evidence by either party is considered by the Court to be inadmissible in evidence, there shall be endorsed thereon the particulars mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of rule 4, sub rule (1), together with a statement of its having been rejected, and the endorsement shall be signed or initialled by the Judge

7. [S 142A] (1) Every document which has been admitted in evidence, or a copy thereof where a copy has been substituted for the original under rule 5, shall form part of the record of the suit

Recording of admitted and returned rejected documents

(2) Documents not admitted in evidence shall not form part of the record and shall be returned to the persons respectively producing them

8. [S 143] Notwithstanding anything contained in rule 5 or rule 7 of this Order or in rule 17 of Order VII, the Court may, if it sees sufficient cause, direct any document or book produced before it in any suit to be impounded and kept in the custody of an officer of the Court, for such period and subject to such conditions as the Court thinks fit

Court may order any document to be impounded

9. [S 144] (1) Any person, whether a party to the suit or not, desirous of receiving back any document produced by him in the suit and placed on the record shall, unless the document is impounded under rule 8, be entitled to receive back the same,

Return of admitted documents

(a) where the suit is one in which an appeal is not allowed, when the suit has been disposed of, and

(b) where the suit is one in which an appeal is allowed, when the Court is satisfied that the time for preferring an appeal has elapsed and that no appeal has been preferred or, if an appeal has been preferred, when the appeal has been disposed of

O. 13, r. 9-11. Provided that a document may be returned at any time earlier than that prescribed by this rule if the person applying therefor delivers to the proper officer a certified copy to be substituted for the original and undertakes to produce the original if required to do so

Provided also that no document shall be returned which by force of the decree, has become wholly void or useless

(2) On the return of a document admitted in evidence, a receipt shall be given by the person receiving it

' Shall be entitled '—On an application being made by a party under this rule the documents are necessarily returned if the application is in the proper form the act of returning the documents is purely ministerial (s)

' And undertakes to produce the original if required to do so '—These words are new

10. [S 137] (1) The Court may of its own motion and may in its discretion upon the application of any of the parties to a suit send for, either from its own records or from any other Court, the record of any other suit or proceeding and inspect the same

Court may send for papers from its own records or from other Courts

(2) Every application made under this rule shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be supported by an affidavit showing how the record is material to the suit in which the application is made and that the applicant cannot without unreasonable delay or expense obtain a duly authenticated copy of the record or of such portion thereof as the applicant requires, or that the production of the original is necessary for the purposes of justice

(3) Nothing contained in this rule shall be deemed to enable the Court to use in evidence any document which under the law of evidence would be inadmissible in the suit

11. [S 140] The provisions herein contained as to documents shall, as far as may be, apply to all other material objects producible as evidence

Provisions as to documents applied to material objects

ORDER XIV

Settlement of Issues and Determination of Suit on Issues of Law or on Issues agreed upon.

1. [S 146] (1) Issues arise when a material proposition of fact or law is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other O. 14

(2) Material propositions are those propositions of law or fact which a plaintiff must allege in order to show a right to sue or a defendant must allege in order to constitute his defence

(3) Each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other shall form the subject of a distinct issue

(4) Issues are of two kinds (a) issues of fact, (b) issues of law

(5) At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall, after reading the plaint and the written statements, if any, and after such examination of the parties as may appear necessary, ascertain upon what material propositions of fact or of law the parties are at variance, and shall thereupon proceed to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to depend

(6) Nothing in this rule requires the Court to frame and record issues where the defendant at the first hearing of the suit makes no defence

Of the framing of issues—The plaint and written statement in a suit are called pleadings [O 6 = 1] Section 58 of the Evidence Act enacts that no fact need be proved at the hearing which a party has admitted by his pleadings unless the Court requires proof thereof. Admissions on pleadings may be either actual or constructive (i) [O 8 rr 3 & 5] Issues are to be framed in respect only of those facts which have been alleged by one party and either denied or not admitted by the other party (u) They must however be confined to material facts that is to points on which the right decision of the case depends. The practice of raising issues which do not state the main questions in the suit but only various subsidiary matters of fact upon which there is not agreement between the parties is embarrassing and must be avoided (i) Where an issue though in terms covering the main question in the cause, does not sufficiently direct the attention of the parties to the main questions of fact necessary to be decided, and a party may have been prevented from adducing evidence, a fresh issue may be directed to try the principal question of fact (u)

1, 14, r. 1.

"The duty of raising issues rests under the Code of Civil Procedure on the Court, and it would be unsafe to presume from the failure of the Court to raise the necessary issues an intention of the defendant to admit the facts which the plaintiff was bound to prove" (x) See also notes to O 8, r 5

Omission to frame issues—Where a material fact stated in the plaint is denied or is not admitted in the written statement, the Court must frame an issue on the fact denied. What is the consequence if no issue is framed on the fact? The answer depends on the following considerations. If, though no issue is framed on the fact, the parties adduce evidence on the fact and discuss it before the Court, and the Court decides the point, as if there was an issue framed on it, the decision will not be set aside in appeal on the ground merely that no issue was framed on the fact. The reason is that mere omission to frame an issue is not fatal to the trial of a suit (y). But if the point denied in the written statement is not tried at all, or where it is tried, it is tried imperfectly so as to cause failure of justice, the case will in appeal be remanded for a re trial after framing the necessary issue (z). In other words, omission to frame an issue is an irregularity which may or may not affect the disposal of a suit on the merits. If it does, the appellate Court should remand the case for a new trial to the lower Court after framing the necessary issue. If it does not, the appellate Court should not remand the case (s 89). In Mitna v Syud Fuzl (a) their Lordships of the Privy Council said—

"In this case the omission to raise the issues was brought before the notice of the appellate Court, the appellate Court expressed its regret, and their Lordships are glad to observe that it did express its regret, that the Principal Sudder Ameen had omitted to settle the issues. The [appellate] Court, however, nevertheless conceived that it was not under any positive obligation to remand the case but seeing that the parties had gone to trial knowing what the real question between them was, that the evidence had been taken, and that the conclusion had been in the opinion of the appellate Court correctly drawn from that evidence, they thought it within their competence to affirm that decision without sending the case back for a re trial. Their Lordships sitting here are not prepared to say that the Court had not power to do so under the 354th section [now O 41, r 23] of the Civil Procedure Code. Their Lordships think that, under all the circumstances of the case, substantial justice having been done, there has not been that fatal mis trial of the cause which vitiates all the proceedings and renders a new trial necessary."

Delay in raising an issue—In Sayad Muhammad v Fattah Muhammad (b), their Lordships of the Privy Council said "It does not quite appear at what period of the suit the question of the sound disposing mind of the Diwan was raised, nor is it very material except in one respect. Whatever system of pleading may exist, the sole object of it is that each side may be fully alive to the questions that are about to be argued, in order that they may have an opportunity of bringing forward such evidence as may be appropriate to the issue, and it may perhaps be not altogether immaterial to observe that the question of the capacity of the Diwan does not appear to have been prominently raised, at all events in the first instance. Their Lordships are, however, of opinion that they must assume that the question of his capacity was open upon the proceedings sufficiently to give each Court below the right to form a judgment upon the matter."

Wrong issue—If the first Court frames and tries wrong issues, the appellate Court should lay down the proper issues, and remand the case for a new trial (c). It is, however, different where the first Court frames a wrong issue for decision, but it appears from the judgment that there is a finding on the point which would have been raised if the correct issue had been framed. In such a case the appellate Court may not remand the case (d).

- (x) Ganoo v Shri Dee Dikhar car (1902) 26 M I A 260.

Relief not founded on pleadings—As a rule relief not founded on the pleadings should not be granted. But where the substantial matters which constitute the title of all the parties are touched, though obscurely, in the issues, and they have been fully put in evidence, and have formed the main subject of discussion in the Court, the Court may grant a relief though it may not be founded on the pleadings. Thus in a case where the plaintiff and the defendant each claims to be exclusively entitled to certain lands, the Court may, if the above conditions are satisfied, declare each to be entitled to a moiety (e). Similarly the Court may in a suit for ejectment pass a decree for redemption (f). But if a case not alleged by the plaintiff in his pleading is disclosed in the evidence, the Court should not deal with it, unless a specific issue is raised on it and the defendant is given an opportunity of meeting it (g).

Variance between pleading and proof—"It is impossible to conclude parties by inferences of fact which are not only not consistent with the allegations that are to be found in the plaint, which constitute the case which the defendant has to meet, but which are in reality contradictory of the case made by the plaintiff. It will introduce the greatest amount of uncertainty into judicial proceedings if the final determination of causes is to be founded upon inferences at variance with the case that the plaintiff has pleaded, and, by joining issue in the cause, has undertaken to prove" (h). The above principle applies only to cardinal facts and cardinal issues, and not to subordinate facts and issues based thereon. In applying that principle the whole of the circumstances must be taken into account and carefully scrutinized (i).

2. [S. 146, 6th para.] Where issues both of law and of fact arise in the same suit, and the Court is of opinion that the case or any part thereof may be disposed of on the issues of law only, it shall try those issues first, and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit, postpone the settlement of the issues of fact until after the issues of law have been determined.

"Or any part thereof."—These words are new

3. [S. 147] The Court may frame the issues from all or any of the following materials:—

Materials from which issue may be framed

- (a) allegations made on oath by the parties, or by any persons present on their behalf, or made by the pleaders of such parties;

- O. 14,
rr. 3-5.
- (b) allegations made in the pleadings or in answers to interrogatories delivered in the suit,
- (c) the contents of documents produced by either party

Issues not to be inconsistent with pleadings—Issues whether raised from the allegations in the pleadings or from other materials should not be inconsistent with the pleadings (j). Thus if A sues B to set aside a document on the ground that it was not executed by him and that it is a forgery, the Court should not raise an issue as to whether the document was executed under coercion or undue influence. The latter issue pre-supposes that the document was executed while the plaintiff's case as set up in the plaint is that it was not executed by him at all (l). But the plea that the document in suit was obtained by the defendant by fraud is not inconsistent with the plea that it was obtained by undue influence. Therefore where fraud is pleaded in the plaint and the plaintiff's counsel alleges at the hearing that the plaintiff was subjected to undue influence the Court may allow issues both as to fraud and undue influence (i).

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order refusing to frame an issue asked for by a party to a suit (m).

It was held by the High Court of Madras in one case that an appeal lies under cl 10 of the Letters Patent from an order made at the settlement of issues fixing a distant date for the hearing of the suit (n). But this decision has been disapproved in later cases (o).

4. [S 148] Where the Court is of opinion that the issues cannot be correctly framed without the examination of some person not before the Court or without the inspection of some document not produced in the suit, it may adjourn the framing of the issues to a future day, and may (subject to any law for the time being in force) compel the attendance of any person or the production of any document by the person in whose possession or power it is by summons or other process.

5. [S 149] (1) The Court may at any time before passing a decree amend the issues or frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit, and all such amendments or additional issues as may be necessary for determining the matters in controversy between the parties shall be so made or framed.

(2) The Court may also, at any time before passing a decree, strike out any issues that appear to it to be wrongly framed or introduced.

pleas both of fraud and undue influence—a highly objectionable procedure indeed.

Durga Prasad v Mall Karjuna (1901) 27 Mad. 358

Sub-rule (1)—The first part of sub rule (1) leaves it to the discretion of the Court to amend the issues or frame additional issues as appears from the word "may" while the latter part makes it imperative on the Judge to amend the issues and frame additional issues as appears from the word "shall" (p)

May amend the issues or frame additional issues—A Judge may under the first part of sub rule (1) amend an issue or frame an additional issue, even if the issue proposed to be added or amended relates to a matter not disclosed by the pleadings. This however can only be done under special circumstances when no injustice would be done to either party (q). It follows from this that a Judge should not frame any additional issue so as to make for either party a case which he had no intention of making for himself (r). Nor should he frame an additional issue so as to convert a suit or defence of one character into a suit or defence of a different and inconsistent character. Thus if a case B for damages for wrongful occupation of his land, treating him as a trespasser he should not be allowed to raise an additional issue claiming rent if the land from B treating him as his tenant (s). But if a suit is brought on a mortgage and it transpires at the hearing that the witnesses to the mortgage deed were not present at its execution but had put their names on the document on the acknowledgment by the executant of his signature it is perfectly competent to the Judge to frame an additional issue as to whether the deed of mortgage was valid under s 59 of the Transfer of Property Act though the invalidity of the deed is not set up as a defence in the written statement. Every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognizance of questions which cut at the root of the subject matter of controversy between the parties (t). See notes to r 3 above, Issues not to be inconsistent with the pleadings.

At any time before passing the decree—An additional issue may be raised even after the close of the arguments on the case (u).

6. [S 150.] Where the parties to a suit are agreed as to the question of fact or of law to be decided between them, they may state the same in the form of an issue, and enter into an agreement in writing that, upon the finding of the Court in the affirmative or the negative of such issue,—

Questions of fact or law may by agreement be stated in form of issue

(a) a sum of money specified in the agreement or to be ascertained by the Court, or in such manner as the Court may direct, shall be paid by one of the parties to the other of them, or that one of them be declared entitled to some right or subject to some liability specified in the agreement,

(b) that they have a substantial interest in the decision of such question as aforesaid, and

(c) that the same is fit to be tried and decided, it shall proceed to record and try the issue and state its finding or decision thereon in the same manner as if the issue had been framed by the Court, and shall, upon the finding or decision on such issue pronounce judgment according to the terms of the agreement, and, upon the judgment so pronounced, a decree shall follow

Provided that, where the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, the parties or their pleaders are present and none of them objects

(2) Where the finding is not sufficient for the decision, the Court shall postpone the further hearing of the suit, and shall fix a day for the production of such further evidence, or for such further argument as the case requires

4 [S 155] Where the summons has been issued for the final disposal of the suit and either
Failure to produce evidence party fails without sufficient cause to produce the evidence on which he relies, the Court may at once pronounce judgment, or may, if it thinks fit, after framing and recording issues, adjourn the suit for the production of such evidence as may be necessary for its decision upon such issues

ORDER XVI

Summoning and Attendance of Witnesses

1 [S 159] At any time after the suit is instituted, O. 1
 the parties may obtain, on application to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf, summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents
Summons to attend to give evidence or produce documents

Difference between the old section and the present rule—This rule corresponds with s 159 C P C 188² except as to the time for application for witness summons, for which see next paragraph

Time for application for witness-summons—Under s. 159 of the Code of 1882, the application for summonses to witnesses was to be made after the writ of summons was delivered or sent for service on the defendant and before the day fixed in the summons for the appearance of the defendant. Under the present rule, the application may be made at any time after the institution of the suit.

Whether witness-summons can be refused.—A party is entitled as of right to summonses to witnesses (w). So long as the application is made after the institution of the suit, the Court is bound to issue the summons. It does not matter that the party had himself originally undertaken to bring his witnesses and has failed to do so (x). Nor does it matter that the application is made at such a late stage of the proceedings that the witnesses cannot be present in Court before the final disposal on the suit (y). The Court may in either of these cases refuse to adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witnesses, but it has no power to refuse to issue summonses (z). The only case in which the Court has power to refuse to issue summonses is where the application is not made bona fide, as where a decree holder attaches property belonging to a muth, and, on the head of the muth objecting to the attachment, applies to summon him as his own witness with the sole object of putting pressure upon him, by requiring his personal attendance in Court, to relinquish his claim. In such a case the Court may, in the exercise of its inherent power to prevent the abuse of its own process [s 151], refuse to issue the summons (a).

Remedy of party when witness-summons refused—Where a party applies for summonses to witnesses, but the application is refused, he cannot appeal from the order of refusal. He must wait until the suit is disposed of, and if the decree in the suit goes against him, he may appeal from the decree, and set forth the refusal of the lower Court to issue summonses as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal (s 105). If the appellate Court finds that the refusal has injuriously affected the decision of the case, it may set aside the decree, and direct the lower Court to issue the summonses, but if it finds that the refusal has not injuriously affected the decision, it should not interfere with the decree (b) [see s 99].

Form of summons to witnesses.—See Schedule I, App. B, No 13

2. [S. 160.] (1) The party applying for a summons shall, before the summons is granted and within a period to be fixed, pay into Court such a sum of money as appears to the Court to be sufficient to defray the travelling and other expenses of the person summoned in passing to and from the Court in which he is required to attend, and for one day's attendance.

(2) In determining the amount payable under this rule, the Court may, in the case of any person summoned to give evidence as an expert,

Sub rule (2) is new

Chartered High Courts—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49 r 3, cl (3)]

Travelling and other expenses—A witness is entitled under this rule only to travelling expenses and other expenses of a similar nature but he is not entitled to compensation for loss of time (c) The right to claim travelling expenses is not lost merely because the witness did not apply for them before giving his evidence The reason is that a witness is entitled to demand his travelling expenses at any time even after he has given his evidence (d) If a witness is summoned by the plaintiff he is entitled to claim his travelling expenses from the plaintiff though he may not be examined by the plaintiff and is examined by the defendant as his witness (e) See also the undermentioned case (f)

Remedy of witness if travelling expenses not paid—The only remedy is by an application to the Court that heard the case no separate suit will lie to recover such expenses (g)

Default on part of process server—Where a plaintiff pays into Court the process fee and the expenses of his witnesses but the summons is not served owing to default on the part of the process server it is illegal to dismiss his suit for want of proof in the absence of the witnesses (h)

Sale of moveable property—Under this rule if the expenses are not deposited only the moveable property of the defaulting party may be attached and sold but not his immoveable property (1)

5 [S 163] Every summons for the attendance of a person to give evidence or to produce a document shall specify the time and place at which he is required to attend, and also whether his attendance is required for the purpose of giving evidence or to produce a document, or for both purposes, and any particular document which the person summoned is called on to produce, shall be described in the summons with reasonable accuracy.

Where hearing postponed—When a witness attends Court in pursuance of a summons on the day specified in the summons but the case is not reached on that day it is not necessary to issue a fresh summons. He need only be warned that his attendance will be required on the day to which the hearing may be postponed (2)

6 [S 164] Any person may be summoned to produce a document, without being summoned to give evidence, and any person summoned merely to produce a document shall be deemed to have complied with the summons if he causes such document to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same

(3) In lieu of or at the time of issuing such proclamation, or at any time afterwards, the Court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant, either with or without bail, for the arrest of such person, and may make an order for the attachment of his property to such amount as it thinks fit, not exceeding

If witness appears attachment may be withdrawn

(b) where he has failed to attend at the time and place named in a proclamation issued under the last preceding rule, that he had no notice of such proclamation in time to attend, the Court shall direct that the property be released from attachment, and shall make such order as to the costs of the attachment as it thinks fit

12 [S 170] The Court may, where such person does not appear, or appears but fails so to satisfy the Court, impose upon him such fine not exceeding five hundred rupees as it thinks fit, having regard to his condition in life and all the circumstances of the case, and may order his property or any part thereof, to be attached and sold or, if already attached under rule 10, to be sold for the purpose of satisfying all costs of such attachment, together with the amount of the said fine, if any.

Procedure if witness fails to appear

Provided that, if the person whose attendance is required pays into Court the costs and fine aforesaid, the Court shall order the property to be released from attachment

Scope of the rule—R 11 applies to the case where the person served appears and satisfies the Court. The present rule applies to the case where the person does not appear or appears but fails to satisfy the Court (1)

Rules as to witnesses to apply to parties summoned

Duty of suitors to give evidence on their own behalf—In Lal Kunwar v Chiranjee La' (m) their Lordships of the Privy Council severely condemned the practice followed in some parts of India of advocates omitting to call their own client as a witness in the hope of forcing their opponents to call him as their witness in order that they themselves may have the opportunity of cross examining the own client when called by the other side. Referring to this practice their Lordships said "It is a vicious practice unworthy of a high toned or respectable system of advocacy. It must embarrass and perplex judicial investigation and it is to be feared too often enables fraud, falsehood or chicane to baffle justice."

ORDER XVII.

Adjournments

1. [S 156] (1) The Court may, if sufficient cause is shown, at any stage of the suit grant time to the parties or to any of them, and may from time to time adjourn the hearing of the suit.

Court may grant time and adjourn hearing

- (2) In every such case the Court shall fix a day for the further hearing of the suit, and may make such order as it thinks fit with respect to the costs occasioned by the adjournment:

Costs of adjournment

Provided that, when the hearing of evidence has once begun, the hearing of the suit shall be continued from day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the Court finds the adjournment of the hearing beyond the following day to be necessary for reasons to be recorded.

May adjourn—This rule gives a discretion to the Court to grant time to the parties and to adjourn the hearing of a suit. On the one hand, no adjournment should be granted if no sufficient cause is shown (n). On the other hand, the Court should not refuse an adjournment if sufficient cause is shown (o). What is sufficient cause is a question of fact in each case.

Payment of costs as a condition precedent—A sues B for damages. At the hearing of the suit B applies for an adjournment. The hearing is adjourned on the terms that B should pay Rs. 50 to A for costs before the next hearing, and that if he fails to do so, his defence would be struck off and the suit would be proceeded with ex parte. B fails to pay the costs - The Court may proceed with the suit ex parte (p). But the Court cannot do so if payment of costs is not made a condition precedent to the hearing of B's case (q).

2. [S. 157.] Where, on any day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned, the parties or any of them fail to appear, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Order IX or make such other order as it thinks fit.

"One of the modes directed by Order IX."—The effect of this rule is to assimilate the procedure in cases where there is default of appearance at an adjourned hearing with that in cases where there is such default at the first hearing. The result is that though a party may have appeared at the first hearing, but fails to appear at an adjourned hearing, the procedure laid down in Order III will apply, that is to say, where a plaintiff fails to appear at an adjourned hearing, the Court may make an order dismissing the suit under this rule and O 9, r 8, and the plaintiff may, if so advised, then apply under this rule and O 9, r 9 for an order to set the dismissal aside (r), and where a defendant fails to appear at an adjourned hearing the Court may pass a decree ex parte under this rule and O 9, r 6, and the defendant may, if so advised, then apply under this rule and O 9, r 13, for an order to set it aside (d). If both parties fail to appear at the hearing, the Court may make an order dismissing the suit under this rule and O 9, r 3, and the plaintiff may then, if so advised, either bring a fresh suit, or apply for an order to set the dismissal aside under this rule and O 9, r. 4 (f).

After a decree has been passed, the Court has no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit under this rule and O 9, r 8, for plaintiff's default. The reason is that after a decree has once been made in a suit, the suit cannot be dismissed unless the decree is reversed on appeal (v).

Or make such other order as it thinks fit —It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the words "may proceed" show that it is not obligatory on the Court to proceed in the manner directed by Order 9, rather, the Court should in each case exercise its discretion as to whether it should proceed under that Order or make some other order. It has thus been held that it is a bad exercise of discretion if an order is made dismissing the suit under this rule and O 9, r 8, when the plaintiff has at the first hearing made a case which, if uncontradicted, would entitle him to a decree, but neither he nor his pleader appears at an adjourned hearing. The Court should in such a case proceed to decide the case on its merits, and not dismiss it for default of appearance (1). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the words "or make such other order as it thinks fit" do not empower the Court to dispose of the suit on the merits, but enable the Court merely to grant a further adjournment.

and if the Court is not inclined to grant a further adjournment the only course left open to the Court is where the plaintiff does not appear to dismiss the suit under this rule and O 9 r 8 and where the defendant fails to appear to pass an ex parte decree against him under this rule and O 9 r 6 (u). Where the Court refuses a further adjournment, and passes an order but omits to state whether the order was made under this rule or r 3 it must be taken that the order was made under this rule (x).

"Adjourned hearing"—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the word adjourned in this rule refers to an adjournment upon the application of parties granted under r 1 and not an adjournment necessitated by the rules of the Court relating to the regulation of its own business (y).

"Fail to appear"—See notes to O 9 r 9. Appearance on p 498 above. It cannot be said that a decree passed against a defendant is an ex parte decree within the meaning of O 9 r 6 where at an adjourned hearing of a part heard suit the plaintiff's case being closed and the defendant's case being partially entered the defendant's plea applies for an adjournment and on the application being refused he withdraws from the case and a decree is passed against the defendant on the merits. It is not open to the defendant in such a case to apply to have the decree set aside under this rule and O 9 r 13 (z).

Remedy—See notes to the next rule under the head Remedy.

3 [S 158] Where any party to a suit to whom time has been granted fails to produce his evidence, or to cause the attendance of his witnesses, or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit for which time has been allowed, the Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forthwith.

Court may proceed not withstanding the party fails to produce evidence etc.

Scope of the rule—The provisions of this rule do not apply unless—

- (1) the hearing is adjourned on the application of a party to the suit as distinguished from an adjournment by the Court of its own motion (a);
- (2) the adjournment is granted to enable the party to produce his evidence, or to cause the attendance of his witnesses or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit; and
- (3) the party fails to perform any of the acts for which the adjournment was granted within the time allowed by the Court.

Where before the hearing of a suit has commenced the plaintiff fails to appear on an adjourned date the Court should proceed under r 2 and not under this rule that is it should dismiss the suit under O 9 r 8 so as to give the plaintiff an opportunity of having the dismissal set aside under O 9 r 9 (b).

Any other act—A sues B to recover possession of certain lands. B contends that the suit is not properly valued. The Court thereupon appoints a commissioner, on the application of A to value the land and directs A to pay into Court Rs 100 being the commissioner's fee, within a specified time. If A fails to make the payment within

O. 17, r. 3. the prescribed time, the Court may proceed under this rule. The payment of the commissioner's fee is an act necessary to the further progress of the suit within the meaning of this rule (c)

Procedure to be followed under this rule—Rule 2 applies to cases where the hearing is adjourned, no matter for what purpose, and the parties or any of them fail to appear at the adjourned hearing. The present rule contemplates cases where the hearing is adjourned at the instance of a party for some one or other of the purposes specified in the rule, and the party fails to perform the specified act or acts for which the adjournment was granted within the time allowed by the Court. In such a case the rule says, ‘the Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forthwith’. These words do not mean that the Court may dismiss the suit if the plaintiff is in default, or pass a decree against the defendant if the defendant is in default (d). What the words mean is that the Court may further adjourn the hearing or, it may, without granting any further adjournment, proceed to try the suit and take such evidence as may be tendered by the parties and decide the suit on the merits (e). Thus where an adjournment is granted to the plaintiff to amend the plaint but the plaintiff fails to amend the plaint, the Court should not dismiss the suit, but decide it on the merits (f). The word “forthwith” means ‘without granting any further adjournment’. Contrast the words “at once pronounce judgment” in O 10 r 4.

Remedy—Where a suit is disposed of under the first part of r 2 above it is open to the party aggrieved by the order to proceed under O 9, r 11 or O 9 r 13 in the case case may be [see notes to r 2. One of the modes directed by Order 9']. But where a case is decided under the present rule, the decision amounts to a decree, and the remedy of the party aggrieved is by way of appeal (g) or by way of review (h). As to what points may be taken in appeal and what on the application for review, see the under mentioned case (i).

Case where default under this rule is coupled with default of appearance under rule 2—If the hearing of a suit is adjourned on the application of the plaintiff to enable him to produce his evidence and if on the date to which the hearing is adjourned the plaintiff does not appear, should the Court proceed under this rule or under rule 2? It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the Court should in such a case proceed under this rule (j). (In the Allahabad case there were sufficient materials to enable the Court to proceed to judgment.) The High Court of Madras has held that the Court should in such a case proceed under rule 2 and dismiss the suit for default of appearance so that the plaintiff may have an opportunity to apply under O 9, r 9, to set aside the dismissal (k). This view is in accordance with the earlier decisions of the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts (l). In recent cases, however, the latter Courts have held that where an adjournment is granted at the instance of a party for any of the purposes stated in r 3, and either party fails to appear at the adjourned hearing, the Court should, if there are materials enabling it to decide the suit, act under this rule and not rule (2) (m). In a recent Bombay case the Court took a view similar to that taken by the Madras Court (n). If the Court does not do so, and dismisses the suit for default in appearance, then according to the Patna High Court the dismissal must be treated as one under r 2 of this Order (o). The High Court of Lahore has held that if there be no sufficient materials on the record to enable the Court to proceed to judgment as required by this rule, the Court should proceed under r 2 above (p), but if there are sufficient materials, it should proceed under this rule (q). And this seems to be the correct view.

"To whom time has been granted"—Where a party has paid the process fee for summoning witnesses, but the witnesses are not served, and the Court adjourns the hearing to enable its officer to serve the summonses, the adjournment does not amount to granting of time within the meaning of this rule and the rule does not apply (r).

Execution proceedings—The provisions of this Order do not apply to execution proceedings (s).

ORDER XVIII.

Hearing of the Suit and Examination of Witnesses.

1. [S 179, Expln] The plaintiff has the right, to begin unless the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff and contends that either in point of law or on some additional facts alleged by the defendant the plaintiff is not entitled to any part of the relief which he seeks, in which case the defendant has the right to begin.

Right to begin—The right to begin is to be determined by the rules of evidence. As a general rule the party on whom the burden of proof rests should begin. Sections 101-114 of the Indian Evidence Act I of 1872 deal with burden of proof. Section 102 of the Act provides that the burden of proof lies on that party who would fail if no evidence at all were given on either side. Thus if A sues B for the recovery of a piece of land of which B is in possession, the burden of proof lies on A, for if no evidence were given on either side, B would be entitled to retain his possession.

"Unless the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff"—"Facts" mean 'all material facts'. Thus where a defendant admits only some of the facts alleged by the plaintiff, it does not give him the right to begin (t).

Some of the defendants supporting plaintiff's case—Where there are several defendants and some of them support the plaintiff's case, the rule is that the plaintiff and such of the defendants as support his case wholly or in part must address the Court and call their evidence in the first place and then the other party; that is, the other defendants should address the Court and call their evidence (x)

Hearing of arguments—If in a case where a party, having an opportunity of addressing the Court does not do so the judgment cannot be set aside because it was delivered without hearing arguments (y)

3 [S 180, 3rd para] Where there are several issues the burden of proving some of which lies on the other party, the party beginning may, at his option, either produce his evidence on those issues or reserve it by way of answer to the evidence produced by the other party, and, in the latter case, the party beginning may produce evidence on those issues after the other party has produced all his evidence, and the other party may then reply specially on the evidence so produced by the party beginning, but the party beginning will then be entitled to reply generally on the whole case.

4 [S 181] The evidence of the witnesses in attendance shall be taken orally in open Court in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge.

Witness to be examined in open Court

Evidence of witnesses—It is the duty of the Judge to examine every witness tendered unless it appears clearly that the object of summoning a large number of witnesses is to obstruct or delay justice () It is not right for the Judge to select a certain number of witnesses and send away the rest because he thinks that they would only prove the same facts as those already deposed to (a) or because he is satisfied on the evidence already recorded (b) If he does so, the appellate Court may remand the case with a direction to him to take the evidence of the witnesses tendered by the party, but not examined by the Judge (c)

Evidence shall be taken "in open Court"—As to the examination of witnesses on commission see Order 26 below

5 [S 182] In cases in which an appeal is allowed the evidence of each witness shall be taken down in writing, in the language of the Court, by or in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge, not ordinarily in the form of question and answer, but in that of a narrative, and, when completed, shall be read over in the presence of the Judge and of the witness, and the Judge shall, if necessary, correct the same, and shall sign it

Not evidence shall be taken in appealable cases

Chartered High Courts—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction (O 49, r 3, cl (4))

Presence of parties—Where evidence is taken in the absence of the opposite party, it will be rejected by the Court of appeal, if the objection to the reception of the evidence was taken before the Court trying the suit If no such objection was taken the appellate Court would not remand the case especially if the other evidence in the case is sufficient to support the decision of the lower Court (d) See Indian Evidence Act, 1872, s 167

"Shall be read over."—There is a difference of opinion whether, if the deposition is not read over to the witness as required by this rule or interpreted to him as required by r 6 below, it is admissible in evidence in trials for perjury and forgery, it being held in some cases that the deposition is not admissible in evidence (e), while in others

15 [S 191] (1) Where a Judge is prevented by death, transfer or other cause from concluding the trial of a suit, his successor may deal with any evidence or memorandum taken down or made under the foregoing rules as if such evidence or memorandum had been taken down or made by him or under his direction under the said rules and may proceed with the suit from the stage at which his predecessor left it

(2) The provisions of sub-rule (1) shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to evidence taken in a suit transferred under section 24.

Chartered High Courts—This rule so far as it relates to the manner of taking evidence does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of the ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49, r 3, cl (4)]

16 [S 192] (1) Where a witness is about to leave the jurisdiction of the Court, or other sufficient cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court why his evidence should be taken immediately, the Court may upon the application of any party or of the witness, at any time after the institution of the suit, take the evidence of such witness in manner hereinbefore provided

(2) Where such evidence is not taken forthwith and in the presence of the parties, such notice as the Court thinks sufficient of the day fixed for the examination, shall be given to the parties

(3) The evidence so taken shall be read over to the witness, and, if he admits it to be correct, shall be signed by him, and the Judge shall, if necessary, correct the same and shall sign it, and it may then be read at any hearing of the suit.

17. [S 193.] The Court may at any stage of a suit recall any witness who has been examined and may (subject to the law of evidence for the time being in force) put such questions to him as the Court thinks fit.

Court may recall and examine witness

18 [New] The Court may at any stage of a suit inspect any property or thing concerning which any question may arise.

Power of Court to inspect

View by Judge—This rule does not entitle a Judge to put a view in the place of evidence. Thus in an action of deceit brought on the ground that a particular article used by the defendant is a colourable imitation of the plaintiff's, the conclusion of the Judge on a view by him of the two articles—such as two rival omnibuses, that the defendant's article is calculated to deceive, is not sufficient by itself to support an injunction. The Judge must be satisfied by independent evidence that there is at least a reasonable probability of deception (1).

ORDER XIX.

Affidavits.

1. [S. 194] Any Court may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing, on such conditions as the Court thinks reasonable:

Power to order any point to be proved by affidavit

Provided that where it appears to the Court that either party bona fide desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and that such witness can be produced, an order shall not be made authorizing the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit.

2 [S 195]

Power to order attendance of deponent for cross examination

(1) Upon any application evidence may be given by affidavit, but the Court may, at the instance of either party, order the attendance for cross examination of the deponent

(2) Such attendance shall be in Court, unless the deponent is exempted from personal appearance in Court, or the Court otherwise directs

3 [S 196]

Matters to which affidavits shall be confined

(1) Affidavits shall be confined to such facts as the deponent is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory applications, on which statements of his belief may be admitted provided that the grounds thereof are stated

(2) The costs of every affidavit which shall unnecessarily set forth matters of hearsay or argumentative matter, or copies of or extracts from documents, shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be paid by the party filing the same

Grounds of belief—The grounds of belief must be stated with sufficient particularity to enable the Court to judge whether it would be safe to act on the deponent's belief (m)

ORDER XX.

Judgment and Decree

1 [S 198]

Judgment to be pronounced in open Court

The Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day, of which due notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders

See s 33 above

Chartered High Courts—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts as to the exercise of the ordinary or extraordinary or general civil jurisdiction [O 49 r 3 cl (c)]

Evidence taken before another Judge—As a general rule judgment must be given upon evidence taken by the Judge before himself and not upon evidence taken before another person (i) In the three following cases the Judge may give judgment

(m) Pudman v. Pankaj Lal (1910) 37 Cal 439

(n) Agarwal v. Agarwal (1917) 4 B 11

upon evidence recorded by some other Judge or person —

- (1) Under O 18 r 15 when the Judge who has heard the evidence is prevented by death transfer or other cause from concluding the trial of the suit
- (2) Under O 26 r 1 where the evidence has been taken by a commissioner of a witness residing within the jurisdiction who is exempted under the Code from attending the Court or is unable to attend from sickness or infirmity
- (3) Under O 26 r 4 where the evidence has been taken by a commissioner of a witness residing beyond the jurisdiction and of other persons specified in the rule

Notice to parties—Notice should be given in the manner prescribed by s 140. A judgment delivered without notice to parties is not a judgment pronounced within the meaning of this rule (o)

Judgment not pronounced—A judgment not pronounced in Court does not operate as a judgment. It operates only as minutes or memoranda made by the Judge who wrote it (p). The posting of a notice on the notice board of the Court announcing the result of a case is not a sufficient compliance with this rule (q)

Non-compliance with rules 1, 2 and 3—Where a judgment is not pronounced dated or signed in conformity with the requirements of the Code it constitutes a mere irregularity within the meaning of s 99. It affords no ground for reversal in appeal of the decree based on it (r)

Power to pronounce judgment written by Judge's predecessor

2 [S 199] A Judge may pronounce a judgment written but not pronounced by his predecessor

Chartered High Courts—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 47, r 3 cl (5)]

Written by his predecessor—It does not matter that the judgment was written by the Judge's predecessor or after he had taken leave or left the judicial post which he occupied when he heard the case or after he had been transferred (s). The fact that the transferred officer himself pronounces the judgment does not make any difference (t)

May pronounce—The word may leaves a Judge the option to pronounce a judgment according to his own view of the case though it may be different from the judgment written by his predecessor who heard the case (u)

Non-compliance with rules 1, 2 and 3—See notes to s 1 above under the same head

Shall not afterwards be altered—A decree cannot be altered by a Court even with the consent of parties except in the modes prescribed by this rule (1) Where a District Judge delivered a judgment in open Court but suspended the use of the decree pending the production by the plaintiff of a certificate of succession, it was held that it was not competent to the Judge to cancel the judgment and deliver another judgment inconsistent with the first (u) Where it is held by one Judge that the Court fee paid on a plaint is sufficient his successor has no power to alter that judgment and hold that it is insufficient (x)

Amendment—S 152 enables the Court to correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes or errors arising from accidental slips in judgments, decrees or orders See p 309 above

Review—See s 114 and O 47 r 1

Non-Compliance with rules 1, 2 and 3—See notes to r 1 above under the same head

4 [S 203] (1) Judgments of a Court of Small Causes need not contain more than the points for determination and the decision thereon.

Judgments of Small Cause Courts

(2) Judgments of other Courts shall contain a concise statement of the case, the points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reasons for such decision

Judgments of other Courts

Chartered High Courts—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 40 r 3 cl (5)]

Judgments of Small Cause Court—Where the judgment of a Small Cause Court after setting out a number of issues, merely stated, I find all the issues for the plaintiff it was held that it was not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of sub rule (1) and the judgment was set aside and the case remanded to the lower Court for being disposed of according to law (y)

Court invested with Small Cause Court powers—A Court invested with Small Cause Court powers is governed by sub r (1) and not sub r (2) (1)

Unintelligible Judgment—Where a judgment is unintelligible, the appellate Court may set it aside and remand the case to the lower Court for the recording of judgment according to law after hearing afresh the arguments of pleaders (a)

5. [S 204] In suits in which issues have been framed, the Court shall state its finding or decision, with the reasons therefor, upon each separate issue, unless the finding upon any one or more of the issues is sufficient for the decision of the suit

Court to state its decision on each issue

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49, r 3 cl (c)]

Object of Judgment—The proper object of a judgment is to support by the most cogent reasons that suggest themselves the final conclusion at which the Judge has conscientiously arrived. That object is defeated by the Judge elaborately recording the fluctuations of his mind from day to day in reference to the witnesses, the evidence, and the arguments. It is a substantial objection to a judgment that it does not dispose of the question as it was presented by the parties, e.g. when it finds a particular signature to be a forgery which both sides admit to be genuine (b)

6. [S 206, 1st and 2nd paras., S 221] (1) The decree shall agree with the judgment, it shall contain the number of the suit, the names and descriptions of the parties, and particulars of the claim, and shall specify clearly the relief granted or other determination of the suit

Contents of decree

(2) The decree shall also state the amount of costs incurred in the suit, and by whom or out of what property and in what proportions such costs are to be paid.

(3) The Court may direct that the costs payable to one party by the other shall be set off against any sum which is admitted or found to be due from the former to the latter.

Chartered High Courts—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49, r 3, cl (5)]

How decrees should be drawn up—Decrees should be drawn up in such a way as to make them self contained and capable of execution without referring to any other document (c)

Sub-rule (3)—This sub rule corresponds to s 221 of the Code of 1882

Power to amend decree—See s 102 and notes thereto

7. [S 205] The decree shall bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced, and, when the Judge has satisfied himself that the decree has been drawn up in accordance with the judgment he shall sign the decree.

Date of decree

Date of decree—The period of limitation for an appeal from a judgment runs from the date on which it is pronounced and not from the date on which it is written and signed (d)

8 [New] Where a Judge has vacated office after pronouncing judgment but without signing the decree, a decree drawn up in accordance with such judgment may be signed by his successor or, if the Court has ceased to exist, by the Judge of any Court to which such Court was subordinate

Procedure where Judge has vacated office before signing decree

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 40 r 3 cl (5)]

9 [S 207] Where the subject matter of the suit is immoveable property, the decree shall contain a description of such property sufficient to identify the same, and where such property can be identified by boundaries by numbers in a record of settlement of survey, the decree shall specify such boundaries or numbers

Decree for recovery of immoveable property

Decree for possession of land—A decree for possession of land carries with it possession of account books and other papers relating to the management of the land (e)

10 [S 208] Where the suit is for moveable property, and the decree is for the delivery of such property, the decree shall also state the amount of money to be paid as an alternative if delivery cannot be had

Decree for delivery of moveable property

Decree for delivery of moveable property—This rule contemplates only for the recovery of specific movable property referred in arts 48 and 49 of the Limitation Act (f)

11 [S 210] (1) Where, and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money, the Court may for any sufficient reason at the time of passing the decree order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments, with or without interest

Decree may direct payment by instalment

(d) Nagarmal v. Lakshminarayan (1900) 11 Ind 711 | (e) Sri Bhairavi v. Derrao (1884) 11 Ind 145

notwithstanding anything contained in the contract under O.2 which the money is payable.

(2) After the passing of any such decree the Court may, on the application of the judgment-debtor and with the consent of the decree-holder, order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments on such terms as to the payment of interest, the attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor, or the taking of security from him, or otherwise, as it thinks fit.

Order, after decree for payment by instalments—

Old section—This rule corresponds with s. 210 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars—

- (1) The words "shall be postponed" in sub rules (1) and (2) are new.
- (2) The words "notwithstanding anything contained in the contract under which the money is payable" in sub rule (1) are also new, see notes below under those words.

"In so far as the decree is for the payment of money"—This rule applies to money decrees only and not to mortgage decrees (g).

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the contract under which the money is payable."—These words are new. They have been added to over-ride the ruling of the Bombay High Court in Ragho v. Dipchand (h). In that case it was held that if A executed a bond to B payable by instalments, with a proviso that if default was made in payment of any one of the instalments, the whole amount should become due and payable forthwith, and if on default being made by A in payment of any one instalment B sued A to recover the whole of the balance due, the Court could not, at the time of passing the decree, order the amount decreed to be paid by instalments, for to do so, it was said, would be inconsistent with the terms of the bond. Under the present rule the Court has the power to order payment of the amount decreed by instalments, notwithstanding the terms of the bond.

Interest—Where a decree is made payable by instalments under sub rule (1), the rate of interest is in the discretion of the Court (i).

Sub-rule (2)—Sub rule (1) applies where an application is made by the judgment debtor at the time of passing the decree. Sub rule (2) applies where an application is made after the passing of the decree. In the latter case, no order can be made for payment by instalments, nor can payment be postponed except with the consent of the decree holder.

Taking of security.—Immoveable property given by the judgment debtor as security under sub rule (2) may be realized by the decree holder in execution, and he is not obliged to have recourse to a regular suit for the purpose. O. 34, r. 14, does not apply to a charge created by the decree itself or one created by the act of parties subsequent to the decree. It applies only to a charge existing prior to the decree (j).

O.20, r.12.

Mesne profits—The expression "mesne profits" is defined in s 2 cl (12), as meaning those profits which the person in wrongful possession of property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits, but shall not include profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession.

The claim for mesne profits is virtually a claim for damages. Hence there is no rigid rule for determining the amount of mesne profits, and the amount must be assessed in every case by a proper exercise of judicial discretion (u). "Mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case." Hence in calculating mesne profits, payments of revenue and cesses made by the defendant should be deducted (v). But the costs of collecting the rents or profits should not be allowed to the defendant, unless he entered on the property in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right (w).

Wrongful possession by the defendant is the very essence of a claim for mesne profits and the very foundation of a decree therefor. Hence a defendant cannot be rendered liable for mesne profits during the period the property was under attachment by virtue of an order made under s 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code (x). Where a defendant has been in wrongful possession for a certain period, and is subsequently dispossessed by a third party, the defendant can only be charged with mesne profits for the period for which he was in wrongful possession. He cannot be charged with mesne profits that have accrued due subsequently to his dispossession, though the person who dispossessed him may not have done anything to recover the rents or profits (y). The reason is that if a defendant is dispossessed by a third party, he cannot be said to have even impliedly received the profits, nor could he with ordinary or extraordinary diligence have received them. But where a defendant who has been in wrongful possession abandons the land without giving notice to the plaintiff, he will be held liable for mesne profits (z).

Where a person buys immoveable property from a defendant pending a suit against him for recovery of the property and for mesne profits, and a decree is eventually passed against the defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to recover mesne profits not only from the defendant, but from the purchaser pendente lite (a). The purchaser, however is liable only from the date on which he enters into possession (b).

Interest forming part of mesne profits—It will be seen from the definition of mesne profits, that mesne profits consist of two items, namely, (1) profits of the property and (2) interest on such profits. Hence if a decree awards mesne profits, but says nothing about interest, that is, interest on the profits, it must be construed as including not only the profits, but the interest on such profits. It has been so held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Griah Chunder v Shoshi Shikarekar (c). If the profits were payable from month to month, the interest thereon would be calculated month by month, and if they were payable from year to year, the interest would

Limitation—An application by a judgment debtor under this rule for payment of the amount of a decree by instalments should be made within 6 months from the date of the decree [Limitation Act 1908 Sch I art 175]

Execution of decree payable by instalments—In the case of an ordinary instalment decree, that is, a decree payable by instalments on certain specified date the period of limitation as regards each instalment (which is 3 years) runs from the date on which the instalment becomes due (1). In the case of a decree payable by instalments, with a proviso that if default be made in payment of any one of the instalments the whole of the decretal amount should become due and recoverable in execution limitation runs from the date of the first default (2). But if the judgment debtor pays the over due instalment and the decree holder accepts it without protest limitation will run from the date of the next default. Strictly speaking the first default being waived it ceases to be a default in law, and the next default then becomes the first default (m).

12 [Ss 211, 212] (1) Where a suit is for the recovery of possession of immoveable property and for rent or mesne profits, the Court may pass a decree—

Decree for possession and mesne profits

- (a) for the possession of the property,
- (b) for the rent or mesne profits which have accrued on the property during a period prior to the institution of the suit or directing an inquiry as to such rent or mesne profits,
- (c) directing an inquiry as to rent or mesne profits from the institution of the suit until—
 - (i) the delivery of possession to the decree holder
 - (ii) the relinquishment of possession by the judgment debtor with notice to the decree holder through the Court or
 - (iii) the expiration of three years from the date of the decree,

Inquiry as to mesne profits no longer a proceeding in execution—The provisions relating to mesne profits in the Code of 1852 were contained in ss 211, 212 and 244. Those provisions have now been re-cast. The definition of mesne profits is relegated to s 2 cl 12. At the same time an important alteration has been made as regards procedure in determining the amount of mesne profits. Under the Code of 1882, the amount of mesne profits was to be determined in execution proceedings (n) O.20, [see C P C, 1882, s 244, cls (a) and (b)] Under the present rule the amount must be determined by the decree and not in execution. An inquiry as to mesne profits under this rule is not a proceeding in execution but a proceeding in continuation of the original suit (o).

Decree for possession and mesne profits—In a suit for the recovery of possession of immovable property, the plaintiff may claim mesne profits which have accrued due during a period prior to the institution of the suit. He may also claim mesne profits which have accrued due subsequent to the institution of the suit [see s 11, p 60, para (2)]. The decree to be passed in such a case will now be as follows—

- 1 That the defendant do put the plaintiff in possession of the property specified in the schedule annexed to the decree [To this extent the decree is final]
- 2 { That the defendant do pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. with interest thereon at the rate of per cent per annum to the date of realization on account of mesne profits which have accrued due prior to the institution of the suit [To this extent the decree is final]
Or [where accounts have to be taken of the mesne profits]—
That an inquiry be made as to the amount of mesne profits which have accrued due prior to the institution of the suit [To this extent the decree is preliminary see s 2 Expln]
- 3 That an inquiry be made as to the amount of mesne profits from the institution of the suit until the point of time specified in cl (c) of the section [To this extent the decree is preliminary] See Sch I, App D, Form No 23

The inquiry referred to above may be held before an officer of the Court appointed in that behalf who must report to the Court the result of the inquiry. After that is done, and the parties have been heard on the report, a final decree will be passed in respect of the mesne profits. It has been held that where a preliminary decree under this rule has either intentionally or inadvertently omitted to direct an enquiry into future mesne profits, the Court has no power to direct such enquiry by its final decree (p).

Joint Hindu family—This rule applies not only where the plaintiff sues for possession of the whole of an immovable property, but also where he sues for possession of a portion thereof. But the portion must be a specified portion, that is, a portion to the profits whereof the plaintiff is exclusively entitled. Hence the provisions of this rule do not apply to a suit for partition by a member of a joint Hindu family, for until partition no member is entitled to a specific share of the property (q). This does not mean that a member of a joint Hindu family is not entitled in a suit for partition to claim his share of the rents and profits of the joint property from which he may have been wrongfully excluded. He is entitled to such share (r), but the Court in deciding upon his claim is to be guided not by the provisions of this rule, but by the rules of Hindu law relating to partition (s). See notes to r 18 below.

Procedure—Where an appellate Court disagreeing with the lower Court, finds that the plaintiff is entitled to possession, it should pass a preliminary decree for possession and direct an inquiry as to mesne profits, it is not proper merely to remit the case to the lower Court for disposal (t).

Mesne profits—The expression “mesne profits” is defined in s 2, cl. (1) as meaning those profits which the person in wrongful possession of property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits, but shall not include profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession

The claim for mesne profits is virtually a claim for damages. Hence there is no rigid rule for determining the amount of mesne profits, and the amount must be assessed in every case by a proper exercise of judicial discretion (u) “Mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case” Hence in calculating mesne profits, payments of revenue and cesses made by the defendant should be deducted (v) But the costs of collecting the rents or profits should not be allowed to the defendant, unless he entered on the property in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right (w)

Wrongful possession by the defendant is the very essence of a claim for mesne profits and the very foundation of a decree therefor. Hence a defendant cannot be rendered liable for mesne profits during the period the property was under attachment by virtue of an order made under s 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code (x) Where a defendant has been in wrongful possession for a certain period, and is subsequently dispossessed by a third party, the defendant can only be charged with mesne profits for the period for which he was in wrongful possession. He cannot be charged with mesne profits that have accrued due subsequently to his dispossession, though the person who dispossessed him may not have done anything to recover the rents or profits (y) The reason is that if a defendant is dispossessed by a third party, he cannot be said to have even impliedly received the profits, nor could he with ordinary or extraordinary diligence have received them. But where a defendant who has been in wrongful possession abandons the land without giving notice to the plaintiff, he will be held liable for mesne profits (z)

Where a person buys immoveable property from a defendant pending a suit against him for recovery of the property and for mesne profits, and a decree is eventually passed against the defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to recover mesne profits not only from the defendant, but from the purchaser pendente lite (a) The purchaser, however, is liable only from the date on which he enters into possession (b)

Interest forming part of mesne profits.—It will be seen from the definition of mesne profits, that mesne profits consist of two items, namely, (1) profits of the property and (2) interest on such profits. Hence if a decree awards mesne profits, it says nothing about interest, that is, interest on the profits, it must be construed as including not only the profits, but the interest on such profits. It has been so held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Grish Chunder v Shoshi Shikarwar (c). If the profits were payable from month to month, the interest thereon would be calculated month by month, and if they were payable from year to year, the interest would be calculated year by year. Calculating in this manner, the interest on the profits Q. 20, must be allowed up to the date of ascertainment of the aggregate amount of mesne profits (d), but in no case should it be allowed for a period longer than three years from the date of the decree (e). The reason is that the item of interest we are now considering forms an integral part of "mesne profits," and since mesne profits cannot be allowed for a period longer than three years from the date of the decree, the interest forming part thereof cannot also be allowed for a longer period. It must not, however, be supposed that because "mesne profits" are defined as meaning "profits" plus "interest on such profits," therefore the Court must always allow interest on such profits. Mesne profits, as stated above, are in the nature of damages which the Court may award according to the justice of the case. And since the item of interest now under consideration forms part of mesne profits, it is equally in the discretion of the Court whether to allow such interest or not (f). For the same reason, the Court may, while allowing the claim for interest, direct the interest to be calculated not month by month or year by year, but in a manner less advantageous to the plaintiff. The mode of calculation indicated in the beginning of this paragraph applies only to those cases where the decree is silent as to the mode in which interest is to be calculated.

After the aggregate amount of mesne profits is ascertained, the plaintiff may apply to the Court for a final decree for the amount so ascertained, and for interest on that amount, and the Court may award interest at such rate as it thinks fit (g). The date from which interest may be allowed is the date of the preliminary decree, and not the date on which the amount is ascertained (h). The rate of interest allowed is usually 6 per cent (i). See a. 34.

Application for ascertaining future mesne profits.—The right to apply for ascertainment of future mesne profits arises not on the date of the decree directing an inquiry as to such profits, but on the happening of any one of the three events specified in sub rule (1) (c) (j).

Notice through Court.—The notice of relinquishment of possession should be given through the Court. But where a judgment debtor gives such notice directly to the decree holder, and the latter does not say that he will not accept the notice unless it was sent to him through the Court, he is not entitled to mesne profits after the date of the notice (k).

"Three years from the date of the decree"—"Decree" means a decree capable of execution. Thus if an appeal is preferred from a decree for mesne profits, and the decree is confirmed in appeal, the period of three years is to be computed from the date of the appellate decree (l). Similarly, if a decree for mesne profits is taken to the Privy Council and is confirmed, the period of three years is to be counted from the date of the King's order in Council (m). See notes to a. 36, "What decree may be executed."

When a decree awards possession with mesne profits to be ascertained in an inquiry, but specifies no time down to which mesne profits are to be computed, the decree cannot be construed as giving mesne profits for a period longer than three years from the date of the decree (*) The plaintiff therefore is not entitled to mesne profits for more than three years from the date of the decree, though possession was not delivered to him until after the expiration of the three years note the words "whichever event first occurs" in sub r (1), cl (c) But in no case can mesne profits be awarded to the plaintiff for any period subsequent to an offer by the defendant to restore him possession (d)

Limitation.—As regards mesne profits accrued due prior to the institution of the suit, the defendant is only liable for the mesne profits accrued due during the three years before the date of the suit. A claim for mesne profits during a period preceding the three years next before the date of the suit is barred under the Limitation Act 1908, sch I, art 109 (p)

Burden of proof.—The burden of proving the amount of mesne profits actually received is on the person who has received them, while that of proving the amount of profit that might with ordinary diligence have been received is on the person claiming them (q).

Order supplementing preliminary decree.—Where, after the passing of a preliminary decree for accounts, an order is made determining the period and the mode of accounting, the order itself is a preliminary decree and appealable as such (r) See notes to s 97, "Two preliminary decrees," on p 266 above

Appeal.—Under the Code of 1882 [s 241], the amount of mesne profits was determined in execution proceedings, and the decision determining mesne profits being an order in execution proceedings, was appealable as a decree Under the present rule the amount of mesne profits is to be determined by the decree itself, and a party aggrieved by the determination as to mesne profits may now prefer an appeal from the decree (s)

Res Judicata.—Where after the passing of a preliminary decree under this rule, the plaintiff applies in execution for ascertaining the mesne profits, wrongly believing that such profits are to be ascertained in execution proceedings, and the application is dismissed, the dismissal does not operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent application in the suit for ascertaining the mesne profits (t)

(2) In the administration by the Court of the property of any deceased person, if such property proves to be insufficient for the payment in full of his debts and liabilities, the same rules shall be observed as to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors and as to debts and liabilities proveable, and as to the valuation of annuities and future and contingent liabilities respectively, as may be in force for the time being within the local limits of the Courts in which the administration-suit is pending with respect to the estates of persons adjudged or declared insolvent, and all persons, who in any such case would be entitled to be paid out of such property, may come in under the preliminary decree, and make such claims against the same as they may respectively be entitled to by virtue of this Code

Judicature Act, 1875, s 10—The words of the present rule are almost the same as s 10 of the Judicature Act of 1875

Administration-suit—Where a person dies leaving a will, it is his executor that administers his estate, and where he dies intestate, it is his administrator that administers his estate. The administration of the estate of a deceased person consists, first, in paying his funeral expenses, next his debts, and then the legacies under his will (if any). The residue of his estate is then to be divided among the residuary legatees under his will, or amongst his heirs if he has left no will. In an administration suit, it is the Court that takes upon itself to a large extent the functions of an executor or administrator, and administers the estate of the deceased.

The following persons may maintain an administration-suit—

(1) A creditor of the deceased when his claim is not paid off by the legal representatives of the deceased. But though a creditor may bring an administration suit, he must bring the suit on behalf of himself and the other creditors (u)

(2) A legatee, whether specific or pecuniary, where the legacy is not paid to him by the legal representatives of the deceased

(3) Next of kin of the deceased, for their share in the estate of the deceased.

(4) An executor or administrator, when there are disputes amongst the legatees or next of kin as to the amount of the property left by the deceased and the amount to which the legatees or next of kin are entitled (Waller and Elgood on Administration Actions, pp 24-31)

Note that this sub rule does not apply all the rules and principles of bankruptcy to insolvent estates but only the rules in respect of the three heads enumerated above (c)

(2) Where the Court has adjudicated upon rival claims to pre-emption, the decree shall direct,— take effect in respect of a proportionate share of the property including any proportionate share in respect of which the claim of any pre-emptor failing to comply with the said provisions would, but for such default, have taken effect, and,

- (b) if and so far as the claims decreed are different in degree, that the claim of the inferior pre-emptor shall not take effect unless and until the superior pre-emptor has failed to comply with the said provisions

Difference between the old section and the present rule—This rule corresponds with s 214, C P C, 1882 except in the following particulars —

1 The words whose title thereto shall be deemed to have accrued from the date of such payment are new. See notes below under those words

2 Sub rule (2) is also new. See notes below 'Sub rule (2) Rival pre-emptors'

Pre-emption—The right of pre-emption can only be exercised in respect of immovable property. A and B, both Mahomedans, are co sharers of a house. If B sells his share to X for Rs 500, A is entitled to pre-empt B's share on payment of Rs 500, that is to say, A as co sharer may require B to sell his share to him in preference to X. The same rule applies if A and B are owners of adjoining houses. If B refuses to sell his share to A, A may institute a suit for pre-emption against B and A. It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad, that if the sale by B to X has been completed before the date of the suit B having no longer any interest in the property, he is not a necessary party to the suit (x). If a decree is passed for A, and if he has not paid the amount of purchase money into Court the decree should specify a day on or before which the purchase money should be paid into Court. If the amount is paid within the time fixed by the Court A will be entitled to enter into possession of B's share. But if he fails to pay the amount within that time, he will lose the benefit of the decree (y). If a decree is passed for A with costs A may pay into Court the purchase money less the costs (z). As to extension of time for payment see notes below.

It is important to note that the right of pre-emption is a personal right. This gives rise to the following consequences —

- 1 If the pre-emptor, that is, the person entitled to pre-emption, transfers the right to a third party, the right is lost and the transferee cannot maintain a suit for pre-emption (a).
- 2 It is not settled whether if the pre-emptor dies during the pendency of the suit for pre-emption, the right, according to Sunni Mahomedan Law, is extinguished (b) or whether it survives to his heirs or to his legal representatives (c).
- 3 If the pre-emptor transfers the right of pre-emption during the pendency of the suit for pre-emption, the right of pre-emption is lost, and the suit will be dismissed. And even if he obtains a decree and transfers the decree, the right of pre-emption will be lost, and the Court will not allow execution of the decree. But if he obtains a decree, and transfers not the decree, but the property which is the subject of pre-emption, the right of pre-emption is not lost and he may execute the decree, though execution will not be allowed to the transferees (d)

"Whose title thereto shall be deemed to have accrued from the date of such payment."—These words have been added to make it clear that the title to the property vests in the plaintiff on payment of the purchase money, and that it is not necessary to complete the title that there should be any document in writing and registered as required by the Transfer of Property Act in the case of a sale of immovable property. The object of adding these words into the rule is to supersede the opinion expressed by the High Court of Madras that, since the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, the title to a pre-empted property could not vest in the plaintiff without an instrument of transfer (e)

The plaintiff's title is complete from the date of payment, though he has not obtained possession by reason of the defendant being himself in possession in another capacity (f) or by reason of a holder of a usufructuary mortgage being in possession (g)

The title accrues on payment of the purchase money and not from the date of the sale (h)

Mesne profits—Upon a pre-emption decree the property and the right to mesne profits therefrom vest in the pre-emptor only from the date when he pays the amount of the purchase price finally decreed, until that time the original purchaser retains possession and is entitled to the rents and profits (i)

Extension of time for payment into Court—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that a plaintiff who has obtained a decree can appeal within the period of limitation whether or not he has made the payment on or before the day fixed (j). But the mere filing of an appeal does not operate as an extension of the time for payment (k). The appellate Court, however, may if it thinks fit extend the time for payment (l). When the appellate Court has in the exercise of its judicial discretion extended the time for payment, the High Court will not interfere in second appeal (m). See notes to s. 148, "Act directed or allowed by a decree of Court," on p. 351 above.

Sub-rule (2): Rival pre-emptors—Sub r. (2) prescribes the form of decree to be passed when there are rival pre-emptors. It is based upon the undermentioned rulings of the Allahabad High Court (n)

Pre-emption under the Mahomedan law—The Mahomedan law is the only system prevalent in British India which provides substantive rules relating to the right of pre-emption in a systematic form (o). The Mahomedan law of pre-emption is applied by the Courts of British India to Mahomedans except in the Madras Presidency, the Punjab and Oudh. In the Madras Presidency, the right of pre-emption is not recognised by the Courts even as between Mahomedans, on the ground that it places a restriction upon liberty of transfer of property and is therefore opposed to equity and good conscience (p). Pre-emption in the Punjab is regulated by the Punjab Laws Act, 1872, and in Oudh by the Oudh Laws Act, 1876. See Mulla's "Principles of Mahomedan Law," 8th Ed., pp. 152-154.

Pre-emption by custom—The Sunni Mahomedan law of pre-emption applies by custom to Hindus in Behar (q) and Gujarat (r)

Pre-emption by contract—A right of pre-emption is occasionally given in mortgage deeds to the mortgagee, so that in case of a sale of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor, the mortgagee shall have the refusal of the property, and in such a case the price may or may not be fixed beforehand (s)

Vendor's title in pre-emption suit—A pre-emptor is not entitled in a pre-emption suit to put the vendor on proof of his title to the property which he purports to sell. The reason is that the principle of pre-emption is substitution. A pre-emptor is therefore bound to take the title which the vendee was ready to take (t)

After the accounts are taken, a final decree is passed directing that the partnership assets be applied, first, in decree may be passed in favour of the defendant (v). See Sch I, App D, form No 22

Appeal—A preliminary decree in a suit for the dissolution of a partnership or the taking of partnership accounts is appealable under s 96. But the appeal must be filed within the period prescribed by the law of limitation. If no appeal is preferred within the period of limitation, the party aggrieved by such decree is precluded by virtue of the provisions of s 97 from disputing its correctness in an appeal from the final decree. See s 97 and notes thereto.

Letters Patent appeal—Where a commissioner appointed to take accounts applies to the Court for directions, and an order is made giving the directions, the order being merely one regulating procedure, and not being one giving a final adjudication of the rights of the parties, is not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 13 of the Letters Patent for the High Court of Rangoon, and is not appealable as such (w).

wise, as if such sum had been claimed by the defendant in a separate suit against the plaintiff."

The present rule provides that appeals from decrees relating to set off shall lie to the Courts to which appeals in respect of the original claim would lie.

Decree for defendant where set-off is claimed—It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that in a suit by a principal against his agent for accounts the Court can grant a decree to the agent for the amount found due to him on the taking of the accounts between the parties (e). The ground on which the decision is based is that a suit for accounts against an agent necessarily involves an undertaking by the principal to pay to the agent any sum that may be found due to him. Commenting upon this case Phillips, J., in a Madras case (f) said "This, I think, is taking a somewhat large view of the intention of a plaintiff in such a suit, for it could rarely be his intention to bring a suit in order that a decree might be given against him." See notes to O 8, r 6. "The amount claimed to be set off must be legally recoverable" on p 437 above.

Execution of Decrees and Orders

Of execution of decrees in general—The present order is the longest Order in the whole Schedule. It consists of 103 rules. Pre-emption by custom—The Sunni Mahomedan law of pre-emption applies by custom to Hindus in Behar (q) and Gujarat (r)

Pre-emption by contract—A right of pre-emption is occasionally given in mortgage deeds to the mortgagee so that in case of a sale of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor the mortgagee shall have the refusal of the property and in such a case the price may or may not be fixed beforehand (s)

Vendor's title in pre-emption suit—A pre-emptor is not entitled in a pre-emption suit to put the vendor on proof of his title to the property which he purports to sell. The reason is that the principle of pre-emption is substitution. A pre-emptor is therefore bound to take the title which the vendee was ready to take (t)

O. 20, rr.16-18 16 [S 215A] In a suit for an account of pecuniary transactions between a principal and an agent, and in any other suit not herein before provided for, where it is necessary, in order to ascertain the amount of money due to or from any party, that an account should be taken, the Court shall before passing its final decree, pass a preliminary decree directing such account to be taken as it thinks fit

Decree in suit for account between principal and agent
Shall pass a preliminary decree directing accounts—The provisions of this rule must be strictly followed. If the fact of agency is established it is the duty of the Court to direct an account to be taken of the dealings between the parties, before passing the final decree. It is not proper to pass a final decree at the hearing (x). But the Court must be satisfied before directing an inquiry into accounts that the taking of accounts is necessary (y).

Whether decree can be passed in favour of defendant—In a suit for account between principal and agent a decree can if necessary be passed in favour of the defendant on payment of the necessary Court fee (z). See notes to r 19 below.

Stay of proceedings—Where an appeal is pending against a preliminary decree the Appellate Court may make an order under O 41 r 5 staying the inquiry into accounts pending the hearing of the appeal (a). See notes to O 41 r 5. Stay of proceedings under a decree

17 [New] The Court may, either by the decree directing an account to be taken or by any subsequent order, give special directions with regard to the mode in which the account is to be taken or vouched and in particular may direct that in taking the account the books of account, in which the accounts in question have been kept, shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained with liberty to the parties interested to take such objection thereto as they may be advised

18 [New] Where the Court passes a decree for the partition of property or for the separate possession of a share therein, then,—

Decree in suit for partition of property or separate possession of a share therein

(2) if and in so far as such decree relates to any other immoveable property or to movable property, the Court may, if the partition or separation cannot be conveniently made without further inquiry, pass a preliminary decree declaring the rights of the several parties interested in the property and giving such further directions as may be required

Sub-rule (1)—The passing of a decree under sub rule (1) does not render the Court functus officio the Court may therefore grant an interim injunction restraining a party from interfering with the receiver's possession (b) See s 54 and notes thereto

Giving such further directions—These words are wide enough to include a direction for an inquiry into future mesne profits But under the rule the direction should be in the preliminary decree If no such direction is included in the preliminary decree the Court has no power to direct an inquiry into future mesne profits by its final decree (c)

Joint Hindu family—In a suit for partition of joint Hindu family property the property not being of the kind referred to in sub rule (1), a preliminary decree may be passed as provided by sub rule (2) (d) See notes to r 12 above, Joint Hindu family

19 [S 216] (1) Where the defendant has been allowed a set off against the claim of the plaintiff, the decree shall state what amount is due to the plaintiff and what amount is due to the defendant, and shall be for the recovery of any sum which appears to be due to either party

(2) Any decree passed in a suit in which a set-off is claimed shall be subject to the same provisions in respect of appeal to which it would have been subject if no set-off had been claimed

Appeal from decree relating to set-off

(3) The provisions of this rule shall apply whether the set-off is admissible under rule 6 of Order VIII or otherwise

Appeal from decree relating to set-off—This rule corresponds with s 216 of the Code of 1882, except as regards the provision as to the Court to which an appeal should be from a decree passed in a suit in which a set off is claimed. The second paragraph of s 216 ran as follows—

ORDER XXI.

O. 21.

Of execution of decrees in general—The present order is the longest Order in the whole Schedule. It consists of 103 rules. It is proposed here to give a summary of these rules and at the same time an idea of the different kinds of execution and the procedure in respect thereof. The references to the rules given in this summary are to the rules of the present Order.

A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5,000. Here A is the decree holder, B is the judgment debtor, and Rs 5,000 is the judgment debt. If B fails to satisfy the decree A may apply for execution of the decree against B a person, or against his property or both (r 30). But the Court may, in its discretion, refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment debtor (r 21). Execution against the person of the judgment debtor consists in arresting him and detaining him in jail. Execution against the property of a judgment debtor consists in attaching and selling his property, and paying the decree holder the amount of the judgment debt out of the sale proceeds.

Application for execution—All proceedings in execution are to be commenced by an application for execution (r 10). The application for execution must be in writing (r 11 (2)) and should contain the particulars set forth in rr 11 (2) to 14. The only exception is where the decree is for the payment of money and the judgment-debtor is in the precincts of the Court when the decree is passed, in which case the Court may order immediate execution on the oral application of the decree holder at the time of passing the decree [r 11 (1)] If the application complies with the requirements of rr 11 (2) to 14, the Court will direct execution to issue (r 24) If it does not, the Court may reject it, or may require it to be amended (r 17) If the application is rejected, the decree holder may present another application properly framed

Who may apply for execution—The application for execution is to be made by the decree holder If the decree is transferred by the decree holder, the transferee may apply for execution (r 16) If the decree has been passed jointly in favour of more persons than one, any one of such persons may apply for execution (r 15) If the decree holder is dead, his legal representative may apply for execution (s 146)

Against whom execution may be applied for—If the judgment debtor is living, execution is to be applied for against him If he is dead execution may be applied for against his legal representative In the latter case, the decree may not be executed against the person of the legal representative, but only against the property of the judgment-debtor which has come to the hands of the legal representative and has not been duly disposed of by him (s 50) As to notice to the legal representative, see the next paragraph

Notice before ordering execution—The law does not require any notice to be issued to the party against whom execution is applied for, except in the following two cases —

- 1 Where the application for execution is made more than one year after the date of the decree or more than one year after the date of the last order made on any previous application for execution
- 2 Where execution is applied for against the legal representative of the judgment debtor

In the two cases mentioned above the Code provides that "the Court executing the decree shall issue a notice" (r 22) There is one case in which it is discretionary with the Court to issue a notice before making an order for execution, and that is where the decree is for money and execution is sought against the person of the judgment debtor (r 37)

Execution against person of judgment-debtor.—

(i) Decrees for the payment of money—A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5,000 and costs [This is a money decree] B fails to pay the amount of the judgment debt and applies for execution of the decree against B a person [r 11 (2), cl (j)] The decree being a money decree, the Court may, instead of issuing a warrant for B's arrest, issue a notice calling upon him to appear and show cause why he should not be committed to the civil prison in execution of the decree (r 37) If B appears and satisfies the Court that he is unable to pay the amount of the decree from poverty or other sufficient cause, and if there are no circumstances which entitle B to the indulgence of the Court, the Court may make an order disallowing A's application for B's arrest and detention [r 40 (1)] If B does not appear, the Court should issue a warrant for his arrest if the decree holder so desires (r 37) If B appears, but fails to show cause to the satisfaction of the Court, the Court should cause him to be arrested [r 40 (5)]

Where a warrant of arrest is issued, it should be executed by an officer of the Court appointed in that behalf (rr 24 25) If when the officer goes to execute the warrant B offers payment of the amount of the judgment debt (which must always be specified in the warrant), the officer should receive the payment and the warrant should not then be executed (r 39) But if no payment is made, B should be arrested and brought before the Court "as soon as practicable" (s 55) If no notice was issued prior to his arrest under r 37, it is open to B to show that he is unable to pay the amount of the decree from poverty or any other sufficient cause [r 40 (1)] If the Court is satisfied that B is unable to pay the amount of the decree from poverty or any other sufficient cause, and if there are no other circumstances which would disentitle B to the indulgence of the Court, the Court will make an order directing B's release [r. 40 (1)]. Otherwise the Court will make an order committing B to prison [r. 40 (5)]. The prison is to be a civil prison (s. 55), and the term of detention in prison is six months if the amount of the decree exceeds Rs. 50, and six weeks if the amount of the decree does not exceed Rs. 50 (s. 58). If while in prison, B pays the amount mentioned in the warrant to the officer in charge of the prison, or the decree is otherwise fully satisfied, ~~and~~ by attachment and sale of his property, he will be released from detention (s. 58). Otherwise, he will be detained in prison until expiration of the term of his detention unless the decree holder requests the Court to release him from detention, or omits to pay the subsistence allowance of the judgment debtor. A judgment debtor released from detention in any one of the above cases cannot be re-arrested in execution of the same decree [s. 58 (2)], though the judgment debt has remained unpaid. This does not mean that his liability to pay the debt ceases, for the decree still subsists, and A may yet execute the decree against B's property [s. 58 (3)], though not against his person.

No woman can be arrested in execution of a money decree [s. 56].

(ii) Decrees other than those for the payment of money—A judgment debtor may be arrested and imprisoned not only in execution of a decree for the payment of money but also in execution of other decrees (rr. 31, 32, 33). The procedure to be followed in these cases is as follows. If the application is in proper form, the Court will issue a warrant for the arrest of the judgment debtor (r. 24). If the judgment debtor is arrested in execution of the warrant, he must be brought before the Court "as soon as practicable" (s. 55). The Court will then make an order committing him to the civil prison. If, while in jail, the decree is fully satisfied, he will be released from detention [s. 58 (1)]. Otherwise he will be detained in prison until expiration of the term of his detention, unless the decree holder requests the Court to release him from detention, or omits to pay the subsistence allowance of the judgment debtor as provided by r. 39.

Execution against property of judgment debtor—This subject may be considered under two heads, namely, (1) attachment, and (2) sale. We shall first state the rules relating to attachment, and then the rules governing sale, for attachment precedes sale. Attachment is levied and the sale of the property attached is effected by an officer of the Court under a warrant issued from the Court.

Before considering the rules relating to attachment and sale, it is to be observed that there are certain kinds of property which are exempt from execution of a decree. The property which belongs to the debtor, which he may exercise for his own benefit, is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree against him (s. 60).

I. Attachment—Attachable property belonging to a judgment debtor may be divided into two classes, (1) movable, and (2) immovable.

As to attachment of movable property—See rr. 43 to 53.

Attachment of immovable property—If the property be immovable, the attachment is to be made by an order prohibiting the judgment debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way, and prohibiting all other persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge. The order is to be proclaimed at some place on or adjacent to the property, and a copy of the order is to be affixed on a conspicuous part of the property and then upon a conspicuous part of the Court house (r. 54).

Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer of the property attached whether it be movable or immovable, is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment (r. 64).

If any claim be preferred to any property attached in execution of a decree by any person other than a party to the suit, the procedure prescribed by rr 58 to 63 is to be followed. If any questions arise in the course of execution proceedings between the parties to the suit, or their representatives they are to be dealt with under s 47.

If during the pendency of the attachment the judgment debtor satisfies the decree through the Court, the attachment will be deemed to be withdrawn (r 55). Otherwise the Court will order the property to be sold (r 64). If the property attached is current coin or currency notes, the Court may direct the same to be paid to the decree holder in satisfaction of his decree (r 56), for coin or currency notes do not require to be sold.

II Sale of attached property—If the property attached be movable property which is subject to speedy and natural decay, the same may be sold at once (r 43). Every sale in execution of a decree should be conducted by an officer of the Court except where the property to be sold is a negotiable instrument or a share in a corporation which the Court may order to be sold through a broker (r 76).

After the property is attached, the first step to be taken by the Court towards the sale thereof, whether the property be movable or immovable, is to cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made, stating the time and place of sale, and specifying the property to be sold, the revenue (if any) assessed upon the property, the encumbrances (if any) to which it is liable, the amount for the recovery of which the sale is ordered and such other particulars as the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property (r 66). No sale should take place until after the expiration of at least thirty days in the case of immovable property, and of at least fifteen days in the case of movable property, calculated from the date on which a copy of the proclamation has been affixed on the Court house of the Judge ordering the sale, unless the judgment debtor consents in writing to the sale being held at an earlier date (r 68). The Court may, in its discretion, adjourn the sale from time to time, but if the sale is adjourned for longer period than seven days, a fresh proclamation should be made, unless the judgment debtor consents to waive it (r 69).

It is important to note that no holder of a decree, in execution of which property is sold, can bid for or purchase the property without the express permission of the Court (r 72).

Irregularity in the conduct of sale of attached property—No sale of immovable property can be set aside on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the party seeking to set aside the sale has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity (r 90). As regards movable property, the rule is that a sale of movable property is not liable to be set aside in any case on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale. The only remedy open to the party who has sustained any injury by reason of such irregularity is to institute a suit for compensation against the person responsible for the irregularity. But if such person be the purchaser himself, the party sustaining the injury may sue for the recovery of the specific property and for compensation in default of such recovery (r 78).

Disposal of sale proceeds—The sale proceeds of property sold in execution of a decree are to be applied in the manner prescribed by s 73.

Resistance to delivery of possession to purchaser—Where immovable property is the matter, and summon the party against whom the application is made to appear and answer the same (rr 97 103).

Payment under decree.

O. 21, r. 1.

Modes of paying money

1. [S 257] (1) All money payable under a decree shall be paid as follows namely—

- (a) into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, or
- (b) out of Court to the decree holder, or
- (c) otherwise as the Court which made the decree directs

(2) Where any payment is made under clause (a) of sub rule (1), notice of such payment shall be given to the decree-holder

Retrospective effect of rules contained in this Order—On comparing this Order with the corresponding Chapter of the Code of 1882 it will be found that several changes have been introduced in matters of procedure so far as they relate to the execution of decrees. In this connection it is important to note that changes in matters of procedure are retrospective in effect and apply to pending proceedings (g)

Money payable under a decree—It is money payable under a decree that may be paid into Court under this rule. Costs of an application awarded by an order under s 30 cannot be said to be money payable under a decree. Hence such costs ought to be paid to the party direct and not into Court (h)

Where an order has been made for the payment of money into Court on a certain date and the Court is closed on that day, a payment made on the following day is good payment for the purposes of the order (i)

Decree directing payment to decree-holder—Payment into Court is a valid compliance with a decree even though the decree directs payment to the decree holder (j)

Notice of payment into Court—Sub r (2) which requires notice to be given to the decree holder where payment is made into Court, is new. Payment of the decretal amount into Court operates as a satisfaction of the decree to that extent though no notice of payment is given to the decree holder as provided by sub r (2). Similarly where a decree is assigned by the decree holder and the judgment debtor pays the decretal amount into Court without notice of the assignment, the payment operates as a satisfaction of the decree to that extent though no notice of payment is given to the decree holder and the assignee is not entitled to execute the decree (l). But where interest is awarded by the decree on the decretal amount, the decree holder is entitled to interest until he receives notice of the payment into Court (l)

decree of any kind is paid out of Court or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree and the Court shall record the same accordingly

(2) The judgment-debtor also may inform the Court of such payment or adjustment, and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause, on a day to be fixed by the Court, why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, and if, after service of such notice, the decree-holder fails to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, the Court shall record the same accordingly.

(3) A payment or adjustment, which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree

S 257A, C P C, 1882, omitted in this Code—Before proceeding with the subject matter of the present rule, it is important to note that s 257A of the Code of 1882 has been omitted in this Code. That section ran as follows —

Every agreement to give time for the satisfaction of a judgment debt shall be void unless it is made for consideration and with the sanction of the Court which passed the decree and such Court deems the consideration to be under the circumstances reasonable

judgment-debtor

“Every agreement for the satisfaction of a judgment debt, which provides for the payment directly or indirectly, of any sum in excess of the sum due or to accrue due under the decree, shall be void unless it is made with the like sanction

Agreement for satisfaction of judgment debt

“Any sum paid in contravention of the provisions of this section shall be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment debt, and the surplus, if any, shall be recoverable by the judgment debtor”

This section was first enacted by Act VII of 1879 with a view to protect the interests of judgment debtors against the exercise of undue pressure by decree holders. It gave rise to conflicting decisions and as interpreted by the majority of the High Courts was found in practice to be of little service to judgment debtors. It has been therefore omitted in this Code with the result that—

(1) agreements to give time to the judgment-debtor, and

(2) agreements for the satisfaction of a judgment debt which provide for the payment of any sum in excess of the decretal amount may now be entered into between the decree holder and the judgment debtor without the sanction of the Court, and effect may be given to them, if otherwise valid, as to any other agreement

D. 21, r. 2.

Points of difference between old section 258 and the present rule—The present rule corresponds with s 258 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

(1) The words "of any kind" have been added into sub s (1) to make it clear that this rule applies not only to money decrees, but to decrees for the enforcement of a mortgage (i), and other decrees, e.g., a partition decree (n)

(2) In para 3 of s 258 there occurred the words "as a payment or adjustment of the decree" after the word "recognised". These words have been omitted [see sub r (3)] to make it clear that the Court cannot recognize an uncertified payment or adjustment for any purpose whatever. See notes below, "Uncertified payment and limitation"

Scope and application of the rule—This rule provides that—

- (1) where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or
- (2) where a decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree holder, the decree holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, so that the same may be recorded by that Court

If the decree holder fails to inform the Court of the payment or adjustment, it is open to the judgment debtor to protect himself from execution of the decree by applying to the Court within 90 days from the date of the payment or adjustment (e) to issue a notice to the decree holder to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified. If the payment or adjustment is not certified by either party, it shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. This may be explained by the following

Illustration

A obtains a decree against B for Rs 2,000. It is subsequently agreed between A and B that A should accept Rs 1,000 in full satisfaction of the decree. B pays A Rs 1,000 out of Court, but neither the payment nor adjustment is certified to the Court. A applies for execution of the full amount of the decree notwithstanding receipt by him of Rs 1,000. B objects to execution on the ground that the decree has been adjusted and payment has been made. The payment, not being certified, cannot be recognised by the Court executing the decree, and the Court must direct execution to issue. It will not avail B to contend that A had agreed to certify the payment to the Court, but has omitted to do so. See notes below under the head "Fraud"

History of sub-rule (3)—The Codes of 1859 (s 206) and 1877 (s 258) provided that a payment or adjustment made out of Court should not be recognised by any Court executing the decree unless it had been certified to that Court. The Code of 1877 was amended in the year 1879, and the amendment provided that an uncertified payment or adjustment should not be recognised by any Court, and the same provision occurred in the Code of 1882. In the year 1888, the section was again altered by providing that an uncertified payment or adjustment should not be recognised by any Court executing the decree, and this is the form in which the rule now stands.

Sub rule (3)—Sub rule (3) provides that an uncertified payment or adjustment shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. The words "by any Court executing the decree" indicate the extent to which an uncertified payment or adjustment should not be recognized by a Court. These words show that the prohibition to take cognizance of an uncertified payment or adjustment is limited to the Court which is called upon to execute the decree. It is in execution proceedings alone that an uncertified payment or adjustment cannot be recognized by a Court. The rule does not prohibit a Court from taking cognizance of such payment or adjustment in proceedings other than execution proceedings. An uncertified payment or adjustment may therefore be recognized by a Court trying a suit for a relief based upon such payment or adjustment (p). This gives rise to the following questions —

1 Whether, on the Court directing execution to issue in the case put in the above illustration, B can maintain a suit against A for a declaration that the decree has been adjusted and for an injunction restraining A from executing the decree?

2 Whether, if A causes the decree to be executed notwithstanding the adjustment, and B's property is sold in execution, B can maintain a suit against A to set aside the sale, on the ground that the decree having been adjusted, A ought not to have caused the same to be executed?

3 Whether, if A causes the decree to be executed notwithstanding the adjustment, B can maintain a suit against A to recover damages for breach of the contract represented by the adjustment? In other words, whether, if B is compelled to pay in execution of the decree the full amount of the decree, namely, Rs 2 000, he is entitled to recover back that sum from A as damages for breach of the contract on A's part not to execute the decree?

The three kinds of suits referred to above would each involve recognition of an uncertified adjustment, and B's success in each would depend inter alia upon the recognition of such adjustment by the Court trying the suit. Now, it has been made sufficiently clear that the prohibition against the recognition of an uncertified adjustment is confined to Courts executing decrees, and does not extend to Courts trying suits. Hence a Court trying any of the above suits would not be precluded from recognizing the adjustment though the adjustment has not been certified. It is not, however, to be supposed that this circumstance by itself is sufficient to entitle B to a decree in each of the three kinds of suits, for in the first two cases there is an initial difficulty in B's way. That difficulty is presented by the provisions of s 47 by which it is enacted that all questions relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of a decree should be determined by the Court executing the decree, and not by a separate suit. Noting these provisions, we proceed to answer the above questions in order.

As regards the first question, it is quite true that if B brought a suit for an injunction restraining A from executing the decree, the Court trying the suit would recognize the adjustment though it might not have been certified. But the Court cannot try the suit at all, for such a suit is barred under s 47, the principal question in the suit being whether A should be restrained from executing the decree. This being a question relating to "execution," it cannot be tried in a separate suit (q). Hence the answer to the first question is in the negative.

The answer to the second question is also in the negative, and for the same reasons. The suit being one to set aside the sale in execution, the principal question would be whether the proceedings in execution should be set aside and this question is also one

The operation of sub-r (3) is not excluded because a party proceeds by way of suit instead of proceeding by an application as required by s 47. Mori v Hasan (1919) 43 Bom 240 491 C 13.

O. 21, r. 2. relating to 'execution' within the meaning of s 47, and the suit would therefore be barred under that section (r). It is therefore immaterial whether the purchaser at the sale in execution is a stranger or the decree holder himself. There are two cases (t) both prior in date to the Allahabad decision cited above, in which the property was purchased by a stranger, and the suit was to set aside the sale on the ground that the decree had already been satisfied out of Court at the time the sale was held. In both these cases it was held that the person who bought the property having purchased it bona fide at an auction sale, the sale to him could not be set aside. But the question whether the suit was barred was not raised in either of those cases. According to the Allahabad decision cited above, the suit would be barred under s 47.

The third question stands upon a different footing. The suit therein referred to is one for the recovery of damages for breach of the contract represented by the adjustment. The contract represented by the adjustment was to accept Rs 1000 in full satisfaction of the decree, and not to execute the decree for its full amount. If not withstanding the payment to A of Rs 1000 in pursuance of the adjustment, A causes the decree to be executed, and B is compelled to pay the amount of the decree (that is, Rs 2,000) in execution, B may sue A to recover back that amount as damages for breach of the contract not to execute the decree. Such a suit is not barred under s 47 for the principal question in the suit is not one relating to execution but to the contract its breach, and the amount of damages suffered by B in consequence of the breach. The answer to the third question is therefore in the affirmative (t). The Court trying the suit will take cognizance of the adjustment, and will direct A by its decree to repay Rs 2,000 as and by way of damages to B, though the adjustment has not been certified. It may here be noted that if after the decree is satisfied out of Court, A assigns the decree to X, and X then proceeds to realize the decree by execution against B, B has no cause of action against X, and he is not entitled to recover from X as damages the amount paid by him in execution to X, even though X took the assignment with the knowledge that the decree had been satisfied (u).

Summarizing the above, we may say that if a decree is adjusted to the satisfaction of the decree holder, but the adjustment is not certified, it will not be recognized by any Court executing the decree. The result is that if the decree holder applies for execution notwithstanding the adjustment, the Court will direct execution to issue and the judgment debtor will not be heard to say that the decree has been adjusted. Nor can he, even by instituting a regular suit for injunction, obtain a stay of execution for such a suit is barred under s 47. Nor is it open to him, if his property be sold in execution, to bring a suit to set aside the sale, for such a suit also is barred under s 47. His only remedy is to sue the decree holder for damages sustained by him by reason of the breach of the contract represented by the adjustment. He need not however, wait until the decree against him is executed. His cause of action arises on the presentation of an application by the decree holder to execute the decree. Therefore when he has paid any money under the adjustment, he may sue the decree holder to recover the same if the decree holder applies to the Court for execution notwithstanding the adjustment (v).

Suit by judgment-debtor based upon uncertified adjustment—We have already considered three kinds of suits that may be brought by a judgment debtor against the decree holder upon an uncertified adjustment, namely, (1) a suit for an injunction, (2) a suit for setting aside sales in execution and (3) a suit for damages for breach of the contract represented by the adjustment. All these suits are of a typical character, and they demand a careful study. The following case is of a different kind altogether. A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immovable property. A then executes an ekrarnama, whereby in consideration of Rs. 156 paid to him by B, he relinquishes an eight annas share of the property in favour of B. Subsequently he sells the remaining eight annas share to B by a labala. Both the ekrarnama and labala are duly registered, but neither of them is certified to the Court. A then applies for execution of the decree, and obtains possession of the property. B sues A upon the two documents for a declaration of his right to the property, and for recovery of possession thereof. Is the suit barred under s. 47? It has been held that it is not barred, and that B is entitled to a decree. The suit is not one for an injunction, and it cannot therefore be said to be directed to interfere with the execution of the decree. In fact the decree has already been executed. Nor is the suit one for setting aside a sale in execution, for there has been no sale. The suit is one for the recovery of property conveyed to B by two documents, both of which are duly registered. The documents no doubt constitute an adjustment of the decree, but as stated above there is nothing in sub r. (3) which bars a suit upon an uncertified adjustment (w).

The reader is now in a position to understand the following proposition which summarizes in one sentence all that has gone before—

An uncertified payment or adjustment may be recognized by any Court except a Court executing the decree, and a suit based upon such payment or adjustment is maintainable unless it is barred by the provisions of s. 47.

Suit by decree-holder upon an uncertified adjustment—Hitherto we have considered the case of the judgment debtor so far as it is affected by an uncertified adjustment. We now turn to the case of the decree holder. A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 315 and costs. B pays A Rs. 200, and induces A to give up the costs and accept a bond for the balance to be paid at the end of eight months. Neither the payment nor adjustment is certified to the Court. This does not preclude A from suing on the bond, for, as stated above, sub r. (3) only prohibits a Court executing a decree from recognizing an uncertified payment or adjustment (x). Since the repeal of s. 257A of the Code of 1882, the result would be the same, even if the bond provided for payment of a sum in excess of the balance (y).

"Money payable under a decree"—Where under the terms of a decree in a mortgage suit the decree holder (mortgagee) was to be in possession of the mortgaged property and to render accounts every year of receipts of the income of the property and give credit for the surplus income accruing from the property, it was held that the income of the property received by the mortgage decree holder under the terms of the decree did not constitute it "money payable under a decree" within the meaning of this rule (z).

"Decree of any kind."—See notes above, "Points of difference between old section 258 and the present rule."

O. 21, r. 2. "Adjustment"—A composition scheme between a judgment debtor and his creditors including the decree holder is an adjustment within the meaning of this rule and may be certified as such (a)

"Where the decree is adjusted in part."—A obtains a decree against B and C. A then enters into an agreement with B by which B is discharged from liability under the decree. The agreement constitutes an adjustment of a "part" of the decree within the meaning of this rule (b)

Application for final decree—An application for a final decree in a suit on a mortgage is not an application for execution. Therefore, the Court to which an application is made for a final decree is not a "Court executing the decree." Hence such Court may recognize payments made by the mortgagor out of Court, though the payments have not been certified (c)

Mode of certifying—See notes below, "Uncertified payment and limitation"

This rule applies only to parties who stand in the relation of decree-holder and judgment-debtor at the date of payment or adjustment—A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5,000. B, being unable to pay the amount of the decree in cash, transfers certain immovable property to C in consideration of C undertaking to pay the amount of the decree to A. C pays the amount of the decree to A out of Court. Subsequently, C gets the decree transferred to himself from A, and applies for execution against B. The payment of the decretal amount by C to A, though not certified, is a bar to execution for the payment was made not by B, the judgment debtor, but by C, a third party, and this rule applies only where a payment is made out of Court by a judgment debtor to the decree holder (d). But it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that where by a consent decree in a suit by A against B, B agrees to pay a certain sum of money to C, and he makes the payment, such payment, if not certified, cannot be recognized by the Court executing the decree (e)

Fraud—There is an earlier decision of the Madras High Court which lends colour to the view that where a decree is adjusted to the satisfaction of the decree holder, and he agrees to certify the adjustment to the Court, but omits to do so, and subsequently applies to the Court for execution of the decree, the judgment-debtor may object to the execution and prove the adjustment in execution proceedings, and the Court executing the decree may take cognizance of the payment notwithstanding the provisions of this rule, the reason given being that the suppression of the adjustment from the Court is not only a fraud upon the judgment debtor, but a fraud upon the Court (f). But in later cases it has been held by the same High Court that if that be the effect of that decision, it is not good law (g). In a Bombay case (h), a decree for Rs 2,500 was adjusted by the judgment debtor paying and the decree holder accepting Rs 2,000 in full satisfaction of the decree, but the adjustment was not certified to the Court. The decree holder thereafter applied for execution of the decree. He omitted to state in his application, as required by O. 21, r. 11 (c), that the decree was adjusted. It was held, following an earlier decision of the same Court (i), that it was a case of fraud upon the Court, and the application for execution was dismissed. But these cases have been overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court, and it has been held that a Court executing a decree can in no case recognize a payment or adjustment not certified as required by this rule (j). The High Court of Calcutta has consistently held that it is not competent to a Court executing a decree to enquire into the fact of a payment or adjustment which has not been certified as required by this rule even if fraud is imputed to the decree holder (k). The same view has been taken by the Chief Court of the Punjab (l), and by the High Court of Patna (m).

The law allows the judgment debtor 90 days within which he may apply to have the payment or adjustment certified [Limitation Act, Sch I, art 174]. If he does not make the application, and the decree holder applies for execution within that period, he may in answer to the application for execution, apply to have the payment or adjustment certified, but this he should do within 90 days. And it has been held that objections filed by a judgment debtor to the decree holder's application for execution may be treated as an application to certify the payment or adjustment provided the objections are filed within 90 days of the adjustment (n). But the judgment debtor is not entitled to an extension of time even if fraud is established on the part of the decree holder. Such extension he can claim only under s 18 of the Limitation Act, and that section provides only for the case where an applicant has by means of fraud been kept from the knowledge of his right to make the application, it does not provide for the case where he is kept by means of fraud from the exercise of his right to make the application (o).

Uncertified payment and limitation—Sub r (3) of this rule provides that an uncertified payment shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree. The third paragraph of the old section provided that an uncertified payment or adjustment shall not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree. It was accordingly held under that section that there was nothing to prevent an uncertified payment from operating as a part payment within the meaning of s 20 of the Limitation Act, so as to extend the period of limitation for applying for execution under that Act (p). The words "as a payment or adjustment of the decree" have been omitted in sub r (3). The result is that under the present rule the Court cannot recognize an uncertified payment or adjustment for any purpose whatever. It follows that an uncertified payment can no longer operate as a part payment so as to extend the period of limitation for an application for the execution of a decree (q). This may be explained by an illustration. A obtains a decree against B in January, 1921, for Rs 4,000. B pays A out of Court Rs 2,000 in January 1923, but the payment is not certified. A applies for execution of the decree for the balance in January 1925, that is, more than three years after the date of the decree, but within three years from the date of payment under the decree. Under the old section, the payment, though not certified, operated as a fresh starting point for limitation and the application was therefore not barred. Under the present rule, the payment, not being certified, cannot be recognised by the Court even for the purpose of limitation, and the application must be rejected as barred by limitation.

Nice questions have arisen in this connection as to the meaning of "certify" and as to the modes in which payments made out of Court may be certified. It has been

In either case, proof of the uncertified payment may be admitted by a criminal Court. (h) It must, however, be noted that a mere application for execution not followed by execution does not constitute an offence under s 210 of the Penal Code, for it is of the essence of the offence under that section that the decree must have been "caused to be executed" (i)

Land situate in more than one jurisdiction.—This rule is new. It gives effect to a ruling of the Calcutta High Court in the undermentioned case (j). The rule, when amplified, may be stated thus: where immovable property attached in execution of a decree forms one estate, of which a part is situate within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree, and the rest beyond such limits, the Court executing the decree has the power to attach and sell the whole estate, though only a part thereof is situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction.

6 [S 224] The Court sending a decree for execution shall send—

- (a) a copy of the decree,
- (b) a certificate setting forth that satisfaction of the decree has not been obtained by execution within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed, or, where the decree has been executed in part, the extent to which satisfaction has been obtained and what part of the decree remains unsatisfied, and
- (c) a copy of any order for the execution of the decree, or, if no such order has been made, a certificate to that effect.

Clause (b)—The omission to transmit to the Court executing the decree the certificate referred to in cl (b) is not a material irregularity within the meaning of r 90 of this Order. Hence it is not a good ground for setting aside a sale in execution (k).

7 [S 225] The Court to which a decree is so sent shall cause such copies and certificates to be filed, without any further proof of the decree or order for execution, or of the copies thereof, unless the Court for any special reasons to be recorded under the hand of the Judge requires such proof.

Court receiving copies of decree etc to file same without proof

Proof of jurisdiction.—The old section contained the words or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it after the words or of the copies thereof. This gave rise to a conflict of opinion whether a Court to which a decree was sent for execution had the power to inquire whether the Court that passed the decree had jurisdiction to pass it and to refuse execution if it found that the decree was passed without jurisdiction it being held in some cases that it had the power (l) and in others

rr. 7-10. that it had not (m) The words "or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it" have been omitted in the present rule. The result is that a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution has now no power to question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree under execution (n). It has been recently held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that where a decree presented for execution was made by a Court which apparently had no jurisdiction to pass it, the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction (nn). It is not clear whether the decision was intended to apply to a case where a decree passed by one Court is transferred for execution to another Court.

8. [S. 226.] Where such copies are so filed, the decree or order may, if the Court to which it is sent is the District Court, be executed by such Court or be transferred for execution to any subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction.

Execution of decree or order by Court to which it is sent Subordinate Court—If a Munsiff in district X sends a decree passed by him for execution direct to a Munsiff in district Y, the latter has no jurisdiction to execute the decree. The proper course is for the Munsiff in district X to send the decree to the District Court of district Y, and the latter Court may then under this rule transfer the decree for execution to the Munsiff in that district (o).

9. [S. 227.] Where the Court to which the decree is sent for execution is a High Court, the decree shall be executed by such Court in the same manner as if it had been passed by such Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction.

11 [Ss 256, 235] (1) Where a decree is for the payment of money the Court may, on the oral application of the decree holder at the time of the passing of the decree, order immediate execution thereof by the arrest of the judgment debtor, prior to the preparation of a warrant if he is within the precincts of the Court

(2) Save as otherwise provided by sub rule (1) every application for the execution of a decree shall be in writing, signed and verified by the applicant or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case and shall contain in a tabular form the following particulars, namely —

- (a) the number of the suit ,
- (b) the names of the parties ,
- (c) the date of the decree ,
- (d) whether any appeal has been preferred from the decree ,
- (e) whether any, and (if any) what, payment or other adjustment of the matter in controversy has been made between the parties subsequently to the decree ,
- (f) whether any, and (if any) what, previous application have been made for the execution of the decree, the dates of such application and their results ,
- (g) the amount with interest (if any) due upon the decree or other relief granted thereby, together with particulars of any cross decree, whether passed before or after the date of the decree sought to be executed ,
- (h) the amount of the costs (if any) awarded ,
- (i) the name of the person against whom execution of the decree is sought , and

O. 21, r. 11.

- (j) the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required, whether—
- (i) by the delivery of any property specifically decreed ;
 - (ii) by the attachment and sale, or by the sale without attachment, of any property ;
 - (iii) by the arrest and detention in prison of any person ;
 - (iv) by the appointment of a receiver ;
 - (v) otherwise, as the nature of the relief granted may require.

(3) The Court to which an application is made under sub-rule (2) may require the applicant to produce a certified copy of the decree.

Sub rule (1) corresponds with s. 256 of the Code of 1882 and sub rule (2) with s. 250

Difference between old section 256 and sub-rule (1)—Section 256 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows—

‘ When a decree is passed for a sum of money only, and the amount decreed does not exceed the sum of one thousand rupees, the Court may, when passing the decree, on the oral application of the decree holder, order immediate execution thereof by the issue of a warrant directed either against the person of the judgment debtor if he is within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court or against his movable property within the same limits ’

Sub rule (1) differs from s. 256 in the following particulars—

- 1 Under s. 256 immediate execution could only be issued if the amount of the decree did not exceed Rs. 1,000. Under the present rule there is no limit to the amount of the decree. But the decree must be one for the payment of money.
- 2 As a general rule, a decree holder seeking to arrest the judgment-debtor must present an application in writing to the Court, and the Court may then direct a warrant to issue for the arrest of the judgment debtor who as a rule, cannot be arrested without a warrant. S. 256 of the Code of 1882 dispensed with a written application, and enabled the Court to issue a warrant for the arrest of the judgment debtor on an oral application. Sub rule (1) goes further, and empowers the Court to order immediate arrest of the judgment debtor prior to the preparation of a warrant, if he is within the precincts of the Court.
- 3 Execution can no longer issue against the movable property of the judgment-debtor on an oral application as it could under s. 256.

Privilege from arrest—The privilege from arrest under civil process conferred by s. 135 of this Code does not extend to a judgment debtor against whom an order has been made for immediate arrest under this sub rule. See s. 135, sub s. (3).

Alterations in sub-rule (2)—Sub rule (2) corresponds with s 235 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

1. In cl (g), the words, "together with particulars of any cross decree, whether passed before or after the date of the decree sought to be executed," are new
2. In cl (j) sub cl (u), the words ' or by the sale without attachment, ' are new
3. Cl (j), sub cl (iv), is new

The application shall be verified—An application for execution may be verified by any person acquainted with the facts of the case. It may therefore be verified by a person who holds a general power of attorney from the decree holder, notwithstanding that the decree holder may be residing within the jurisdiction of the Court (g). Where the application is made by a person other than the decree holder all that is necessary is that the Court should be satisfied that such person is acquainted with the facts of the case. It is not necessary that it should be verified after the application for permission to verify it has been made, nor is it necessary that the verification should be made in the presence of the Court (r).

The application shall state the date of the decree—The date of the decree means the date on which the judgment was pronounced (s). See O 20, r 7.

The application shall specify the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required—Where an application did not specify the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required, it was rejected (t). See r 17 below.

Sub-rule (3)—This sub rule is new. The Court may under this sub-rule require the applicant to produce a certified copy of the decree. Such copy, however, is not a necessary annexure to an application for execution. An application, therefore, which is not accompanied by a copy of the decree, cannot be said to be an application not "in accordance with law" within the meaning of art 182 (5) of sch I of the Limitation Act (u).

Amendment of application—See r, 17 below.

12. [S. 236] Where an application is made for the attachment of any moveable property belonging to a judgment-debtor but not in his possession, the decree-holder shall annex to the application an inventory of the property to be attached, containing a reasonably accurate description of the same.

Application for attachment of moveable property not in judgment debtor's possession

Failure to annex inventory—Where no such inventory as is required by this rule is annexed to the application for execution, the application cannot be said to be one "in accordance with law" within the meaning of art 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (v).

- O. 21, r. 15. has declared each of the plaintiffs to be entitled to a moiety of the land the Court may allow either plaintiff to execute the decree to the extent of his one half share though the decree is a joint decree (c)

The rule set forth above that one of several holders of a joint decree is not entitled to execution in respect of his share of the decree, but that he must apply for execution of the whole decree, applies only in those cases where the whole decree has remained unsatisfied. That rule does not apply where a joint decree has been satisfied in part before the date of the application for execution. In such a case execution cannot be for the whole decree, but only for so much thereof as has remained unsatisfied. This subject is considered in the next following paragraph.

Payment by judgment-debtor out of Court to one of several holders of a joint decree.—A obtains a decree against C for Rs 5,000. C pays the amount of the decree into Court (r 1), and the Court will then pay the amount to A on his application. If C does not adopt that course, and pays the amount to A out of Court (r 1), C must see that A, the decree holder, certifies the payment to the Court. If A fails to certify the payment, C may apply to the Court to record the payment as certified. If C also fails to do so, the Court executing the decree will not recognise the payment. Hence if A, notwithstanding payment to him of the amount of the decree out of Court, applies for execution of the decree against C, the Court will direct execution to issue (r 2).

Suppose now that there are two or more decree holders and the payment is made by the judgment debtor to one of them. What are the rights of the other decree holders to execute the decree? We proceed to answer this question.

- I (1) A and B obtain a decree against C for Rs 5,000. C pays B his (B's) share of the decretal amount out of Court, and the payment is certified to the Court. A then applies under this rule for execution of the whole decree. A cannot execute for more than his own share, as the decree has been satisfied as to B's share (d).

- (2) Suppose that in the above case, the payment is not certified to the Court but B admits the payment. The result will be the same as in (1) (e). But if B does not admit the payment, the Court may allow execution to issue for the whole decree.

II A and B obtain a decree against C for Rs 5,000. C pays the whole amount of the decree to B out of Court, and the payment is certified to the Court. A then applies for execution of the decree to the extent of his own share. Is A entitled to execute the decree to the extent of his share, regard being had to the fact that B has certified satisfaction of the whole decree? It has been held that he is. For one of several joint decree holders is not competent to grant full discharge of the decree out of Court or to certify to the Court complete satisfaction of the decree, without the concurrence of the other decree holders, though he may certify satisfaction in respect of his own share therein (f). In the case put above, A has another remedy besides proceeding in execution against C. That remedy is by way of suit against B to recover his share from him. B having certified to the Court that he has received payment from C of the whole amount of the decree, thus admitting receipt of the whole amount (g).

"Any one or more of such persons —This expression includes persons claiming under such persons. A transferee of a decree within the meaning of rr. 16 below is such a person (h)

Amendment —An application for execution of a joint decree by one only of the decree holders should state that the application is made on behalf of all the decree holders. If the application contains no such statement it should be rejected. It can not be allowed to be amended for O. 21 r. 17 while it empowers the Court to allow a defect in the requirements of rr. 11 to 14 to be amended does not include the present rule in it (i)

Appeal —An order determining any question mentioned or referred to in s. 47 is a decree (s. 2) and is therefore appealable under s. 96. The questions referred to in s. 47 are questions arising between a decree holder on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other and relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree. Hence orders determining such questions are appealable as decrees under s. 96. Bearing this in mind we proceed to note the following cases —

(1) A and B obtain a decree against C. A alone applies for execution of the whole decree. C (the judgment debtor) contends that A alone should not be allowed to execute the whole decree. Here the question being one between the decree holder on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other any order made upon the application is appealable as a decree. If A's application is allowed C may appeal from the order and if the application is disallowed A may appeal from the order (j)

(2) Suppose that in the above case the objection to execution was raised not by C, the judgment debtor but by B the other decree holder. In such a case the question being between the decree holders inter se no appeal will lie from any order made upon the application whether the application is allowed or refused (k)

Limitation —See Limitation Act Sch. I art. 18^o Explan. 1

16 [S. 232] Where a decree or, if a decree has been passed jointly in favour of two or more persons, the interest of any decree holder in the decree, is transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, the transferee may apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it, and the decree may be executed in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application were made by such decree-holder

O. 21, r. 16. Provided also that, where a decree for the payment of money against two or more persons has been transferred to one of them, it shall not be executed against the others.

Alterations in the law :—

- 1 The words, "or if a decree has been passed jointly in favour of two or more persons, the interest of any decree holder in the decree," have been added into the first paragraph to make it clear that the rule is not confined in its application to a transferee of the whole decree, but extends to a transferee of the interest of any holder of a joint decree. This was, in fact the interpretation put upon the old section (1)
2. The words, "if that Court thinks fit," which occurred in the old section in the first paragraph before the words "the decree may be executed" have been omitted. See notes below "Right to execution does not depend upon discretion of Court"

"Decree"—The expression "decree" in the first paragraph and the first proviso of this rule is not confined to a money-decree. It includes a mortgage decree (m). The second proviso is confined to money decrees.

Application for execution by transferee of decree—No order should be made under this rule for the execution of a decree on the application of a transferee of the decree unless—

- I the decree has been transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, [an oral assignment is not sufficient (n)],
- II the application for execution is made to the Court which passed the decree and
- III where the decree has been transferred by assignment, notice of the application has been given to the transferor and the judgment debtor

No application by the transferee is necessary for recognition as transferee. The rule does not provide for any such application. All that the rule requires is that where the decree has been transferred by assignment, the transferee should give notice of the application for execution to the transferor and the judgment debtor (o). See notes below, "Transfer of decree against a company in liquidation"

We proceed to consider the above conditions in order

I. Who may apply for execution under this rule—The following persons and no others, may apply for execution under this rule (p) —

- (a) The transferee of a decree under an assignment in writing [A transferee under an oral assignment has no locus standi to apply for execution under this rule (q)]
- (b) The transferee of a decree by operation of law, e.g., the legal representative of a deceased decree holder, or the Official Assignee in the case of an insolvent decree holder, or the purchaser of a decree at a Court-sale in execution of a decree against the decree holder (r 53) (r). of property by A to B, which is the subject matter of a suit by A against C, does not amount to a transfer by operation of law of the decree that may be subsequently obtained by A against C so as to entitle B to apply for execution under this rule (a). A deed of transfer of property which is the subject matter of a suit may involve a transfer of the decree passed on the very day on which the deed is executed, but the transfer in that case is not by operation of law, but by an assignment in writing (b). A transfer by operation of law means a transfer on death, or by devolution or by succession. This rule does not recognize an equitable assignment of a decree. The dicta in a Bombay case recognizing such an assignment (u), have not been accepted by other High Courts (v).

- (c) A transferee under an assignment in writing or by operation of law from the transferee mentioned in cls (a) and (b), whether by immediate or mesne assignment (w).

Explanation I—The expression 'transferee' in cls (a), (b) and (c), is not confined to a transferee of the whole decree, but includes a transferee of a portion of the decree (x), or, where the decree is a joint one, the transferee of the interest of any one of the decree holders in the decree (y). But it has been held that where a decree awards a substantial relief plus costs, the decree is one and indivisible and it can be transferred only as a whole (z).

Illustrations of Explanation I

1 A, who holds a decree against B for Rs 5,000, transfers his interest in the decree to the extent of Rs 2,500 to X. Here X is in the position of a joint decree holder [r 15 above]. The application for execution may be made by X, or it may be made by A, the decree holder, or by A and X both together. In any case the application must be for execution of the whole decree, Kishore v Gishorne & Coy (1890) 17 Cal 341, Gyamonee v Radha (1880) 5 Cal 592, and not merely for the portion transferred.

2 A and B obtain a decree against C for Rs 5,000. A assigns his interest in the decree to X. Here X occupies the double character of a transferee within the meaning of this rule and of a transferee of an interest in a joint decree within the meaning of r 15. Hence any application that X may make for execution will be governed by the provisions both of this and the preceding rule, Duar Dux v Fatil (1899) 26 Cal 250.

Explanation II—A person to whom a party to a suit agrees to transfer any decree that may be passed in the suit is not a transferee within the meaning of this rule.

Illustration

A sues B to recover Rs 5,000. During the pendency of the suit, A agrees with C to transfer to him any decree that may be passed in his favour in the suit. A decree is subsequently passed for A. C is not a transferee within the meaning of this rule, and he is not entitled to execute the decree against B. The word "decree holder" in this rule means a person in whose favour a decree has already been passed. When A agreed to assign to C, there was no decree in existence. Basrooruttill v Ramachandra (1907) 17 Mad L J 391.

Explanation III—A person who is entitled under a decree to an assignment of a decree obtained by A against B, but who has not obtained such assignment, is not a transferee of the latter decree [A's decree] so as to entitle him to apply for execution of the decree against B. But he will be entitled to apply if he has obtained an assignment before the date of the application (a)

Explanation IV—A person to whom the holder of a decree for possession of immovable property sells a portion of the property is not a transferee of the decree within the meaning of this rule, and he is not therefore entitled to execute the decree. A transfer of property is not the same thing as a transfer of a decree (b)

Explanation V—A transferee of a decree awarding maintenance is entitled to execution under this section. The reason is that though a right to future maintenance cannot be transferred having regard to the provisions of s. 6, cl. (d) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 there is no objection to a transfer of such right when it is awarded by a decree. The transferee therefore of such a decree is entitled to recover by execution maintenance that has fallen due. He cannot, of course, attach maintenance before it has fallen due (c). See s. 60 sub s. (1), cl. (n), and notes thereto on p. 176 above.

Benamidar—A obtains a decree against B. C purchases the decree from A in the name of D. Here C is the real transferee, and D is benamidar or ostensible transferee. Is D entitled to take out execution of the decree? Yes, according to the High Court of Allahabad (d). No, according to the High Court of Calcutta, but if he has succeeded in taking out execution (as where it is not brought to the notice of the Court that he is a benamidar), the application for execution made by him will save a subsequent application by C from the bar of limitation (e).

Where the alleged transferee of a decree is found to be the benamidar of a judgment debtor, the Court is bound by the second proviso to this rule to refuse to allow the decree to be executed against the other judgment debtors in favour of the alleged transferee (f).

It has been held in some cases that the mere fact that an order for execution has been made on the application of a benamidar does not preclude the real transferee from applying under this rule to continue the execution proceedings himself, but the real transferee will be bound by proceedings in execution up to that date (g). In a recent case however the High Court of Madras held that where a decree has been transferred by assignment in writing, the transferee alone can apply for execution under this rule, though he may be a mere benamidar, and that the real transferee is not entitled to apply under this rule (h).

II. Application for execution by a transferee should be made to the Court which passed the decree—A transferee of a decree must apply for execution to the Court which passed the decree, though the decree has been sent for execution to another Court (i). The Court to which a decree has been transmitted for execution has no jurisdiction to make an order for execution on the application of a transferee of the decree. If such an order is made, it is illegal, and it must be set aside in appeal (j). As to the definition of "Court which passed the decree," see s. 37 and notes thereto.

III. Notice shall be given to the transferor and the judgment-debtor O. 21,

The notice which is required by the first proviso is not notice of the assignment but notice of the application for execution of the decree (l). The provisions of the rule as to notice are mandatory and if execution is issued without notice the proceedings in execution are void (l). The object of the notice is to enable the transferor and the judgment debtor to raise such objections as regards the assignment as may be available to them, e.g., that the consideration money was not fully paid, or that the transferee is a benam dar for some of the judgment debtors (m). Hence the mere issue of a notice is not sufficient. It is incumbent upon the Court to hear the objections, if any, of the transferor and the judgment debtor before directing execution to issue. It is competent to the Court to determine the question even as to the validity of the transfer as between the transferor and the transferee (n). If the property of the judgment debtor is attached without hearing his objections the attachment is illegal, even if the Court subsequently hears his objections and confirms the attachment after such hearing (o). Where the judgment debtor is dead the notice required by this rule should be given to his legal representative (p). Where no notice is given as required by this rule, it is in the discretion of the Court to grant time to the transferee to enable him to serve the notice (q). The Patna High Court has held that the notice required by this rule need not be in writing (r).

Where on an application by the transferee of a decree to have his name substituted as decree holder no objection is taken by the judgment debtor as to the validity of the transfer, the judgment debtor will be precluded from questioning the validity of the transfer on an application by the transferee for execution of the decree (s). Similarly, where no objection is taken by the judgment debtor that no notice was given to the transferor, he will be precluded from raising that objection at a subsequent stage of the execution proceedings (t).

There is nothing to preclude a transferee of a decree from applying under s. 39 to the Court which passed the decree to send the decree for execution to another Court (u). But the notice required by this rule must be issued by the Court which passed the decree, and not by the Court to which the decree is sent for execution (v).

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the mere issue of a notice under this rule does not operate as a revivor within the meaning of arts. 182 and 183 of the Limitation Act (w). The contrary has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad and Madras. According to these Courts a mere application by the transferee for substituting his name for that of the decree holder operates as a revivor of the decree and gives a fresh starting point of limitation for executing the decree (x). And it has been held by the Madras Court that an application by the transferee to bring the representative of the deceased judgment debtor on the record to serve him with notice under this rule has the same effect (y).

Execution does not depend upon discretion of Court.—In the old section the words were “and if that Court thinks fit the decree may be 21, r. 16. executed," &c. It was accordingly held under that section that the Court had a discretion to grant or refuse an application for execution made by a transferee (). The word "if that Court thinks fit" have been omitted in this rule. The result is that where the conditions specified in this rule are satisfied, a transferee of a decree is entitled to execution as of right like the original decree holder.

Transfer of decree for the payment of money against two or more persons to one of them.—This subject may be considered under the following two heads—

1. Where the whole decree has been transferred.
2. Where the decree is a joint one, and part only of the decree has been transferred.

First as regards transfer of the whole decree—Where a decree for the payment of money has been transferred by assignment or by operation of law to one of several judgment debtors, the decree is wholly extinguished. Hence the transferee cannot execute the decree against the other judgment debtors, but his remedy against them is by a regular suit for contribution, as if the decree had been satisfied by him. The object of the second proviso to the rule is not to deprive the transferee of a decree, who might happen to be one of the judgment debtors, of all relief, but to impose upon him the duty of proceeding by what was considered a more appropriate procedure (that is, a suit for contribution (a)). The provisions of this rule cannot be evaded by the judgment-debtor who satisfies the decree by taking a transfer of the decree in the name of a benamidar (b).

Illustrations.

(a) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5,000. B satisfies the decree by paying Rs 5,000 to A. In such a case C is bound to pay to B his (C's) share of the judgment debt. If C fails to contribute his share, B's remedy is by way of suit against C to recover the amount. [This illustration is merely introductory.]

(b) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5,000. B purchases the decree from A. Here B's position is exactly the same as in ill (a), that is to say, the decree must be taken as having been satisfied by B. B cannot therefore execute the decree against C and his only remedy is to bring a suit against C for contribution. Sorooop Chunder v Troylakhonath (1866) 9 W. R. 230.

(c) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5,000. A dies, and on his death the decree passes to B as his heir. The position is the same as in ill (b). Banarsi Maharani (1883) 5 All. 27.

(d) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5,000. B pays the amount of the decree to A. At B's request A transfers the decree to F. F, being merely a benamidar for B, is not entitled to execute the decree against C. It is competent to C in such a case to show that B, and not F, paid the amount of the decree to A, and such payment may be proved even if it has not been certified under § 21, r. 2. Ponnusami v Lekshmanas (1912) 35 Mad. 659, 12 I. C. 857, Ramaya v Krishnamurti (1917) 40 Mad. 296, 32 L. C. 902, Raghunath v Gangaram (1923) 47 Bom. 643, 75 I. C. 493 (23) A. R. 404, Ganpaya v Krishnappa (1924) 26 Bom. L. R. 491, 80 I. C. 423, (24) A. R. 391, Sadogopa v Sellama (1922) 43 Mad. L. J. 761, (22) A. M. 510.

Next, as regards transfer of a portion of a joint decree—Where a decree has been passed jointly in favour of two or more persons, and the interest of any decree-holder in such decree has been transferred by assignment or by operation of law to one of several judgment debtors, the decree is extinguished to the extent of the interest so transferred, and execution can only issue for the rest of the decree.

Fulkurooddeen* (1876) 25 W. R. 343, Banarsi v. Maharani (1883) 11 All. 27.

"Decree for the payment of money."—The expression "decree for the payment of money" in the second proviso to the rule does not include mortgage decrees for sale (c).

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the expression "decree for the payment of money against two or more persons," means a personal decree for the payment of money against two or more defendants. Hence the proviso does not apply where the decree is not against the defendants personally. A obtains a decree against B as the legal representative of X and against C as the legal representative of Y for Rs. 20,000 to be paid out of the estates of X and Y. A dies leaving B as his heir, and on his death the decree passes to him by operation of law. The decree not being a personal decree against B and C, B is entitled, as transferee of A's decree, to have the decree executed against the estate of Y (d). The High Court of Madras has dissented from this view. According to that Court the fact that one of the defendants is directed by the decree to pay the amount of the decree out of the family property in his hands does not make the decree any the less a decree for payment of money against him (e).

Further, the expression "decree for the payment of money against two or more persons" means a decree against two or more persons jointly. Hence the rule laid down in the second proviso does not apply where the decree is not passed against the defendants jointly. In a suit by A against B and C, A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 90 and against C for Rs. 30. A then assigns the decree to C. The decree not being a joint decree, C may execute the decree passed against B for Rs. 90 (f).

Award—The Calcutta High Court has held that a transferee of an award filed in Court under the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1899, is entitled to apply for execution under this rule (g). See notes to r. 29 below.

Application for substitution by transferee.—Where a decree holder applies for execution, and pending execution assigns his interest in the decree, an application by the transferee of the decree for substitution of his name in place of that of the assignor is not a fresh application for execution but merely an application for continuing the execution proceedings then pending (h).

Appeal—An order determining any question between the judgment debtor and the representative of the decree holder (s. 47) is a decree (s. 2), and is therefore appealable as such (s. 96). A transferee of a decree is a "representative" of the decree holder within the meaning of s. 47. Therefore an order refusing to recognize the transferee of a decree or dismissing his application for execution on the objection of the judgment debtor is a decree, and appealable as such (i).

Suit by transferee—A transferee of a decree whose application is rejected under this rule on the ground that the transfer is not a valid one is not precluded from instituting a regular suit for a declaration of the validity of the transfer. Such a suit is not barred by the provisions of s. 47 (j).

Equities enforceable against original decree-holder—See s. 40 and notes thereto.

Transfer of decree against a company in liquidation—Where a decree against a company in liquidation is transferred pending the winding up proceedings and the liquidator refuses to recognize the transferee the transferee may apply to the executing Court under s. 47 (3) to be substituted for the original decree holder to enable him to prove his claim before the liquidator. S. 171 of the Indian Companies Act 1913 is no bar to the granting of such an application (1).

17. [S. 245] (1) On receiving an application for the execution of a decree as provided by rule 11 sub rule (2), the Court shall ascertain whether such of the requirements of rules 11 to 14 as may be applicable to the case have been complied with, and, if they have not been complied with, the Court may reject the application or may allow the defect to be remedied then and there or within a time to be fixed by it.

(2) Where an application is amended under the provisions of sub rule (1), it shall be deemed to have been an application in accordance with law and presented on the date when it was first presented.

(3) Every amendment made under this rule shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

(4) When the application is admitted, the Court shall enter in the proper register a note of the application and the date on which it was made, and shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, order execution of the decree according to the nature of the application.

Provided that in the case of a decree for the payment of money, the value of the property attached shall, as nearly as may be, correspond with the amount due under the decree.

Changes in the law—This rule corresponds with s. 245 of the Code of 1859 except in the following particulars—

- 1 The words "may allow the defect to be remedied" in sub rule (1) have been substituted for the words "may allow it [application] to be remedied as being more comprehensive and covering the case of omission to produce a copy of the decree as now required by r. 11 (3)".
- 2 Sub rule (2) is new. See notes below. Sub rule (2); limitation.

(1) Bon n anapoti v Chindakuma (1903) 26 Mad 1 (1) Kashi v The Union Bank of India (1919) 41 All 43 501 C 115.

Sub-rule (1)—This rule lays down the procedure to be adopted by the Courts O. 21, on receiving an application for execution. Sub-r (1) empowers the Court to reject the application or allow an amendment. The Court should in each case exercise its discretion, and where an amendment ought to be allowed it should allow the amendment (1). Thus where an application is not signed, it should not reject the application, but allow it to be amended (m). The amendment may be allowed even after the application for execution is registered provided the execution of the decree has not at the date of the application for amendment become barred by limitation (n). The High Court of Madras has held that where an application for amendment is made after the expiration of 12 years provided by s. 48, the Court may in its discretion accept it or reject it (o).

Sub-rule (2): Limitation—Article 182 of the Limitation Act provides inter alia that the first application for execution must be made within three years from the date of the decree. If the decree has not been executed, and it is necessary to make further application each successive application must be made within three years from the date of the 'last application'. But the 'last application' in each case must have been one 'in accordance with law,' otherwise it cannot give a fresh starting point for limitation. An application which does not comply with the requirements of rules 11 to 14 of this order is not one 'in accordance with law' (p). With these observations we proceed to consider the bearing of sub-rule (2) on the provisions of the Limitation Act. Sub-rule (1) provides that where an application is made for execution, but it does not comply with the requirements of rr. 11 to 14, the Court may allow the applicant to amend it within a time to be fixed by the Court. If the application is amended within the time fixed or within such further time as may be allowed by the Court (s. 148), it will be deemed by virtue of sub-rule (2) to have been an application 'in accordance with law,' and presented on the date when it was first presented. Under the old section it was held that where an order was made for amending an application for execution and the amendment was made, the application should be deemed to have been presented not on the date when it was first presented, but on the date when it was amended. The result was that if the amendment was not made until after the expiration of the period of limitation the application was held to be time barred though the amendment was made within the time fixed by the Court (q). Those decisions are no longer law. Compare s. 149. Sub-r (2) applies only if the application is returned for amendment for non compliance with the provisions of rr. 11 to 14, and the application is subsequently amended. Sub-r (2) does not apply in terms to cases where an application is returned for amendment for some other reason (r).

The application does not comply with the requirements of O. 21, r. 11 (2). The Court may under this rule return the application for amendment and fix a date within which it should be amended. If the application is amended within the time fixed by the Court it will be deemed to have been presented

18. [S 246] (1) Where applications are made to a Court for the execution of cross-decrees in separate suits for the payment of two sums of money passed between the same parties and capable of execution at the same time by such Court, then—

Execution in case of cross decrees

(a) if the two sums are equal, satisfaction shall be entered upon both decrees; and

(b) if the two sums are unequal, execution may be taken out only by the holder of the decree for the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered on the decree for the larger sum as well as satisfaction on the decree for the smaller sum.

(2) This rule shall be deemed to apply where either party is an assignee of one of the decrees and as well in respect of judgment-debts due by the original assignor as in respect of judgment-debts due by the assignee himself.

(3) This rule shall not be deemed to apply unless—

(a) the decree-holder in one of the suits in which the decrees have been made is the judgment-debtor in the other and each party fills the same character in both suits; and

(b) the sums due under the decrees are definite.

(4) The holder of a decree passed against several persons jointly and severally may treat it as a cross-decree in relation to a decree passed against him singly in favour of one or more of such persons.

(d) A, B, C, D and E are jointly and severally liable for Rs 1 000 under a decree obtained by F. F obtains a decree for Rs 100 against F singly and applies for execution to the Court in which the joint decree is being executed. F may treat his joint decree as a cross decree under this rule.

Changes in the law.—

- 1 The words 'where applications are made to a Court for the execution of cross decrees' in sub rule (1) are new. They give effect to certain decisions noted below under the head 'Application of the rule'.
- 2 The words 'separate suits' in sub rule (1) are new. They have been added to show that, for the purposes of execution, a counter claim is not a separate suit (f).
- 3 Sub rule (4) and the illustration thereto, that is, ill (d), are both new. This sub rule gives effect to the decisions noted under the head 'Sub rule (4)'.

Application of the rule—The meaning of sub rule (1) may be explained by the following illustration: A holds a decree against B for Rs 5,000. B holds a decree against A for Rs 3,000. A and B each applies for execution of his decree to Court X which has jurisdiction to execute both decrees. The decrees being cross decrees they will be set off against each other. Hence B, who is the holder of the decree for the smaller amount, will not be allowed to take out execution of his decree. Execution will only be allowed of A's decree to the extent of Rs 2,000, being the difference between the amount of his and B's decree. If in the case put above, the decree held by B was also for Rs 5 000 neither party should be allowed to take out execution, and satisfaction should be entered upon both decrees.

This rule does not apply unless—

- (1) the cross decrees are for the payment of two sums of money,
- (2) the decrees have been obtained in separate suits [see notes above under the head 'Alterations in the rule'],
- (3) both the decrees are capable of execution at the same time [ill (1)], and by the same Court, and
- (4) the decree holder in one of the suits in which the decrees have been passed is the judgment debtor in the other, and each party fills the same character in both the suits [ills (b) and (c)].

If the cross decrees are of the character specified above, it is further necessary, before the provisions of this rule can apply, that both decrees must be before the executing Court for execution, and applications should have been made for execution of both decrees. If either decree holder omits to apply for execution of his decree, the other decree holder may take out execution of his decree for its full amount (u). Note the words with which the rule begins.

O. 21, r. 18. held that there is no distinction for the purposes of this rule between a decree in a suit and a decree in a proceeding under s 144. A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree B's property is sold and it is purchased by A. The decree is reversed in appeal, and A is directed to deliver possession of the property to B and to pay to B Rs 714 for mesne profits. B applies for execution against A in respect of Rs 714. A claims to set off another decree obtained by him against B. The set off may be allowed under this rule (v).

"Cross-decrees for the payment of two sums of money —A sues B on a mortgage, and obtains a decree for Rs 1,800 to be realized by sale of the mortgaged property. B obtains a decree against A for Rs 2,000. Here A's decree though it is one for sale in enforcement of a mortgage and not strictly for the payment of money may be set off against B's decree, by virtue of the provisions of r 20 of this order (w).

Where execution is taken out for the smaller sum—This rule provides that where applications are made for the execution of cross-decrees one for a larger amount and the other for a smaller amount, execution should be taken out only for the difference. This means that the decree for the smaller amount cannot be executed at all, and no separate execution should issue of that decree (x). It is to be noted however, that if the Court in contravention of the provisions of this rule, allows execution to issue of the decree for the smaller sum, and a sale is made in such execution the sale is not void, the reason being that a purchaser under a sale in execution is not bound to inquire whether the judgment debtor had a cross-judgment of a higher amount (y).

Same character in both suits —The provisions of this rule do not apply unless the decree holder in one suit is the judgment debtor in the other, and each party fills the same character in both suits. A holds a money decree against B. B holds a decree for sale passed in a suit brought by him as mortgagee against C, the mortgagor and against A, a purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property from C. A applies for execution of his decree against B. B is not entitled to set off his decree against A's decree. The reason is that A does not fill the same character in both the suits. The decree held by A is in his favour personally which he may execute against B by the arrest of his person or the attachment of his property. This cannot be said of B's decree against A, for B is not ordered by the decree personally to pay any sum of money but is only given an option to pay if he likes to save from sale the property in which he is interested (z). If in the case put above C, the mortgagor, was the holder of the money decree against B instead of A, and C applied for execution against B, B (the mortgagee) could have set off his decree against C (a).

Assignment of decree —If A who has obtained a decree against B attaches in execution of his decree a decree held by B against C, A is an assignee of B's decree within the meaning of this rule (b). [See O 21, r 53 (3)]. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a decree obtained against the assignor in a suit pending at the date of the assignment may be set off against the decree assigned if the assignee had notice of such suit (c). A obtains a decree against B for Rs 1,000. B then sues A for Rs 2,000. Pending B's suit C obtains a transfer of A's decree with notice of the suit. A decree is then

Sub-rule (4)—This sub rule gives effect to the decisions in the undermentioned cases, where it was held that the holder of a decree passed jointly and severally against several judgment debtors one of whom holds a decree against such decree holder singly may treat his joint decree as a cross decree (d). See ill (1) to the sub rule.

Execution in case of cross claims under same decree

(a) if the two sums are equal, satisfaction for both shall be entered upon the decree, and,

(b) if the two sums are unequal, execution may be taken out only by the party entitled to the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree.

Object of the rule—The object of this rule is to prevent each side executing a decree in respect of sums due, whether for costs or otherwise, under the same decree (e).

Application of the rule—This rule is not limited in its application to cases in which the remedy of each party against the other is of precisely the same nature. i, a mortgagor, sue B, the mortgagee for redemption. A decree is passed in the suit ordering that upon A paying to B Rs 1 000 (mortgage debt) on a day fixed by the Court B should reconvey the mortgaged property to A, and that if such payment is not made within the time fixed by the Court the property should be sold. At the same time A is awarded costs, Rs 100 to be paid by B. Here both the sums being payable under the same decree, the provisions of the present rule apply, though B's remedy, if A failed to pay the mortgage debt would be by sale of the mortgaged property, and A's remedy, if B failed to pay the costs would be against B personally. Hence A, being entitled to the smaller amount (Rs 100), cannot take out execution against B (f). B, being entitled to the larger amount (Rs 1 000) is alone entitled to take out execution. But he cannot take out execution for more than Rs 900, which is the same thing as saying that he must reconvey the property to A, if A paid Rs 900, and he cannot insist on payment of the full sum of Rs 1 000 as a condition of reconveyance (g). The point to be noted is that in the case of cross claims under the same decree execution may be taken out only by the party entitled to the larger sum. The party entitled to the smaller sum is not entitled to take out execution. It follows from this that if A is entitled to recover from B net profits amounting to Rs 445 under a decree, and B is entitled to recover from A under the same decree costs amounting to Rs 855, A being entitled to the smaller sum cannot take out execution against B, though B's claim to execute his decree for costs is barred by limitation (h). It may also be noted that if the party

claims in mortgage suits

20 [New] The provisions contained in rules 18 and 19 shall apply to decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge

Object of the rule—This rule is new. It is inserted in order to make it clear that the provisions as to cross decrees and cross-claims apply to mortgage decrees. The rule shows impliedly that the expression 'decree for the payment of money' and other similar expressions in the Code do not include a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge. See in particular s 34 s 73, and O 21, r 53.

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that a simple decree for recovery of money can be set off against a decree for recovery of money by enforcement of a mortgage or charge (2). See notes to r 19 above. Cross decrees for the payment etc.

21. [S 230, 2nd para] The Court may, in its discretion, refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment debtor

Simultaneous execution

Simultaneous execution against person and property—An order refusing execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment-debtor amounts to a decree under s 2 cl (2) read with s 47, and it is therefore appealable (4).

Provided that no such notice shall be necessary in consequence of more than one year having elapsed between the date of the decree and the application for execution if the application is made within one year from the date of the last order against the party against whom execution is applied for, made on any previous application for execution or in consequence

O. 21, r. 22. turn to cases where a notice is served, but, as it turns out subsequently, upon a wrong person. The leading case upon the subject is Mallargun v. Narkari (r). In that case a decree was passed against a person, who afterwards died, and in executing the decree against his estate, a person was served as his legal representative with notice under this rule. The person served objected that he was not the legal representative of the deceased. The executing Court decided and as it turned out subsequently decided erroneously, that he was to be treated as such representative [see s. 47]. After that the execution proceedings went on with the result that certain property belonging to the deceased judgment debtor was sold and purchased by a third party. The question arose whether the sale was void as made without jurisdiction, or whether it was merely voidable. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a notice having been served in fact, though upon a wrong person the Court had jurisdiction to sell the property and the sale was not void. Their Lordships further held that the omission to give notice to the right person constituted a serious irregularity, and that the sale was therefore voidable, that is to say, it was valid until it was set aside under O. 21, r. 90 or by independent suit brought within a year as provided by art. 12, cl. (a) of the Limitation Act. Their Lordships said: 'He (the person served) contended that he was not the right person but the Court, having received his protest decided that he was the right person and so proceeded with the execution. In doing so the Court was exercising its jurisdiction. It made a sad mistake, it is true, but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right (s). But where the decree holder knows who the legal representative of the deceased judgment debtor is, and deliberately serves the notice upon a wrong person as his legal representative, and there is no adjudication by the executing Court as to who the legal representative is, the sale, it has been held, is absolutely void (t)'.
(s) But where the decree holder knows who the legal representative of the deceased judgment debtor is, and deliberately serves the notice upon a wrong person as his legal representative, and there is no adjudication by the executing Court as to who the legal representative is, the sale, it has been held, is absolutely void (t).

More than one year after the date of the decree.—The term 'decree' in sub r. (1) cl. (a) means the decree capable of execution. Thus where an appeal is preferred from a decree, and the appeal is dismissed for default under O. 41 r. 11, the decree of the lower Court is the decree capable of execution, and the period of one year is to be calculated from the date of that decree (u). See notes to s. 30, 'What decree may be executed'. Even where the decretal amount is made payable by instalments the period of one year is to be calculated from the date of the decree. It is not to be calculated from the date of default (v).

More than one notice.—The High Court of Patna has held that once the original decree has been put into execution after notice as provided by this rule, no fresh notice need be served for every application for execution made more than one year from the date of the last order for execution (w).

Notice when not necessary.—It has been held by the High Court of Madras that where property is attached on an application for execution, no notice need be given to the judgment debtor of the application for sale, though the latter application is made more than a year after a prior application for execution (x). In the Madras case the attachment was subsisting at the date of the application for sale, and the fact of the attachment was known to the judgment debtor.

Irregular service of notice.—Irregularity in the service of notice as distinguished from non service is a material irregularity within the meaning of O. 21, r. 90 (xx).

from the date thereof, unless the decree has been rescinded. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an order for execution operates as a revivor within the meaning of this article (g) but mere issue and service of a notice under this rule does not (h).

23. [S 249] (1) Where the person to whom notice is issued under the last preceding rule does not appear or does not show cause to the satisfaction of the Court why the decree should not be executed, the Court shall order the decree to be executed

(2) Where such person offers any objection to the execution of the decree, the Court shall consider such objection and make such order as it thinks fit

24. [Ss 250, 251] (1) When the preliminary measures (if any) required by the foregoing rules have been taken, the Court shall, unless it sees cause to the contrary, issue its process for the execution of the decree

(2) Every such process shall bear date, the day on which it is issued, and shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court and delivered to the proper officer to be executed

(3) In every such process a day shall be specified on or before which it shall be executed

Delegation of authority to execute—The officer to whom a warrant is delivered for execution under this rule may deliver it to his subordinate for execution. It is not necessary that the proper officer should himself execute all warrants sent to him (s). But a warrant addressed to the peon of a Court cannot be executed by a Naik (j)

Arrest without warrant—Where an officer of the Court arrests a judgment debtor without having in his possession the warrant of arrest at the time of arresting the arrest is illegal (l)

"Shall be sealed"—The provisions of this rule being mandatory the omission of the Court's seal on the warrant renders the attachment illegal (i)

Specification of day on or before which warrant should be executed—The warrant should specify the date on or before which it is to be executed. Rescission of the execution of a warrant which does not specify such date is not illegal (m). Further

Endorsement on process

Stay of execution

29. Whether provisions of Code relating to execution of decrees apply to an award filed under the Arbitration Act, 1899—It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that an award filed in Court under s 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act of 1899 is not a decree although it is enforceable as provided by s 15 of that Act as if it were a decree. The execution therefore of such an award cannot be stayed under this rule (p). On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an award filed in Court under s 11 of the Arbitration Act being enforceable under s 15 of the Act as if it were a decree of the Court the provisions of the Code applicable to the execution of decrees apply to an award so filed. It has thus been held that an award against a firm stands on the same footing as a decree against a firm for the purposes of O 21 r 30 (q) and that a transfer of an award stands on the same footing as a transfer of a decree for the purposes of O 21 r 10 (r). The High Court of Allahabad takes the same view as the Calcutta High Court (s). No such question however can arise where a decree is passed in terms of an award under para 16 of Sch II of the Code (t) for the award in that case is merged in the decree.

Inherent power to stay execution—A Court may under this rule stay execution of a decree obtained by A against B pending the decision of a suit brought by B against A. If B's suit is dismissed and an appeal is preferred by B from the decree the Court may under s 151 stay execution of A's decree pending the decision of B's appeal (i).

Alterations in the rule—Sub rules (2) and (5) are new See notes below under the head : Sub rule (5)

Specific performance—As to specific performance of contracts see Specific Relief Act I of 1877, ss 12 30.

Injunction—As to perpetual injunctions, see Specific Relief Act I of 1877, s 54 57

Restitution of conjugal rights.—The words italicized in sub rule (1) were added by Act 20 of 1923 Having regard to those words, a decree for restitution of conjugal rights can no longer be enforced by detention in the civil prison whether it be against a husband or a wife As to decree against a husband, see also r 33 below.

Where a woman, who had been directed by a decree to refrain from preventing her daughter returning to her husband, permitted the daughter, who was of age, to reside in her house, it was held that such conduct did not constitute a breach of the direction under the decree so as to render it punishable under this rule (b)

It was held under the old section that an order directing a defendant to render accounts within a specified time was an "order requiring the performance of a particular act" within the meaning of that section, and that disobedience to the order was punishable under that section (c). The words "performance of or abstention from any other particular act" which occurred in the old section were held to have a very wide general meaning, and they have been omitted from this rule, and in lieu thereof the word "injunction" has been substituted. The result is that disobedience to an order directing a party to render accounts can no longer be punished under this rule as such an order cannot be said to be an "injunction" within the meaning of this rule (d)

Opportunity of obeying the decree.—All that the Court has to see before directing execution to issue under this rule is whether the party bound by the decree has had an opportunity of obeying the decree or injunction and has wilfully failed to obey it. If the party has had the opportunity and has wilfully failed to obey the decree, the Court may order execution to issue under this rule without giving him any further opportunity, and it is not obligatory upon the Court in such a case to serve a notice upon the party calling upon him to obey the decree or injunction (e)

Where an application is made under this rule, but the party bound by the decree has had no opportunity of obeying the decree, the application will be dismissed. But the dismissal of the application is no bar to another application made after an opportunity has been afforded to the party of obeying the decree. Thus if a decree is made directing the defendant to deliver certain articles necessary for the performance of the duties of priest in a temple to the plaintiff, the plaintiff is not entitled to execute the decree under this rule unless it is proved that he went to the temple after notice to the defendant to receive the articles from him (and thereby afforded an opportunity to the defendant to comply with the decree), and that the defendant failed to deliver the articles. If such an opportunity has not been afforded, the plaintiff's application will be dismissed but its dismissal will be no bar to a subsequent application after such opportunity has been afforded (f)

"Party against whom a decree for injunction has been passed"—See notes to s 50 "Decree for injunction" on p 155 above

Sub-rule (5)—This sub rule is new. It corresponds to O 42 r 30, of the English Rules. In the absence of any provision in the old section similar to the one contained in this sub rule, it was held that where a decree directed the defendant to remove an obstruction, such as pulling down a wall or opening a path way, and the defendant failed to obey the decree, it was not competent to the Court to depute any of its officers to remove the obstruction, as that was not one of the modes of execution sanctioned under that section (g). Under the present rule, the Court may direct the act to be done so far as practicable by the decree holder or some other person appointed by the Court (A). But the Court has no power under this rule to order the police to see that its decree is carried out. Thus where a decree is passed declaring the plaintiff's right to perform certain ceremonies in a temple and restraining the defendant's from obstructing the plaintiff's from performing the ceremonies, the Court has no power under this rule to order the police to see that the plaintiff performed the ceremonies without interference on the part of the defendant (a).

The expression "the act required to be done" means what has to be done to enforce the injunction (b). Hence if a defendant is directed by a decree to demolish a certain wall, and the wall is demolished, he cannot in execution proceedings be directed to remove a new wall built after the date of the decree in a different place. The plaintiff's remedy in respect of the new wall is to file a fresh suit against the defendant (c). In a recent Calcutta case (d) Richardson, J. expressed the opinion that sub-rule (3) applied to prohibitory as well as mandatory injunctions.

33 [New] (1) Notwithstanding anything in rule 32, the Court either at the time of passing a decree against a husband for the restitution of conjugal rights or at any time afterwards may order that the decree shall be executed in the manner provided in this rule.

(2) Where the Court has made an order under sub-rule (1), it may order that in the event of the decree not being obeyed within such period as may be fixed in this behalf the judgment debtor shall make to the decree-holder such periodical payments as may be just and, if it thinks fit require that the judgment-debtor shall to its satisfaction secure to the decree holder such periodical payments.

(3) The Court may from time to time vary or modify any order made under sub-rule (2) for the periodical payment of money either by altering the times of payment or by increasing or diminishing the amount, or may temporarily suspend the same as to the whole or any part of the money so ordered to be paid and again revive the same, either wholly or in part as it may think just.

(4) Any money ordered to be paid under this rule may be recovered as though it were payable under a decree for the payment of money.

sub rule (2) after the words under sub rule (1) were omitted by the same Act. The result is that the present rule applies to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights passed against a husband. The words shall be executed in the manner provided in this rule in sub r (1) have been substituted for the words shall not be executed by detention in prison. See as to the latter words the undermentioned case (m). See r 32 above and note the alterations made in that rule by the same Act.

34. [Ss 261, 262] (1) Where a decree is for the execution of a document or for the endorsement of a negotiable instrument and the judgment debtor neglects or refuses to obey the decree, the decree holder may prepare a draft of the document or endorsement in accordance with the terms of the decree and deliver the same to the Court

Decree for execution of document or endorsement of negotiable instrument

(2) The Court shall thereupon cause the draft to be served on the judgment debtor together with a notice requiring his objections (if any) to be made within such time as the Court fixes in this behalf

(3) Where the judgment debtor objects to the draft, his objections shall be stated in writing within such time, and the Court shall make such order approving or altering the draft, as it thinks fit

(4) The decree holder shall deliver to the Court a copy of the draft with such alterations (if any) as the Court may have directed upon the proper stamp paper if a stamp is required by the law for the time being in force, and the Judge or such officer as may be appointed in this behalf shall execute the document so delivered

(5) The execution of a document or the endorsement of a negotiable instrument under this rule may be in the following form, namely —

‘ C D, Judge of the Court of (or as the case may be), for A B, in a suit by E F against A B ’

and shall have the same effect as the execution of the document or the endorsement of the negotiable instrument by the party ordered to execute or endorse the same

(6) The Court, or such officer as it may appoint in this behalf shall cause the document to be registered if its registration is required by the law for the time being in force or the decree-holder desires to have it registered, and may make such order as it thinks fit as to the payment of the expenses of the registration

Sub-rule (1): decree for execution of a document.—Where the document to be executed relates to some property, the property must be the subject matter of the suit. If it is not, a regular suit must be brought to enforce execution of the document (n)

Sub-rule (6): registration.—This sub rule is new. It gives effect to a decision of the Allahabad High Court that where a document requires registration, it must be registered though it may be executed by the Court (o). At the same time provision is made for the registration of documents, though their registration is optional, if the decree holder desires to have them registered

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule on an objection to the draft of a document or of an endorsement [O 43, r 1, cl (i)]

35. [S 263] (1) Where a decree is for the delivery of any immovable property, possession thereof shall be delivered to the party to whom it has been adjudged, or to such person as he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf, and, if necessary, by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property

(2) Where a decree is for the joint possession of immovable property, such possession shall be delivered by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaiming by beat of drum, or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree.

(3) Where possession of any building or enclosure is to be delivered and the person in possession, being bound by the decree, does not afford free access, the Court, through its officers, may, after giving reasonable warning and facility to any woman not appearing in public according to the customs of the country to withdraw, remove or open any lock or bolt or break open any door or do any other act necessary for putting the decree-holder in possession.

Alterations in the rule.—Sub rules (2) and (3) are new. See notes below.

Sub-rule (2)—A plaintiff who is entitled to possession jointly with other persons may be granted a decree for joint possession, whether the plaintiff was originally in possession and was subsequently dispossessed (p), or whether he had never been in possession (q). Sub rule (2), which is new, has been inserted to remove the difficulty

Resistance to delivery of possession to decree-holder—Where the holder of a decree for the possession of immovable property is resisted or obstructed by any person in obtaining possession of the property, the procedure to be followed is that prescribed by rr 97 103 of this order

Actual and formal possession—The possession referred to in sub rules (1) and (3) is has or actual possession, while that referred to in sub r (2) and r 36 below is formal or symbolical possession. Formal or symbolical possession is delivered by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaiming, by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree

Rules 35 and 36 refer to cases where a suit is brought for possession of immovable property, and a decree is passed in the suit for the delivery of the property to the decree holder. Rules 95 and 96 refer to cases where immovable property belonging to a judgment debtor is sold in execution of a decree passed against him, and possession of the property is sought by the auction purchaser. In considering the distinction between actual and symbolical possession, it is desirable to consider both these sets of rules together for they are both governed by the same principles. Where the immovable property of which possession is directed by the decree to be delivered to the decree holder is in the possession of the judgment debtor, actual possession must be delivered to the decree holder under r 35 (1). Where it is in the possession of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same, only symbolical possession can be delivered and that is to be done under r 36. Likewise where immovable property is sold in execution of a decree and possession is sought by the auction purchaser, actual possession must be delivered to him under r 95 if the property is in the possession of the judgment debtor. But if the property is in the possession of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same, only symbolical possession can be delivered and that is to be done under r 96.

It is clear from what is stated above that there are only three cases in which the law allows symbolical possession to be given, namely, the cases contemplated (1) by sub rule (2) of the present rule, (2) by r 36 and (3) by r 96 of this Order. Symbolical possession given in such cases operates as actual possession against the judgment debtor, but not against third persons who were not parties to the decree (r). In other words, symbolical possession is no possession at all as against third parties. This distinction is of great importance in the law of limitation. The rule to be deduced from the cases on the subject is that where in execution of a decree symbolical possession is delivered of immovable property to the person entitled to possession thereof and such person subsequently institutes a suit for actual possession the symbolical possession is to be treated as actual possession where the suit is against the judgment debtor or his representatives and the period of 12 years allowed for such a suit is to be calculated not from the date of sale but from the date of the subsequent dispossession [ill (2)]. But where a suit for actual possession is instituted against a third party claiming to be in possession of the property aliter to the judgment debtor, no regard is to be had at all to the symbolical possession of the plaintiff in determining the period of limitation and the period of 12 years is to be calculated not from the date on which symbolical possession was delivered to the plaintiff but from the date on which the possession of such third party became adverse as against the judgment debtor [ill (1)]

Illustrations

(1) P obtains a decree against D. In execution of the decree certain property alleged to belong to D is sold and it is purchased by A. A applies for possession and he is placed in symbolical possession of the property. C has been in possession of the property adversely to D for 10 years prior to the date on which A is placed in symbolical possession. C continues to be in possession of the property as before. After three years A sues C for possession. The defence is that C has been in adverse possession for more than twelve years and the suit is therefore barred under art. 144 of the Limitation Act. A contends that his symbolical possession operated to break the continuity of the adverse possession of C and that the period of twelve years allowed by art. 144 for a suit for possession should be calculated from the date on which symbolical possession was delivered to him. The suit is barred for A's possession being merely symbolical, did not operate at all as possession as against C who was not a party to the suit, and it could not therefore break the continuity of C's possession (s). In other words, delivery of symbolical possession to A did not amount to a dispossession of C.

(2) A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immovable property. The property being in the occupancy of B's tenants, symbolical possession is delivered to A under r. 36. Subsequently B dispossesses A by receiving the rents and profits. A thereupon sues B for actual possession. The period of limitation for such a suit is twelve years from the date of dispossession (t). The same principles apply where a person is placed in symbolical possession under sub rule (2) of this rule in cases where the decree is one for joint possession, and also where he is placed in symbolical possession under r. 96 of this Order (u).

Note—It will be observed that in ill (2) the suit is against the judgment debtor, and in ill (1) it is against a third person who was not a party to the suit. Symbolical possession operates as actual possession against the judgment debtor, that being the only means by which, as between the parties, the Court could effectuate and carry out its object. But it does not operate as actual possession against third persons who were not parties to the suit and the reason for this is very plain. A suit might be brought, and a decree obtained by a person who has neither title nor possession, against another person who has neither title nor possession and if the delivery of symbolical possession in such a suit were to constitute actual possession as against the true owner who had been in actual possession for many years, and who was no party to the suit, it would operate most unjustly (v).

It has been stated above that where a judgment debtor himself is in possession, actual possession must be delivered to the person entitled to possession under sub r. (1) of this rule or under r. 95 as the case may be. Suppose now that symbolical possession is delivered in a case where actual possession ought to have been delivered. Does symbolical possession given under these circumstances operate as actual possession against the judgment debtor? It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that it does, exactly as if symbolical possession were rightly delivered. Symbolical possession given arrested in execution of a decree, unless and until the decree-holder pays into Court such sum as the Judge thinks sufficient for the subsistence of the judgment debtor from the time of his arrest until he can be brought before the Court

(2) Where a judgment-debtor is committed to the civil prison in execution of a decree, the Court shall fix for his subsistence such monthly allowance as he may be entitled to according to the scales fixed under section 57 or, where no such scales have been fixed, as it considers sufficient with reference to the class to which he belongs

(3) The monthly allowance fixed by the Court shall be supplied by the party on whose application the judgmentdebtor has been arrested by monthly payments in advance before the first day of each month

(4) The first payments shall be made to the proper officer of the Court for such portion of the current month as remains unexpired before the judgment-debtor is committed to the civil prison, and the subsequent payments (if any) shall be made to the officer in charge of the civil prison

(5) Sums disbursed by the decree holder for the subsistence of the judgment debtor in the civil prison shall be deemed to be costs in the suit

Provided that the judgment-debtor shall not be detained

 bursed

 notice issued under rule 37, or is brought execution of a decree for the payment of money, and it appears to the Court

as it thinks fit, make an order disallowing the application for his arrest and detention, or directing his release, as the case may be. O. 21

(2) Before making an order under sub rule (1), the Court may take into consideration any allegation of the decree-holder touching any of the following matters, namely —

- (a) the decree being for a sum for which the judgment-debtor was bound in any fiduciary capacity to account,
- (b) the transfer, concealment or removal by the judgment debtor of any part of his property after the date of the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed, or the commission by him after that date of any other act of bad faith in relation to his property, with the object or effect of obstructing or delaying the decree-holder in the execution of the decree,
- (c) any undue preference given by the judgment-debtor to any of his other creditors,
- (d) refusal or neglect on the part of the judgment-debtor to pay the amount of the decree or some part thereof when he has, or since the date of the decree has had, the means of paying it,
- (e) the likelihood of the judgment-debtor absconding or leaving the jurisdiction of the Court with the object or effect of obstructing or delaying the decree holder in the execution of the decree

(3) While any of the matters mentioned in sub-rule (2) are being considered, the Court may, in its discretion, order the judgment-debtor to be detained in the civil prison, or leave him in the custody of an officer of the Court, or release him on his furnishing security, to the satisfaction of the Court, for his appearance when required by the Court

(4) A judgment debtor released under this rule may be re arrested

(5) Where the Court does not make an order under sub-rule (1), it shall cause the judgment debtor to be arrested if he has not already been arrested and, subject to the other provisions of this Code, commit him to the civil prison

Sub-rule (1) • Unable to pay —Where a decree is passed against A, B and C, and the Court is satisfied that A is unable to pay and that B and C each possesses property decree is passed against B for the delivery of the property to A and an inquiry is directed as to the mesne profits due by B to A. B delivers possession of the property to A. Subsequently while the inquiry as to mesne profits is still pending A applies for attachment of certain property belonging to B. The attachment may be allowed under this rule (j). See O 20 r 12.

43. [S 269] Where the property to be attached is moveable property, other than agricultural produce in the possession of the judgment debtor the attachment shall be made by actual seizure, and the attaching officer shall keep the property in his own custody or in the custody of one of his subordinates, and shall be responsible for the due custody thereof.

Attachment of moveable property other than agricultural produce in possession of judgment-debtor

Provided that when the property seized is subject to speedy and natural decay, or when the expense of keeping it in custody is likely to exceed its value, the attaching officer may sell it at once.

Movable property in possession of judgment-debtor—This rule provides for attachment of movable property in the possession of the judgment debtor. As to movable property not in possession of the judgment debtor, see r 46 below.

Attachment by actual seizure—Where a warrant of attachment is executed by affixing it to the outer door of the warehouse in which goods belonging to the judgment debtor are stored it amounts to actual seizure within the meaning of the present rule (k).

Security bond to produce attached property—Goods attached under this rule by an Amin are made over by him to a third person for safe custody on his passing a bond undertaking to produce them in Court. The surety fails to produce the goods when required by the Court. Is the decree holder entitled to proceed against the surety under s 147 (c)? No, according to the Madras High Court, there being no order of the Court as contemplated by cl (c) of s 145 (l). Yes, according to the Allahabad High Court (m).

and another copy on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the judgment debtor ordinarily resides or, with the leave of the Court, on the outer door or on some other conspicuous part of the house in which he carries on business or personally works for gain or in which he is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, and the produce shall thereupon be deemed to have passed into the possession of the Court

Attachment of agricultural produce—This and the following rule provide for the attachment of agricultural produce. Both these rules are new. Growing crops are under this Code included in the category of movable property [see s. 2 cl (13)]. But the procedure relating to the actual seizure of movables cannot be applied in its entirety to growing crops for considerable injury would result to both parties if such crops were allowed to be removed on attachment like other movable property. With a view to prevent such injury and to secure to both parties the fullest value from the property attached it is enacted by the next following rule that where agricultural produce is attached the Court should make such arrangements for the custody thereof as it may deem sufficient and subject to such conditions as may be imposed by the Court the judgment debtor should be allowed to continue to perform all acts of husbandry and if he endeavours to defeat the attachment by neglecting the crop the decree holder should be allowed to intervene and protect his interests

45. [Aen] (1) Where agricultural produce is attached, the Court shall make such arrangements for the custody thereof as it may deem sufficient and, for the purpose of enabling the Court to make such arrangements, every application for the attachment of a growing crop shall specify the time at which it is likely to be fit to be cut or gathered

Provision as to any civil suit to produce or attach movables

(2) Subject to such conditions as may be imposed by the Court in this behalf either in the order of attachment or in any subsequent order, the judgment debtor may tend, cut, gather and store the produce and do any other act necessary for maturing or preserving it, and if the judgment debtor fails to do all or any of such acts, the decree holder may, with the permission of the Court and subject to the like conditions, do all or any of them either by himself or by any person appointed by him in this behalf and the costs incurred by the decree-holder shall be recoverable from the judgment debtor as if they were included in, or formed part of, the decree

(3) Agricultural produce attached as a growing crop shall not be deemed to have ceased to be under attachment or to require re-attachment merely because it has been severed from the soil O.
rr. 45

(4) Where an order for the attachment of a growing crop has been made at a considerable time before the crop is likely to be fit to be cut or gathered, the Court may suspend the execution of the order for such time as it thinks fit, and may, in its discretion, make a further order prohibiting the removal of the crop pending the execution of the order of attachment.

(5) A growing crop which from its nature does not admit of being stored shall not be attached under this rule at any time less than twenty days before the time at which it is likely to be fit to be cut or gathered

Time at which the crop is likely to be cut or gathered—The decree holder should specify in the application for attachment the time at which the crop is likely to be cut or gathered. The object is to enable the Court to make necessary arrangements for the custody of the crop [sub r (1)]. If the application is presented within twenty days before the maturity of a crop not lending itself to storage it should be refused [sub r (5)] See notes to r 44 above

Attachment of debt and of other property not in possession of judgment debtor

46 [S 268] (1) In the case of—

- (a) a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument,
- (b) a share in the capital of a corporation,
- (c) other moveable property not in the possession of the judgment debtor except property deposited in, or in the custody of, any Court, the attachment shall be made by a written order prohibiting,—

- (i) in the case of the debt, the creditor from recovering the debt and the debtor from making payment thereof until the further order of the Court,
- (ii) in the case of the share, the person in whose name the share may be standing from transferring the same or receiving any dividend thereon,
- (iii) in the case of the other moveable property except as aforesaid, the person in possession of the same from giving it over to the judgment-debtor.

(2) A copy of such order shall be fixed on some conspicuous part of the Court-house, and another copy shall be

O. 21, r. 46. sent in the case of the debt, to the debtor, in the case of the share, to the proper officer of the corporation. and, in the case of the other moveable property (except as aforesaid), to the person in possession of the same.

(3) A debtor prohibited under clause (1) of sub-rule (1) may pay the amount of his debt into Court, and such payment shall discharge him as effectually as payment to the party entitled to receive the same.

Attachment of debt—A debt to be attached must be actually due from the garnishee (judgment debtor's debtor) to the judgment debtor. It may be either presently payable, or payable in the future by reason of a present obligation (u). As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the undermentioned case (o), "an existing debt, though payable at a future day, may be attached." But only such debts can be attached as the judgment debtor could deal with properly and without violation of the rights of third persons (p). For instances of attachable debts, see notes to s. 60, "Debts" p. 172 above.

The following are some of the important rules relating to the attachment of debts—

1 It is not necessary for the purpose of attaching a debt that the exact amount of the debt should be stated, provided there is a debt actually due at the time of attachment. B delivers certain goods to his agent C for sale. The goods are sold by C and the sale proceeds are received by him. In execution of a decree obtained by A against B, A may attach the sale proceeds in the hands of C, though the exact amount due to B may not then have been ascertained (q).

2 The attachment of a debt does not prevent the judgment debtor from suing his debtor or from taking any other step necessary for the recovery thereof, but he is not entitled to receive payment thereof from his debtor unless the claim in respect of which the debt is attached is first satisfied. C owes a debt to B. The debt is attached in execution of a decree obtained by A against B. This does not preclude B from suing C to recover the debt, or from prosecuting the suit if a suit has already been instituted, but he cannot receive payment of the debt from C unless he first satisfies A's decree (r). See sub rule (1), cl. (1).

Attachment of mortgage-debt—A executes a mortgage of his immovable property to B to secure payment of Rs. 5,000 lent and advanced to him by B. It is provided by the mortgage bond that if A fails to pay the mortgage debt on the due date, B should have the right to sue A personally for the debt, and also to realise the debt by the sale of the mortgaged property. In such a case B's interest in the mortgage-bond comprises (1) the right to sue A personally for the mortgage debt and (2) the right to realise the debt by a sale of the mortgaged property. Suppose now that X obtains a decree against B, the mortgagee, for Rs. 5,000, and that in execution of the decree he seeks to attach the mortgage debt due to B. Is the mortgage debt a "debt" within the meaning of this rule, or, because it is secured by a mortgage of immovable property, is it "immovable property" within the meaning of r. 54 and attachable in the mode prescribed by that rule * The answer afforded by the lessons on the subject eliminating what are merely chiter dicta (v) is that a mortgage debt is a debt within the meaning of this rule, and it is therefore to be attached in the manner prescribed by this rule (v) Suppose now that the mortgage debt due to B is attached under this rule in execution of A's decree, and that it is sold in execution and purchased by P What are the rights of P * The answer is that they are entirely the same as those of B the mortgagee P may sue A for a personal decree against him He may also sue him for a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property (u)

As regards attachment of the interest of a usufructuary mortgagee if there is a debt which the mortgagee is entitled to recover from the mortgagor at the time of the attachment, the attachment is to be made in the manner prescribed by this rule (v) But if there is no debt payable by the mortgagor all that can be attached is the mortgagee's interest in the immovable property mortgaged to him and the attachment is to be made in the manner prescribed by r 34 of this Order for attachment of immovable property (v)

Attachment of debt after the same is paid by a cheque—A gave a cheque to B for work done Before the cheque was presented by B for payment, A, who had obtained a decree against B attached in A's hands the amount due by him to B Held that A having handed over the cheque to B, the payment was complete, and that there was no debt due by A to B which could be attached (x)

Procedure where garnishee denies debt—Where the garnishee denies the debt the decree holder may have it sold, or he may have a receiver appointed under s 61 with power to him to sue the garnishee to recover the debt from him (y) As to release of debt from attachment see notes to O 21, r 58 Rules 59 to 63 apply to 'debts' also A decree holder is not entitled to recover from the garnishee more than what the judgment debtor himself could recover from the garnishee (z)

Garnishee's right of set off—If a cross debt is due to the garnishee from the judgment debtor at the date of the attachment, the garnishee is entitled to set it off against the amount due by him (a)

Procedure where garnishee resides outside jurisdiction and debt also is payable outside jurisdiction—It is not competent to a Court under this rule to issue a prohibitory order upon a person resident outside the limits of its jurisdiction in respect of property which also is beyond such limits Thus where A obtains a decree in the Court of Bardwan against B residing in Bardwan, and there is a debt due to B from C who resides in Calcutta, the debt being also payable in Calcutta, the proper course for A to adopt, if he seeks to attach the debt, is to apply to the Bardwan Court to issue a prohibitory order upon B prohibiting him from recovering the debt, and also to apply to that Court to transfer the decree for execution to the Calcutta Court, and, after the decree is so transferred, to apply to the Calcutta Court to issue a prohibitory order upon C prohibiting C from paying the debt to B (b)

Claims over which Courts in British India have no juri diction, in which a debt is due to the judgment debtor from a non resident foreigner in respect of which no suit could be brought by the judgment debtor in a British Indian Court are not debts liable to be attached under this rule (c). But where a judgment is recovered in the High Court of Bombay against a foreign corporation the corporation having submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court, and there is a debt due from a bank in Bombay to the Corporation and the debt is payable in Bombay, the High Court of Bombay has jurisdiction to attach the debt and direct the bank to pay the amount of the debt into Court (d).

Shares—A deed of transfer of shares in a company which does not comply with the formalities prescribed by the Indian Companies Act and the Articles of Association of the Company is invalid as against a person who has purchased the shares in execution of a decree against the shareholder (e). See rr. 79 and 80 below.

Sub-rule (3): payment into Court—A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree A attaches a debt due ostensibly from C to D, but alleged by A to be in reality due from C to B. In such a case if the Court orders the amount of the debt to be paid into Court it is incumbent upon the Court to provide by its order that the money when deposited should not be paid to the decree holder [4] until adjudication of the question as to who is entitled to the money, B or D (f).

Garnishee order—Company in liquidation—Where a judgment is recovered against a company which is in voluntary liquidation the invariable practice of the Courts is to stay execution of the judgment unless there are very exceptional reasons for exercising its discretion otherwise. Thus if A obtains a decree against a limited company, and the company thereafter goes into liquidation, and a debt is due by D to the company, the debt forms part of the general assets of the company, and is divisible among the creditors pari passu such being the case A is not entitled to a garnishee order against D (g).

47 [New] Where the property to be attached consists of the share or interest of the judgment debtor in moveable property belonging to him and another as co owners, the attachment shall be made by a notice to the judgment-debtor prohibiting him from transferring the share or interest or charging it in any way.

Attachment of share in moveables—This rule is new. It provides for the attachment of a share or interest in moveable property belonging to the judgment debtor and others in co ownership. Such a share or interest is obviously incapable of actual seizure and provision has therefore been made for the issue to the judgment debtor of a notice prohibiting him from transferring his share or interest in any way.

48 [New] (1) Where the property to be attached is the salary or allowances of a public officer or of a servant of a railway company or local authority, the Court, whether the judgment debtor or the disbursing officer is or is not within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction, may order that the amount shall, subject to the provisions of section 60, be withheld from such salary or allowances either in one payment or by monthly instalments as the Court may direct; and, upon notice of the order to such officer as the Government may, by notification in the Gazette of India or in the local official Gazette, as the case may be, appoint in this behalf, the officer or other person whose duty it is to disburse such salary or allowances shall withhold and remit to the Court the amount due under the order, or the monthly instalments, as the case may be.

(2) Where the attachable proportion of such salary or allowances is already being withheld and remitted to a Court in pursuance of a previous and unsatisfied order of attachment, the officer appointed by the Government in this behalf shall forthwith return the subsequent order to the Court issuing it with a full statement of all the particulars of the existing attachment.

(3) Every order made under this rule, unless it is returned in accordance with the provisions of sub-rule (2), shall, without further notice or other process, bind the Government or the railway company or local authority, as the case may be, while the judgment-debtor is within the local limits to which this Code for the time being extends and while he is beyond those limits if he is in receipt of any salary or allowances payable out of His Majesty's Indian revenues or the funds of a railway company carrying on business in any part of British India or local authority in British India, and the Government or the railway company or local authority, as the case may be, shall be liable for any sum paid in contravention of this rule.

Attachment of salary of public officer, etc.—This rule is new. It provides a special procedure for the attachment of the salary of public officers, railway servants and servants of local authorities. The rule follows upon the lines of section 151, sub section (3), of the Army Act (44 and 45 Vict., c. 58) which, it may be observed, applied only to officers of the army. Under the Code of 1882 the salary of a public officer or railway servant could not be attached unless the disbursing officer was within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree. (h) This led to considerable inconvenience in the execution of decrees, and put the decree holder in many cases to an enormous expense. The present rule substitutes a less expensive, and at the same time more effective machinery for the execution of decrees against this class of judgment debtors. Under it the salary of a public officer or a railway servant or a servant of a local authority may be attached whether the judgment debtor or the decree holder is or is not within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree. As to the extent to which the salary of such persons may be attached see s. 60 cl. (b) and (i).

Sub-rule (3) Liability of Government—Sub r. (3) provides that if an attachment order is not returned in accordance with the provisions of sub r. (2) the Government shall be liable for such sum as should have been stopped out of the judgment debtor's pay. But no order can be made against the Government unless the Government is on the record (i).

49. [New 53 & 54 Vict. c. 39, s. 23 R.S.C., O. 46, rr. 1A and 1B] (1) Save as otherwise provided by this rule, property belonging to a partnership shall not be attached or sold in execution of a decree other than a decree passed against the firm or against the partners in the firm as such.

(2) The Court may, on the application of the holder of a decree against a partner, make an order charging the interest of such partner in the partnership property and profits with payment of the amount due under the decree, and may, by the same or a subsequent order, appoint a receiver of the share of such partner in the profits (whether already declared or accruing) and of any other money which may be coming to him in respect of the partnership, and direct accounts and inquiries and make an order for the sale of such interest or other orders as might have been directed or made if a charge had been made in favour of the decree holder by such partner, or as the circumstances of the case may require.

(3) The other partner or partners shall be at liberty at any time to redeem the interest charged or, in the case of a sale being directed, to purchase the same.

(4) Every application for an order under sub rule (2) shall be served on the judgment debtor and on his partners or such of them as are within British India.

(5) Every application made by any partner of the judgment debtor under sub rule (3) shall be served on the decree-holder and on the judgment debtor, and on such of the other partners as do not join in the application and as are within British India.

(6) Service under sub rule (4) or sub rule (5) shall be deemed to be service on all the partners and all orders made on such applications shall be similarly served.

Attachment of partnership property—This rule is new. The first three sub rules are a reproduction of the English Partnership Act, 1890 [33 and 54 Vict., s. 39] s. 23. The last three rules correspond to O 46 rr 1A and 1B of the English Rules. As to suits by and against firms see O 30 below.

This rule provides that no execution can issue against any partnership property except on a decree passed against the firm or against the partners in the firm as such (j) but a judgment creditor of a partner in a firm may apply for an order charging that partner's interest, and for a receiver. The share of a partner in a partnership business is liable to attachment under s. 60 (1). See notes to s. 50 under the head. Where decree has been passed against a firm.

"Against the partners in the firm as such"—These words in sub r (1) do not occur in s. 23 of the English Partnership Act. They have been added to show that the operation of this rule is not ousted by the mere circumstance that the decree is passed not against the firm but against the partners constituting it where those partners have been sued as such.

"Direct accounts."—It has been held in England under the Partnership Act, s. 2, of which sub r (2) is a reproduction, that the discretion given to direct accounts should only be exercised under special circumstances, as for instance with a view to a dissolution. The decision is based upon the words if a charge had been made in favour of the decree holder by such partner. These words it has been said should be read with s. 31, sub s. 1 of the English Partnership Act which provides that an assignment by a partner of his share in the partnership either absolute or by way of charge does not as against the other partners entitle the assignee during the continuance of the partnership to require any accounts of the partnership transactions, but entitles the assignee only to receive the share of the profits of the assigning partner and the assignee must accept the account of profits agreed to by the partners. Relying upon these provisions Rigby, L.J., said "I think it plain that the intention of the legislature was that under ordinary circumstances in dealing with a case under sub s. 2 of s. 23 [sub r (2) of this rule] the analogy of an assignment by a partner of his share should be adhered to (l). Before the passing of the Partnership Act there was some doubt in England as to whether the assignee of a share in a partnership had a right to compel the other partners to come to an account with him during the continuance of the partnership. Whetham v Dacey (m) and Glyn v Hood (n) favoured the view that he had. But the better opinion seemed to be the other way (o) and it is the one adopted in the Partnership Act. There is no provision in the Indian Contract Act corresponding to that contained in s. 31 of the English Partnership Act. If the decision in Whetham's case be adopted in India as the law governing the rights of an assignee the Court may under sub r (2) direct accounts to be taken whether the circumstances of the case are special or ordinary so that the amount of the share attached may be determined and it may be handed over to the decree holder. But if what is called the better opinion above is adopted as the law in this country,—and it is probably the view that would be adopted here—the Court should not direct accounts to be taken under sub r (2) except under special circumstances.

Execution of decree against

50 [New R. S C, O. 48A, r. 8.] (1)

Where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution may be granted—

- (a) against any property of the partnership ;
- (b) against any person who has appeared in his own name under rule 6 or rule 7 of Order XXX, or who has admitted on the pleadings that he is, or who has been adjudged to be, a partner ;
- (c) against any person who has been individually served as a partner with a summons and has failed to appear

Provided that nothing in this sub-rule shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the provisions of section 247 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872

(2) Where the decree holder claims to be entitled to cause the decree to be executed against any person other than such a person as is referred to in sub rule (1), clauses (b) and (c), as being a partner in the firm, he may apply to the Court which passed the decree for leave, and where the liability is not disputed, such Court may grant such leave, or, where such liability is disputed, may order that the liability of such person be tried and determined in any manner in which any issue in a suit may be tried and determined

(3) Where the liability of any person has been tried and determined under sub-rule (2), the order made thereon shall have the same force and be subject to the same conditions as to appeal or otherwise as if it were a decree

(4) Save as against any property of the partnership, a decree against a firm shall not release, render liable or otherwise affect any partner therein unless he has been served with a summons to appear and answer

Scope of the rule—This rule is new. It is a reproduction of O 48A, r 8, of the English Rules. Execution under this rule can only be granted where a decree has been passed against a firm. A decree passed against a firm must perforce be in the firm's name. Under this rule execution may be granted against the partnership property. It may also be granted against the partners, in which case the decree holder may proceed against the separate property of the partners. It is not to be supposed, however, that where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution will be granted as a matter of course against all the partners, in certain cases, special leave is necessary to issue execution against a partner. It is only when execution is applied for against a person referred to in sub r. (1), cl. (b) and (c), that it will be granted as of course. But where execution is sought against any other person alleged to be a partner, the decree holder must apply to the Court which passed the decree for leave to execute the decree against him. Thus if in a suit against a firm a person has been individually served as a partner with the writ of summons, but fails to appear at the hearing, and a decree is passed against the firm, the decree holder is entitled to execution against him as a matter of course, see cl. (c) of sub r. (1). But a decree holder is not entitled to execution as of course against a person who is sought to be made liable as a partner, but who was not served with the summons and who did not appear at the hearing. In such a case the decree holder must apply for leave to execute the decree against such person. If such person admits the liability, the Court may grant leave without further inquiry (p). But if he disputes the liability the Court may direct an issue to determine whether he was a partner or held himself out to be a partner in the defendant firm (q). These rules follow from the peculiar nature of a suit against a firm and from the special rules as to service of summons in such a suit. To understand the present rule, it is necessary to peruse rules 3, 6 and 7 of Order 30. The important point to note is that where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, it is not necessary that the summons should be served upon each one of them or for the matter of that upon any one of them. It may be served upon any one or more of the partners, or at the principal place of the firm's business upon any person having the control or management of the business though he may not be a partner.

"Where a decree has been passed against a firm."—Execution under this rule can only be granted where a decree has been passed against a firm in the firm's name. A decree cannot be passed against a firm, unless the suit is against partners in the name of their firm. And, conversely, where a suit is against partners in the name of their firm, the decree must be against the firm in the firm's name. See O 30, r 6, and notes thereto.

"Against any property of the partnership" — Property belonging to a partnership shall not be attached or sold in execution of a decree other than a decree passed against the firm or against the partners in the firm as such. See r 49 (1) above.

"Against any person who has appeared" — See O 30, r 3, 6 and 7, and notes thereto.

Leave to issue execution — Order 30 deals with suits by or against firms. Rule 1 provides that two or more persons being liable as co partners may be sued in the firm's name. It does not matter that the firm is dissolved at the date of the suit, so long as the claim in respect of which the suit is brought arose during the partnership (r). Rule 3 of Order 30 provides that where the firm is dissolved to the knowledge of the plaintiff before the institution of the suit the summons should be served upon every partner within British India whom it is sought to be made liable, if some only of several partners are served, and a decree is passed against the firm, the decree holder is not entitled to issue execution against a partner who was not served not even if the decree holder applies for leave under sub r. (2). The reason is that O 30, r 3 overrides sub r. (2) of the present rule. Sub r. (2) applies only where there has been no dissolution or none to the knowledge of the plaintiff. To entitle him to leave under sub r. (2), the decree holder must have served the partner with the summons in accordance with the proviso to rule 3 of Order 30 (s).

The wording of sub r. (2) is wide enough to cover the case of a deceased partner (f). In such a case a consolidated notice may be given under O 21, r. 22, and the present rule (u)

Issue to determine liability—See notes above, "Scope of the rule"

"Court which passed the decree."—See notes below, "Award"

Sub-rule (4)—This sub rule relates to persons other than those referred to in sub r (1), cls (b) and (c). The "summons to appear and answer" in sub r (4) does not mean the writ of summons. It means a summons or a notice to appear and answer the application specified in sub r (2). The object of sub r (4) is to give an opportunity to a person against whom the decree holder seeks to execute the decree other than such a person as is referred to in sub r (1), cls (b) and (c), of disputing his liability as a partner, if he desires to do so (t)

Minor partner—The proviso to sub r (1) declares that nothing in that sub rule should be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the provisions of section 247 of the Contract Act. The combined effect of that section and the present rule is that where a decree has been passed against a firm containing a minor who is admitted to the benefits of a partnership, execution may be granted against the property of the firm including the share of such minor in the property of the firm," but it cannot be granted against the separate property of the minor. Having regard to the definition of a "firm" in s 239 of the Contract Act and to a minor's inability to contract, "the share of such minor in the property of the firm," mentioned in s 247, is merely his right to participate in the property of the firm after its obligations have been discharged (w)

Award—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta (x) and Allahabad (y), that an award against a firm filed under s 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1890, stands on the same footing as a decree, and that the provisions of this rule apply to such an award. In the case of an award "the Court which passed the decree" referred to in sub r (2) is the Court in which the award is filed (z). The High Court of Allahabad has held, relying on s 42 of the Code, that where an award is sent for execution by one Court to another, the latter Court has the power to try the issue as to partnership under sub r (2)(a)

Insolvency of firm—Where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution may be taken out against any partner who was served with the summons. The insolvency of the firm is no bar to execution against individual partners (b)

51. [S. 270] Where the property is a negotiable instrument not deposited in a Court, nor in the custody of a public officer, the attachment shall be made by actual seizure, and the instrument shall be brought into Court and held subject to further orders of the Court.

The proper method of attaching a promissory note in the hands of an individual is by its actual seizure, and not by the issue of a prohibitory order (c)

52 [S 272.] Where the property to be attached is in the custody of any Court or public officer, the attachment shall be made by a notice to such Court or Officer, requesting that such property, and any interest or dividend becoming payable thereon, may be held subject to the further orders of the Court from which the notice is issued

Attachment of property in custody of Court or public officer

Provided that, where such property is in the custody of a Court, any question of title or priority arising between the decree holder and any other person, not being the judgment-debtor claiming to be interested in such property by virtue of any assignment attachment or otherwise, shall be determined by such Court

Attachment of dividends in the hands of Official Assignee—The Official Assignee is a public officer within the meaning of this rule and moneys in his hands payable by way of dividend to a creditor of an insolvent may be attached in execution of a decree against the creditor in the manner provided by this rule (d)

Attachment of property in the hands of a receiver—A receiver is an officer of the Court. An attachment therefore of money in the hands of a receiver made without the previous permission or sanction of the Court for such attachment is improper and irregular and cannot be recognized by the Court (e)

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where a plaintiff has obtained a decree against a firm of which the assets are in the hands of a receiver appointed in a previous partnership suit his proper course is not to issue execution against those assets but to ask the Court for a charging order undertaking by the order to deal with the charge according to the order of the Court (f)

Anticipatory attachment—This rule does not allow of an anticipatory attachment of money expected to reach the hands of a public officer, but applies only to money actually in his hands. An attachment made before the money has reached the hands of the officer is invalid (g)

Priority—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether where a fund in Court is attached by several decree holders they are entitled to share rateably or whether they are to be paid in the order of their attachments. The former view was taken by the High Court of Madras in Katum v. Haji Mahomed (h) and it was followed by the High Court of Calcutta (i). The decision in Katum's case has since been overruled by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (j). The Bombay High Court in a case not yet reported has followed the Full Bench ruling of the Madras High Court.

53 [s 273.] (1) Where the property to be attached is a decree, either for the payment of money or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge, the attachment shall be made,—

Attachment of decrees

(a) if the decrees were passed by the same Court, then by order of such Court, and,

(b) if the decree sought to be attached was passed by another Court, then by the issue to such other Court of a notice by the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed, requesting such other Court to stay the execution of its decree unless and until—

(i) the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed cancels the notice, or

(ii) the holder of the decree sought to be executed or his judgment-debtor applies to the Court receiving such notice to execute its own decree

(2) Where a Court makes an order under clause (a) of sub rule (1), or receives an application under sub-head (ii) of clause (b) of the said sub-rule, it shall, on the application of the creditor who has attached the decree of his judgment-debtor, proceed to execute the attached decree and apply the net proceeds in satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed

(3) The holder of a decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree of the nature specified in sub-rule (1) shall be deemed to be the representative of the holder of the attached decree and to be entitled to execute such attached decree in any manner lawful for the holder thereof.

(4) Where the property to be attached in the execution of a decree is a decree other than a decree of the nature referred to in sub-rule (1), the attachment shall be made by a notice by the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed, to the holder of the decree sought to be attached, prohibiting him from transferring or charging the same in any way, and, where such decree has been passed by any other Court, also by sending to such other Court a notice to abstain from executing the decree sought to be attached until such notice is cancelled by the Court from which it was sent

(5) The holder of a decree attached under this rule shall give the Court executing the decree such information and aid as may reasonably be required. O. 21

(6) On the application of the holder of a decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree, the Court making an order of attachment under this rule shall give notice of such order to the judgment-debtor bound by the decree attached; and no payment or adjustment of the attached decree made by the judgment-debtor in contravention of such order after receipt of notice thereof, either through the Court or otherwise, shall be recognized by any Court so long as the attachment remains in force

Alterations in the rule—This rule corresponds with s 273 of the Code of 1852 except in the following particulars —

- 1 The words 'or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge' in sub r (1) are new. See notes below. Attachment and realization of decrees."
- 2 The words 'or his judgment debtor' in sub r (1), cl (b), sub head (ii) are new. The said words give effect to the opinion expressed by Maclean, C J, in the undermentioned case (1)
- 3 Sub rules (3) and (6) are also new. See notes below under these sub rules.

Attachment and realization of decrees—For the purpose of this rule decrees have been divided into two classes, namely —

- (1) decrees for the payment of money or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge, and
- (2) other decrees

First, as to attachment of decrees—Decrees of the first class are to be attached in the manner prescribed by sub r (1). Decrees of the second class are to be attached in the manner prescribed by sub r (4)

Next, as to realization of attached decrees—Decrees of the first class are to be realized in the manner prescribed by sub r (2). There is no provision made in this rule for the realization of decrees of the 2nd class, e.g., a decree for partition (1), or for foreclosure of a mortgage (m), or a decree for specific performance. These decrees are to be realized by a sale thereof. But decrees of the first class, that is, money decrees (n) and mortgage decrees, are not to be realized by sale (o). They can only be realized in the manner prescribed by sub r (2). The reason of this distinction is as follows —

'Decrees are not expressly mentioned in s 60 as property liable to attachment and sale. Hence they are attachable and saleable as comprised in the expression "all other saleable property" which occurs in that section. Being liable to attachment as saleable property, they can be sold in execution of another decree. But money decrees and mortgage decrees must not be sold, because the present rule prescribes special procedure for the realization of such decrees [sub r (2)]. But for this provision, money-

O. 21, r. 53. decrees and mortgage decrees would have to be realized by sale like other decrees. The special procedure prescribed by sub r (2) is an exception to the general rule that property when attached can only be realized by a sale thereof.

Under the old section, decrees were divided into two classes, namely —

- (1) decrees for the payment of money, and
- (2) other decrees

There was no specific provision for decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage. Hence the question arose whether such decrees belonged to the first class or the second class. The decisions on the subject were conflicting (p). To remove this doubt, the words "or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge" have been inserted in sub r (1). These words make it clear that mortgage decrees are to be attached and realized in the same manner as money decrees [see sub rules (1) and (2)].

Decrees other than money-decrees and mortgage decrees — D1 holds a decree against J for partition of certain property passed in Court X. D2 obtains a decree against D1 for Rs 6,000 in Court Y. If D1 fails to satisfy the decree obtained against him by D2, D2 may apply to Court Y to execute his decree by attachment and sale of the decree held by D1 against J. The decree held by D1, being neither a money decree nor a mortgage decree, the only mode of realizing it in execution of D2's decree is by attachment and sale thereof.

Money-decrees and mortgage-decrees — Where the decree attached is a money decree or a mortgage decree, it can only be realized by execution, it cannot be sold in execution. For this purpose, two applications must be made, one for attachment of the decree, and the other for its execution. The application for attachment must be made by the holder of the decree sought to be executed to the Court which passed it. But the application for execution of the attached decree must be made to the Court which passed the decree attached, and it may be made either by the holder of the decree sought to be executed or by the holder of the decree attached. We proceed to give illustrations.

(a) Where the decree sought to be executed and the decree sought to be attached are passed by the same Court — D1 holds a decree against J for Rs 5,000 passed by Court X. This is a money decree. D2 obtains a decree against D1 also in Court X for Rs 6,000. If D2 seeks to attach D1's decree in execution of his decree, he should apply to Court X for attachment, and either he or D1 may then apply to that Court for execution of the decree held by D1 against J. D can apply for execution, for he is deemed to be the representative of D1 [see sub r (3)].

(b) Where the decree sought to be executed and the decree sought to be attached are passed by different Courts — D1 sues J on a mortgage, and obtains a decree for sale of the mortgaged property under O 34, r 11 in Court X. This is a mortgage decree. D2 obtains a decree against D1 for Rs 6,000 in Court Y, and in execution of his decree applies to Court Y for attachment of the mortgage decree held by D1 against J. The attachment is to be made by the issue to Court Y of a notice by Court Y requesting Court X to stay execution of D1's decree against J unless and until—

- (i) the notice is cancelled by Court Y, or
- (ii) an application is made to Court X by D2 or D1 to execute the decree held by D1 against J.

(p) See Delhi and London Bank Ltd v Partab Singh (1906) 23 All 1 (mortgage-decrees held not to be a money-decrees), and Indira

dasany v Somasundram (1904) 31 Mad 473 (mortgage-decrees held to be a money-decrees)

If an application is made by D2 or D1 to Court X to execute the decree held by D1 against J, Court X will proceed to execute the decree and the nett proceeds that may be realized in execution will be applied in satisfaction of D2's decree

If in the case put above, Court X does not stay execution of D1's decree on receiving the notice from Court Y, and proceeds with the execution in spite of the notice the proceedings will be deemed to be ultra vires, and a sale held in execution of that decree will be set aside as void (9)

Sub-rule (1): Stay—The stay under sub r (1) (b) does not prevent either the holder of the decree sought to be executed or his judgment debtor from seeking to execute the original decree (r)

Sub-rule (3): representative—This sub rule is new. It gives effect to the undermentioned decisions (s) under the Code of 1882. It declares in effect that one who attaches a decree is a representative of the decree holder within the meaning of s 47. Thus in the cases put above D2 is the representative of D1.

A holds a money decree against B. B holds a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage against C. A attaches in execution of his own decree the decree held by B against C. C brings into Court from time to time sums of money for satisfaction of the decree held against him by B. Since A is the 'representative' of B, the payments made by C become forthwith available to A, and operate from their respective dates as partial satisfaction also of the decree held by A against B. Hence interest on the decree held by A runs only up to the dates of the deposits, and not up to the date when A with draws the moneys from Court (f)

Sub-rule (6). Adjustment of attached decree—This sub rule is new. The latter part of the rule gives effect to a Bombay decision that where a decree is attached, no adjustment of the decree subsequent to the attachment can be recognized by the Court (u). See r 2 of this Order.

"Decree"—A decree, whereby B was compelled to deliver up possession of certain lands to C, is reversed in appeal, and B is declared to be entitled to recover back possession from C with mesne profits. A obtains a decree against B and applies in execution of his decree to attach B's right to recover mesne profits from C. The right is not attachable, for it is not a decree. The language [of this rule] seems to apply only to cases where the right attached is a right expressly settled by the decree and not a right arising from the decree by way of restitution (v).

- 2 The latter part of the rule commencing with the words "the attachment shall be deemed to be withdrawn etc," is new. Under the old section, an express order was necessary for the withdrawal of the attachment. No such order is necessary under the present rule. The attachment is to be deemed to be withdrawn on the happening of any of the events specified in cls (a), (b) and (c).

Relation of this rule to s. 73—See notes to s. 73, "Assets not available for rat-able distribution" on p. 208 above.

"The attachment shall be deemed to be withdrawn"—A's property is attached in execution of a decree obtained by him against B. C, another judgment creditor of A, applies for execution of his decree, but no attachment is issued upon his application. On the date fixed for the sale A pays into Court the amount payable under B's decree. The next day C applies for sale of the property. C is not entitled to have the property sold because the effect of the payment into Court was the withdrawal of the attachment under this rule, and there being no attachment under C's decree no sale can be ordered in execution of his decree (b).

56. [s. 27.] Where the property attached is current coin or currency notes, the Court may, at any time during the continuance of the attachment, direct that such coin or notes, or a part thereof sufficient to satisfy the decree, be paid over to the party entitled under the decree to receive the same.

57. [Nou.] Where any property has been attached in execution of a decree, but by reason of the decree-holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a future date. Upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease.

Determination of attachment

Object of the rule—The object of the rule is to put an end to doubts which have arisen from time to time as to the continuance of an attachment by reason of the practice of striking off proceedings or removing proceedings from the file for which there was no justification under any of the earlier Codes (c). This subject has already been discussed in the notes to s. 64 under the head "Effect of striking off execution proceedings or of removing them from the file," on p. 186 above.

By reason of the decree holder's default—The provisions of this rule that the attachment should cease upon the dismissal of the application for execution do not apply unless the dismissal was on the ground of default on the part of the decree holder (d). The word default is not confined to default in appearance or in payment of process fees or in production of documents, but includes failure to do what the decree holder is bound to do, that is, to proceed with his application for execution. Failure, therefore, to give notice to the judgment debtor prior to the drawing up of the proclamation as required by r 66 of this Order, is default within the meaning of this rule (e). Where a sale in execution of a decree is set aside for any reason other than this default on the part of the decree holder, the antecedent attachment is revived so as to support a second application for execution of the decree by sale of the same property and no fresh attachment is necessary (f).

Upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease—These words are imperative. A Court therefore has no power while dismissing an application for default on the part of the decree holder to direct by its order that the attachment shall continue. Thus where an executing Court made an order that the execution case is accordingly dismissed, the properties will remain under attachment, it was held that the order being one dismissing the application for execution, the attachment ceased by virtue of the provisions of this rule notwithstanding the direction that the attachment should continue (g). In a recent Allahabad case, the order ran in these terms: "The execution case should for the time being be dismissed but the attachment shall remain in force." The Court held that it was in effect an order adjourning the proceedings and was therefore valid (h). The points stated above derive importance from the fact that an alienation of property after the attachment has ceased is not within the prohibition contained in s 64.

Attachment before judgment—It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras that the words "property attached in execution of a decree" includes property attached before judgment, where there has been a decree followed by an application for execution to bring the attached property to sale. Hence upon the dismissal of such an application by reason of the decree holder's default the attachment, though it was made before judgment, ceases (i). A sues B and obtains an order for attachment before judgment. A then obtains a decree in the suit against B. Thereafter A applies for execution of the decree, but the application is dismissed for default of prosecution. The dismissal of the application puts an end to the attachment before judgment. The contrary has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (j) and Calcutta (k).

Enforcement of sale

Rules 58 to 63—These rules deal with investigation of claims preferred to property attached in execution of a decree and of objections to the attachment of such property

Scope of the rule—Objections to attachment raised by a party to the suit in which the decree under execution was passed or his representative fall within the scope of r 47. Objections to attachment raised by a third party come under the present rule. This distinction is important in two ways—

1 Where an objection to attachment is made by a party to the suit or his representative the objector should proceed by an application under s 47 a separate suit for the purpose is barred. But where an objection to attachment is made by a third party the objector may either proceed by an application under this rule or he may bring a regular suit to establish his objection. Failure to proceed by an application under this rule is no bar to a separate suit. The object of this rule is to give a claimant a speedy and summary remedy but the rule does not deprive him of his remedy by suit. The summary remedy given by this rule is alternative to the remedy by way of suit (1) See notes to r 63 below. Payment by claimant under protest

2 An order made under s 47 allowing or disallowing an objection to attachment is a decree (s 2), and is therefore appealable. But orders under r 60 b1 or c2 made upon an application under this rule are not appealable under the Code (m) and the remedy of the party against whom the order is made is by a regular suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute (r 63). Such suit must be brought within one year from the date of the order [Limitation Act art 11] (n) but subject to such suit the order is conclusive (o) see r 63.

The following illustration shows the operation of rr 58-62. In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property alleged to belong to B is attached. If the property attached is claimed by C C may bring a regular suit for a declaration that the property attached belongs to him and for removal of the attachment. Or if he desires to avail himself of the speedy remedy provided by this rule he may present an application to the Court executing the decree claiming that the property belongs to him and for the removal of the attachment. If C's claim is allowed (r 60) A (decree holder) may bring a suit under r 63 for a declaration that the property belongs to B (judgment debtor)

And if C's claim is disallowed (r 61), he may bring a suit for a declaration that the property attached belongs to him, and is therefore not liable to attachment. If no such suit is brought within one year from the date of the order under r 60 or 61, the order will be conclusive.

Objections to attachment, though made by a party to a suit or his representative, come within the scope of this rule if the objection is based on the ground that the property attached is held by him on behalf of a third party as a trustee, guardian, or in any other fiduciary capacity. See notes to s 47 under the heads "Parties to the suit" p 134 above and "Objection by party or his representative that property attached is not liable to attachment" p 142 above.

Mortgage-decree.—This rule does not apply where the property in dispute is directed to be sold under a mortgage decree. The reason is that the property directed to be sold under a mortgage decree does not require to be attached by way of execution (p) and the benefit of the summary procedure afforded by the present rule is limited to claims and objections arising in respect of an attachment. A obtains a decree against B for sale of certain property mortgaged to him, and applies in execution for the sale thereof. If the property is claimed by C, he must proceed by a suit for a declaration that the property belongs to him and not by an application under this rule (q).

Rules 58 to 63 apply to "debts" also.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5,000 and attaches in execution of the decree a debt alleged to be due by C to B. Can C apply under this rule to have the attachment removed? Yes, and if the attachment is not removed he may institute a suit for a declaration that no debt is due from him to B within a year from the date of the order against him. If no such suit is filed, the order will be conclusive against him (r). In an earlier Bombay case, the opinion was expressed that the procedure laid down in the sections of the Code of 1882 corresponding to rr 58 to 63 did not apply to a debt attached in execution of a decree, the reason given being that a debt was not property capable of possession within the meaning of rr 60 and 61, and that if C alleged that no debt was due the proper course was for the court to satisfy itself as to its existence (r 60) and if it was satisfied that no debt existed it should abstain from proceeding to sell the debt (s). But this view has since been disented from, and it has been held that the words "possessed of" in rr 60 and 61 are not restricted to objects capable of physical possession, but apply also to objects capable of constructive possession such as a debt. Moreover the word "property" in the present rule is wide enough to include a debt. As to a garnishee's right to set off, see notes to r 46 above.

Appeal.—No appeal lies under the Code from an order made in a claim case [see notes to s 47, "Objection by party or his representative that property attached is not liable to attachment" p 142 above]. But it has been held by the High Court of Madras that an appeal lies from such an order under cl 15 of the Letters Patent. It follows from this that where an appeal is preferred from the order the period of limitation for the suit contemplated by r 63 below is to be calculated from the date of the order made on appeal (t).

Limits of inquiry under rules 59 to 61 —In Sardhari Lal v Ambika Prasad (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council said The Code does not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go and though in some cases it may be very proper that there should be as full an investigation as if a suit were instituted for the very purpose of trying the question in other cases it may also be the most prudent and proper course to deliver an opinion on such facts as are before the Court at the time leaving the aggrieved party to bring the suit which the law allows him [see r 63] Rules 51 to 62 provide for a summary investigation into possession as distinct from a thorough trial of ultimate right It is impossible to separate altogether the question of possession and of title Thus if the judgment debtor was in possession he may have been in possession as agent or trustee for another [re 60 61] and this has to be inquired into To that extent the title may be part of the inquiry in a claim case but no ultimate questions of trust are intended to be thrashed out (u) In execution of a decree obtained by A against B three pieces of Government securities are attached The securities stand in the name of C C applies for removal of the attachment under r 58, alleging that the securities belong to him and they are held by him on his own account A alleges that the securities are held by C benami for B It is not open to the Court under these circumstances to inquire whether C in whose name the securities stand is merely a benamidar for B The property must therefore be released from attachment (x) The question whether C is merely a benamidar is a question of title and it should be gone into in a suit under r 63 Similarly if the property attached is claimed by a person as a Mutawali under a deed of wakf and it is proved that he has been in possession as mutawali for upwards of 20 years the property must be released from attachment The Court has no power under these rules to decide whether the deed of wakf is valid (y) The words possession of the judgment debtor or of some person in trust for him in ss 60 and 61 refer to cases in which the possession of a claimant as a trustee is of such a character as to be really the possession of the judgment debtor, and not to cases in which very intricate questions of law may arise as to whether or not valid trusts may result in particular instances (z) If instead of determining the question of possession the Court determines the question of title, and disposes of the application on the question of title the order is open to revision under s 110 of the Code (a) Similarly where a Court ought to inquire into the question whether the posses

60 [S 280] Where upon the said investigation the Court is satisfied that for the reason stated in the claim or objection such property was not, when attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor or of some person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or that, being in the possession of the judgment-debtor at such time, it was so in his possession, not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in trust for some other person, or partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall make an order releasing the property, wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit, from attachment

Release of property from attachment

Property in possession of some person not in trust for judgment-debtor—A obtained a decree against B as the heir and legal representative of his deceased father and in execution of the decree attached certain money in the hands of C due to the estate of the deceased. Prior to the date of the decree an order had been made by the High Court under ss 17 and 18 of the Administrator General's Act 2 of 1874 (now Act 3 of 1913 as 10 and 11) authorising the Administrator General to collect the assets of the deceased. It was held on the application of the Administrator General that the attachment should be removed. As the order under the Administrator General's Act authorised the Administrator General to realise the debt from C as part of the assets of the deceased, the amount in the hands of C could not be said to be property in the possession of a third person in trust for the judgment debtor (B) (c) See notes to r 62 below

Property in possession of a judgment-debtor not on his own account but on account of or in trust for some other persons—Such property, if attached, should be released from attachment under this rule. Thus where goods consigned by railway by A to B for sale against which B had made specific advances were attached, while they were yet in the hands of the railway company, in execution of a decree against A, it was held that though the goods were in the possession of A (judgment debtor) by the railway company, they were in his possession not on his own account, but on account of or in trust for B, and should therefore be released from attachment on B's application (d)

Effect of order of release—An order made under this rule releasing the property attached from attachment is only provisional and liable to be set aside by a regular suit (r 63). It is not conclusive, a suit may be brought to claim the property, not with-standing the order * (e) It has not the effect therefore of putting an end to an attachment duly made, so as to leave the claimant free to deal with the property as he likes. If a suit is brought by the decree holder to establish his right to attach the property, and a decree is passed for him, the effect of the decree is to set aside the order of release and to maintain the attachment originally made. The result is that any private transfer of the property by the claimant, though made after an order under this rule releasing the property from attachment, will be void under s 64, if the right to attach is subsequently established by suit under r 63 (f). In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property standing in the name of C (B's son) is attached. C objects to the attachment, and the property is released from attachment under this rule. C then mortgages the property to V. A then sues B and C for a declaration that B, and not C, is the real owner of the property, and that the property is therefore liable to be sold in execution of his decree against B, and a decree is passed in his favour. The property is then re attached and sold in execution of A's decree, and purchased by P. The mortgage to V is a transfer contrary to the attachment within the meaning of s 64, and P takes the property free from the mortgage. Similarly any payment made by a debtor to his creditor, though after the attachment on the debt has been raised, cannot prevail over the attaching decree-holder who eventually succeeds in a suit brought by him under this rule (g). In the case, however, of an attachment before judgment it is obligatory upon the Court to withdraw such attachment upon the dismissal of the suit [O 38, r 9], and the reversal of the judgment of dismissal on appeal does not operate to revive the attachment which has been withdrawn (h).

61 [S 281.] Where the Court is satisfied that the property was, at the time it was attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor as his own property and not on account of any other person, or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, the Court shall disallow the claim.

Disallowance of claim to property attached

Limits of inquiry under rr. 59 to 61—See notes to r 59 above under the same head.

Effect of order under this rule—An order in favour of a decree holder made under this rule does not enure for the benefit of other decree holders who are not parties to the proceedings (i).

Disallowance of claim—An order disallowing a claim under this rule is not a nullity and cannot be said to have been made without jurisdiction merely because the Court erroneously does not go into the question of possession, but disallows the claim on some other ground. Such an order, therefore, is conclusive unless a suit is filed by the claimant as provided by r 63 of this Order (j).

62 [S 282] Where the Court is satisfied that the continuance of attachment subject to claim of property is subject to a mortgage or charge in favour of some person not in possession, and thinks fit to continue the attachment, it may do so, subject to such mortgage or charge

Scope of the rule—This rule is an enabling rule empowering the Court to pass a certain specified order on the fulfilment of two specified conditions. The conditions are (1) that the Court is satisfied that the property attached is subject to a mortgage or lien in favour of some person not in possession, and (2) that the Court in its discretion thinks fit to continue the attachment. Where those two conditions are satisfied then the rule empowers the Court to continue the attachment subject to the mortgage or charge. An order which refuses to acknowledge a mortgage or charge and directs the continuance of the attachment free from such mortgage or lien cannot be referred to this rule. It is rather an order in proceedings under r 60 below (1). But it has been held that where a mortgagee applies to the Court to sell the property subject to the mortgage but his application is disallowed the order is to be referred to this rule and the order will be conclusive unless he brings a suit under r 63 within a year from the date of the order (1).

"Subject to a mortgage"—The Code clearly makes a distinction between the case in which property is expressly sold subject to a mortgage and the case in which notice of an alleged mortgage is given in the proclamation of sale. The former is provided for by the present rule and the latter by r 60 below. In the former case the Court after being satisfied of the existence of the mortgage sells only the judgment debtor's equity of redemption, that is to say, the purchaser buys the property subject to the mortgage. In the latter case he buys the property with notice of the mortgage and subject to such risk as the notice might involve, the executing Court does not decide whether the mortgage subsists or not. Such being the case if there is in reality a subsisting mortgage the purchaser has to redeem it. If on the other hand the mortgage specified in the proclamation of sale turns out invalid the purchaser acquires the property free from liability for the mortgage. The point to be noted is that mere notice of an alleged mortgage in the proclamation of sale does not preclude the purchaser from questioning the validity of the mortgage (m). And it is also to be noted that if the mortgage specified in the proclamation turns out invalid, the judgment debtor is not entitled to claim from the purchaser the amount alleged to have been due on the mortgage (n).

"Mortgage in favour of some person not in possession"—It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where a mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property at the time of attachment he can claim to have the attachment removed under r 60 the reason given being that a mortgagee cannot be said to be in

63 [S 283.] Where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive

Saving of s 115 to establish right to attached property

Alteration in the rule—S 283 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows The party against whom an order under sections 280 281 or 282 [now rr 60, 61 or 62] is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims, etc The present rule on the other hand says that where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims etc The specific reference to the previous sections or rules has been omitted A corresponding change has also been made in the Limitation Act 1908 Sch I art II See notes below, Order against party to a claim or objection

Parties to suits under this rule—This rule provides that unless the party against whom an order is made institutes a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute [within the period of a year from the date of the order as provided by art 11 of the Limitation Act 1908] the order made against him shall be conclusive Now the party against whom an order may be made may be the decree holder (r 60) or the claimant including an incumbrancer (r 61) or even the judgment debtor The result therefore is as follows —

1 The decree holder against whom an order is made under r 60 may sue the successful claimant for a declaration of his right to attach and sell the property released from attachment (q) To such a suit the judgment debtor is not a necessary party (r)

2 The claimant whose claim has been disallowed under r 61 may sue the decree holder to establish his right to the property attached (s) To such a suit the judgment debtor is a necessary party (t) The claimant may in his suit under this rule ask also for any further or consequential relief to which he claims to be entitled (u) e.g. damages for wrongful seizure (v) but he is not bound to do so (w) And since the right conferred by this rule is not a personal one confined to the original claimant a purchaser of the interest of the original claimant can also bring a declaratory suit under this rule (x)

3 A attaches a house on execution of a decree against B The property is claimed by C The Court allows C's claim and the property is released from attachment This is an order against the decree holder (r 60) Does it also amount to an order against the judgment debtor In other words can it be said by reason of the fact that C's claim to the property is allowed that the order operates also against B the judgment debtor? As a matter of fact the order does operate against B it can only be if B is deemed to be a party against whom an order is made within the meaning of this rule If so B may bring a declaratory suit against C within a year from the date of the order other

O. 21, r. 63. wise the order against him would be conclusive. But it has been held that a judgment debtor who is not in fact a party to the claim proceedings does not in the eye of the law become such by reason solely of his being the judgment debtor. Unless therefore he is a party in fact, the order is not binding upon him, and he may institute a suit even after the lapse of one year from the date of the order provided he does so within the ordinary period of limitation applicable to the suit to establish his title to and recover possession of the property from the claimant [C] (y). But if he was a party in fact the order would be binding on him unless he brought the suit within the period of one year.

Alienee pendente lite—A purchaser of property from a claimant, after an order has been passed in the claimant's favour removing the attachment on the property, but before the institution of a suit by the decree holder against the claimant under this rule is an alienee pendente lite and is not therefore a necessary party to the suit. The alienee however takes the property subject to the provisions of s 52 of the Transfer of Property Act (z). In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property alleged to belong to B is attached. C claims the property. C's claim is allowed and the attachment is removed. C then sells the property to D. A then sues B and C for a declaration that at the date of attachment the property belonged to B and that he [C] is entitled to attach it. D is not a necessary party to the suit. But the alienation by C to D will be affected by the doctrine of lis pendens as laid down in s 52 of the Transfer of Property Act 1882.

Period of limitation for suit under this rule—The period of limitation for a suit under this rule is one year from the date of the order [Limitation Act 1908 Sch I art 11]. In Sardhari Lal v Arifika Pershad (a) the Judicial Committee said:

It [that is the order] is not conclusive a suit may be brought to claim the property notwithstanding the order but then the law of limitation says that the plaintiff must be prompt in bringing his suit. The policy of the Act evidently is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised at execution sales and for that reason a year is fixed as the time within which the suit must be brought. Where an appeal is preferred from the order the period of one year is to be calculated from the date of the appellate order (b).

Suit not necessary if the property is released from attachment within the period of limitation—Where after an order disallowing a claimant's claim and directing the attachment to continue the attachment ceases within the period of one year from the date of the order e.g. by reason of the dismissal of the application for execution under r 57 above for default of prosecution (c) or by reason of the withdrawal of attachment on payment by the judgment debtor to the decree holder of the amount of the decree (d) it is not incumbent upon the claimant to institute a suit under this rule or to prosecute the suit if he has already brought one and he will not be affected by any of the consequences which result from a failure to institute a suit under this rule. In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property alleged to belong to B is attached. C claims the property as his own but the claim is disallowed. Within one year from the date of the order A's application for execution is dismissed under r 57 above. C is not bound to bring a suit under this rule.

Character of suit under this rule—This rule provides that a party against whom the order referred to in this rule is made may institute a suit "to establish his right to the property in dispute" The words "to establish his right to the property" are, it has been held, wide enough to cover a suit not only for a declaration, but a suit for a declaration and consequential relief Thus a plaintiff may under this rule sue for a declaration of his right to movables and also for a direction that the defendant at whose instance they were attached be ordered to pay to him the value of the movables (e)

A suit under this rule is not limited by any special standard of evidence or of law The claimant may, if necessary, thrash out his title in the fullest and most ultimate sense But if the title which he claims is not the ultimate full title to the property, then, of course, he must be content to assert whatever the title claimed may be So, too, the decree holder may make out his debtor's title exactly as if it were a suit for possession by the debtor (f)

"Subject to the result of such suit, the order shall be conclusive"—This means that unless the suit is brought as provided by this rule, the party against whom the order is made cannot assert, either as plaintiff or as defendant in any other suit or as a party to any other proceeding, the right denied to him by the order (g) A obtains a decree against B, and in execution of the decree attaches certain property alleged to belong to B C claims that he is in possession of the property under a sale from B of a date prior to the attachment, and applies that the property be released from attachment The executing Court finds that C was in possession at the date of the attachment, but that the sale to him was fictitious and disallows C's claim No suit is brought by C within the period of a year to establish his right to the property The property is then sold in execution, and purchased by P P then sues C for possession C is precluded in this suit from again asserting his right as purchaser from B No suit having been brought by him within the period of limitation, the order disallowing his claim became conclusive against him under this rule Similarly if A in execution of a decree against B attaches a debt alleged to be due by C to B, and C objects to the attachment on the ground that no debt is due by him to B, and C's objection is overruled, but no suit is brought by him under this rule, he will be precluded in a suit against him by the purchaser of the debt in execution from contending that no debt was due by him to B (h) The result would be the same even if C had brought a suit against A and B to establish his right to the debt, and the suit was dismissed The result of failure to file the suit as also of the dismissal of the suit where one is filed, is that the order becomes conclusive not only as regards the parties to the order or the suit, but also as regards the auction purchaser In either case C cannot assert his claim in a substantive suit against the auction purchaser, nor can he set it up by way of defence to a suit against him by the auction purchaser (i)

The order is conclusive as against the party against whom it is made—A obtains a decree against B, and attaches B's property in execution of his decree C claiming to be a mortgagee of the property puts in a claim under r 58 A contends that the mortgage is not valid, but his contention is disallowed No suit is instituted by A as required by the present rule, and the order becomes conclusive against him The property is then sold subject to C's mortgage, and it is purchased by A a mortgagee applied that the sale proceeds should be kept in Court to satisfy his mortgage, but the application was dismissed on the ground that the sale had already taken place and the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the application, it was held that there was no order "against" the mortgagee (s). Where A preferred a claim to the property attached on the ground that he was entitled to a share in the property, and the Court made an order in these terms, namely, "Whatever right the judgment debtor has will pass by the sale, the claim does not require any further investigation; the claim put forward will be noted in the sale proclamation," it was held that it was not an order "against" the claimant (t).

5 If a party prefers a claim on the footing that there was an attachment, there being no attachment in fact, and submits the merits of his claim to the Court for investigation, he is equally a person "against" whom an order is passed so as to attract the application of the present rule (u)

Orders in proceedings for attachment before judgment—Rules 58 to 63 apply to claims preferred to property attached before judgment (v). But a Provincial Court of Small Causes has no power to attach immovable property before judgment, and an order made by such a Court adjudicating a claim to property so attached is ultra vires (w). See notes to s 7 on p 16 above.

Suit for refund of purchase money.—This rule applies to a suit to establish the plaintiff's right to the property in dispute. It does not apply to a case where a plaintiff whose claim to the property is disallowed under r 61 sues the judgment debtor for a refund of the money paid by him for the purchase of the property. A sells certain property to B. C obtains a decree against A and attaches the property in execution. B claims the property as purchaser, but his claim is disallowed. B sues A for a refund of the purchase money more than a year after the date of the order, but within the ordinary period of limitation. The suit is not barred by limitation. The reason is that r 63 does not apply to such a suit (x).

Revival of attachment on the suit being decreed.—See notes to r 60
' Effect of order of release on p 668 above

Payment by claimant under protest.—If the claimant fails, and the attachment is not removed, he is not compelled to bring a suit under this rule for a declaration of his title to the property. He may prevent the sale of the property by paying the decretal amount to the decree holder, and then sue for it as money paid under compulsion of law, i. e., under pressure of execution proceedings (y). Further, the claimant is not bound to take proceedings at all under the Code to set aside the attachment. He may pay the amount of the decree under protest, and then sue as stated above (z). See notes to ¶ 64 below.

Jurisdiction—In a suit for a declaration that property is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, where the value of the property is in excess of the amount claimed in execution of the decree, the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is not the value of the property, but the decretal amount (a). [illegible]

21, r. 63. the plaintiff seeks not only for a declaration that the property is not attachable, but for a declaration of his title to the property as against the decree holder and the judgment debtor, the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is the value of the property (b)

Burden of proof—The burden of proof in a suit under this rule lies on the plaintiff as in other cases, and not on the defendant (c)

Effect of attachment on adverse possession—It has been held by the High Court of Madras that attachment of property in execution of a decree does not arrest the running of time in favour of a party holding the property adversely to the judgment debtor (d) A obtains a decree against B. In June 1921 A attaches certain property alleged to belong to B. C objects to the attachment, and the attachment is raised in April 1927. In January 1923 A sues C under this rule for a declaration that the property belongs to B and that he is entitled to attach it. C contends that he has been in possession of the property adversely to C for upwards of 12 years, and that A's suit is barred by limitation. The fact is that at the date of the attachment C's possession was for 11 years only, and at the date of the suit it was for upwards of 12 years. According to the Madras High Court, the period of C's possession is to be counted up to the date of the suit, and A's suit is therefore barred, the reason given being that attachment could not prevent the running of time in favour of C. On the other hand, according to the Bombay High Court, the period of C's possession must be counted only up to the date of attachment, and hence A's suit is not barred, the reason given being that the real question in such a case was whether the judgment debtor [B] had a subsisting right to the property at the date of attachment (e). According to the Calcutta High Court also the material date is the date of attachment (f).

Fraudulent transfer by judgment-debtor—Where a claim is made to the property attached by one claiming to be the purchaser thereof, and the claim is disallowed, and the claimant subsequently institutes a suit under this rule to establish his title to the property, it is open to the attaching decree holder to plead in defence that the transfer was in fraud of creditors. In execution of a decree obtained by A against B B's property is attached. C claims the property as having been purchased by him from B before A obtained the decree against B, but the claim is disallowed. C then sues A and B under this rule to establish his right to the property. A pleads in defence that the transfer by B to C was made with intent to defraud B's creditors. It has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that it is open to an attaching creditor [A] in a suit under this rule to plead in defence the fraudulent character of the alienation (g). The same view has been taken by the High Courts of Calcutta (h) and Bombay (i). If in the case put above C's claim is allowed and the attachment is raised it is competent to A, the attaching creditor, to sue C, the transferee, under this rule, to establish his right to attach the property, and to allege and prove in such suit that the transfer by B to C was fraudulent (j).

Court-fee—The Court fee payable upon the plaint in a suit by a person whose claim to property attached in execution has been dismissed is Rs. 10 under the Court Fees Act, Sch. II art. 17, whether the claim is dismissed for default or after investigation (k).

Sale generally

64 [S. 284] Any Court executing a decree may order that any property attached by it and liable to sale, or such portion thereof as may seem necessary to satisfy the decree, shall be sold, and that the proceeds of such sale, or a sufficient portion thereof, shall be paid to the party entitled under the decree to receive the same

Power to order property attached to be sold and proceeds to be paid to person entitled

Sale of goods not belonging to judgment-debtor—A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree A points out to the sheriff's agent goods belonging to C as the property of B. C's goods are thereupon attached by the sheriff's agent, and sold in execution. C is entitled to claim from A the market value of his goods as on the date of attachment. The sheriff is not liable in such a case (1)

65 [S. 286] Save as otherwise prescribed, every sale in execution of a decree shall be conducted by an officer of the Court or by such other person as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be made by public auction in manner prescribed

Sales by whom conducted and how made

Save as otherwise prescribed—See r 76 below

66 [S. 287] (1) Where any property is ordered to be sold by public auction in execution of a decree, the Court shall cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made in the language of such Court

Proclamation of sale by public auction

(2) Such proclamation shall be drawn up after notice to the decree holder and the judgment-debtor and shall state the time and place of sale and specify as fairly and accurately as possible—

- (a) the property to be sold,
- (b) the revenue assessed upon the estate or part of the estate, where the property to be sold is an interest in an estate or in part of an estate paying revenue to the Government,
- (c) any incumbrance to which the property is liable,
- (d) the amount for the recovery of which the sale is ordered

J. 21, r. 66.

(e) every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property.

(3) Every application for an order for sale under this rule shall be accompanied by a statement signed and verified in the manner hereinbefore prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings and containing, so far as they are known to or can be ascertained by the person making the verification, the matters required by sub-rule (2) to be specified in the proclamation

(4) For the purpose of ascertaining the matters to be specified in the proclamation, the Court may summon any person whom it thinks necessary to summon and may examine him in respect to any such matters and require him to produce any document in his possession or power relating thereto.

Alterations in the rule:—

- 1 The provision in sub r (2) for notice to be given to the decree holder and the judgment debtor is new
- 2 Sub r (3) is also new

Incumbrances to which the property is liable—Where a decree holder who held a simple money decree stated in his application [sub r (3)] that the property to be sold was subject to a mortgage in his favour, but no mention was made of the mortgage in the proclamation, the omission not being due to any fraud on his part, it was held that he was not estopped from enforcing his mortgage against the auction purchaser (m). But he would be so estopped if he omitted to mention his mortgage in the application (n). See notes to r 62 of this order

Value of the property.—Clause (e) of the rule provides that the proclamation shall specify as fairly and accurately as possible "every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property". There can hardly be any doubt that the value of the property to be put up for sale is a material fact within the meaning of cl (e). As stated by the Judicial Committee in Saadatmud Mohan v Phul Kuar (o), "Whatever material fact is stated in the proclamation (and the value of the property is a very material fact) must be considered as one of these things 'which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know,' and it is enacted in terms (though express enactment is hardly necessary for such an object) that those things shall be stated 'as fairly and accurately as possible'". If any enquiry into the value of the property is necessary, the Court should hold an enquiry (p). If the value is understated in the proclamation, and the understatement is such as is calculated to mislead bidders and to prevent them from offering adequate prices, and the sale results in a price altogether inadequate, the sale must be set aside on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale within the meaning of r. 90 below (g) In a Calcutta case it was said that the Court was not bound to investigate the value of the property (r), but these remarks were obiter dicta (s), and it was held in a later case that the Court is bound under this clause to investigate the value and insert it in the sale proclamation (t). In view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case cited above, there is no doubt that the value of the property should be stated as fairly and accurately as possible in the sale proclamation. The Court may in an exceptional case state in the proclamation the values stated both by the decree holder and the judgment debtor instead of attempting itself to value the property (u).

Specifying incumbrances—See notes to r. 90 below, "Material irregularity in publishing or conducting sale," no 1A.

Sale by Court—Duty of Court—In a case in which the terms of the proclamation were not clearly explained by the officer of the Court conducting the sale to a person present at the sale who asked that the terms be explained, and such person was thereupon misled into buying property which was subject to mortgages amounting to more than its value, the Judicial Committee in setting aside the sale observed: "In sales under the direction of the Court it is incumbent on the Court to be scrupulous in the extreme and very careful to see that no taint or touch of fraud or deceit or misrepresentation is found in the conduct of its ministers. It would be disastrous, it would be absolutely shocking, if the Court were to enforce against a purchaser misled by its duly accredited agents a bargain so illusory and so unconscientious as this" (1).

Non compliance with provisions of this rule—See notes to r. 90 below "Material irregularity in publishing or conducting sale," nos. 1A and 2

Appeal—An order under this rule, not being included in the list of appealable orders given in O 43, is not appealable as an order. The question then arises whether an order under this rule is an order in execution proceedings within the meaning of s 47. Now an order in execution proceedings may be a final order, that is, it may conclusively determine the rights of parties or it may be interlocutory. In the former case the order operates as a decree and is appealable as such [s 2 (2)], but it is not so in the latter case [see notes to s 47, Interlocutory orders in execution proceedings, on p 144 above]. The question therefore in each case is whether a particular order made under this rule conclusively determines the rights of the parties or not.

It was held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras in Sitagani v Subrahmaniam (w), which was a case under the corresponding section 287 of the Code of 1882, that none of the proceedings of a Court under that section in relation to the proclamation of sale is an order within s. 244 (now s 47) so as to be appealable as a decree. In the course of the Order of Reference the learned Judges said: "We are disposed to think that the preliminary objection is well founded and that under section 287, Civil Procedure Code, the proceedings are in themselves administrative and not judicial, but that if and when a sale does take place, if over, and if has to be judicially confirmed, objections may be taken to the confirmation of the

O. 21, r. 66. sale on any of the grounds mentioned in section 311, Civil Procedure Code [now O 21, r 90], some of which may relate to the contents of the proclamation. This view receives strong corroboration from the provision enacted by section 288, Civil Procedure Code, that no Judge or other public officer shall be answerable for any error, mis statement or omission in any proclamation under section 287, Civil Procedure Code, unless the same has been committed or made dishonestly, a provision which in view of Act XVIII of 1850, would have been quite superfluous if proceedings under section 287, Civil Procedure Code, were 'judicial' and not 'administrative'." In delivering their opinion the Full Bench said: "We concur in the reasons given in the Order of Reference, and we may add that the view that the proceedings in themselves, under section 287, are of an administrative and not of a judicial character is further supported by the fact that special provision is made in section 287 [now O 21, r 66 (4)] to summon witnesses and make enquiry into the matters referred to in the section, a provision which would be superfluous if the proceedings were judicial". It has accordingly been held by that Court that an order under this rule determining the value of the property to be sold, the place where the sale is to take place, the lots in which it is to be sold, and the amount for the recovery of which the property is to be sold, is not a judicial but an administrative order, and it does not come within s 244 (now s 47) and is not appealable (x). It has similarly been held that no appeal lies from an order directing in what order the property should be sold (y). It may here be stated that s 288 of the Code of 1882 has not been reproduced in the present Code. In a recent case (z) the High Court of Madras observed that the Full Bench decision was good law even under the present Code, notwithstanding the omission of s 288, though in another case (a) Schwabe, C J, expressed a doubt on that point.

The High Court of Calcutta has held that an order under this rule may be final or it may be interlocutory. If it is final, it falls within s 47 and is appealable as a decree, but not if it is interlocutory. It has accordingly been held that an order determining the value of the property to be sold is merely interlocutory and is not appealable (b). An order directing 'let sale proclamation be issued, in the meantime I shall hear the objection of the judgment debtor,' is also interlocutory (c). But an order adjudicating upon a dispute as to the boundaries of the property sold and determining that certain accreted land should be included in the property to be sold is final and is appealable as a decree (d). It may be observed that such of the decisions under the Code of 1882, which were based on the definition of 'decree' in so far as it was different from the definition in this Code, are no longer a guide in cases arising under this Code.

The High Court of Allahabad has also held that an order under this rule determining the value of the property to be sold does not fall within s 47 and is not appealable. The reason given is that in such a case "the Court judicially decides nothing" (e).

In two earlier cases the High Court of Patna held that an order under this rule determining the value of the property to be sold was merely interlocutory and was not therefore appealable (f). In a recent Patna case a Bench of three Judges held that an order of the Court determining any of the particulars to be stated in the sale proclamation under this rule is not a final order and is not appealable. It was accordingly held in that case that an order refusing to notify a lease in the sale proclamation was not final and was not appealable (g)

Letters Patent appeal—An order of a single Judge of the High Court sitting on the Original Side refusing to alter the upset price fixed in a proclamation of sale or to direct the sale of the property in lots or to postpone the date of sale is not a judgment within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent, but merely an interlocutory order, and no appeal lies from it under that clause (A)

Non-appearance of legal representative and res judicata—Mere non attendance of the legal representative of a deceased judgment debtor pursuant to a notice under sub r (2) [App E, form no 28] at the hearing of an application to settle the terms of a sale proclamation does not estop the legal representative on the principle of res judicata from contending thereafter that the property attached belongs to him personally and that it does not form part of the estate of the deceased judgment debtor. The notice under sub r (2) is merely to settle the terms of the proclamation, it is not for determining the question of title to the property (i)

Proclamation of sale—For form of proclamation of sale see Appendix E form no 29

Notice under sub-rule (2)—For form of notice under sub r (2), see Appendix E form no 28

77 [s 289] (1) Every proclamation shall be made and published, as nearly as may be, in the manner prescribed by rule 54, sub rule (2)

Mode of making proclamation

(2) Where the Court so directs, such proclamation shall also be published in the local official Gazette or in a local newspaper, or in both, and the costs of such publication shall be deemed to be costs of the sale

(3) Where property is divided into lots for the purpose of being sold separately, it shall not be necessary to make a separate proclamation for each lot, unless proper notice of the sale cannot, in the opinion of the Court, otherwise be given.

Sub-rule (3) property divided into lots for separate sale—This sub rule is new. It incorporates the decision in the undermentioned case (j)

Non-compliance with the rule—Omission to carry out the provisions of this rule does not render the sale spao facto void. But such omission amounts to a material irregularity within the meaning of r 90 below and the sale will be set aside if the Court is satisfied that substantial injury has resulted from the irregularity (k). 68 [S 290] Save in the case of property of the kind described in the proviso to rule 43, no sale hereunder shall, without the consent in writing of the judgment-debtor, take place until after the expiration of at least thirty days in the case of immoveable property, and of at least fifteen days in the case of moveable property, calculated from the date on which the copy of the proclamation has been affixed on the Court house of the Judge ordering the sale

Non compliance with the rule—If a sale is held before the expiration of the period prescribed by this rule, it is not void but the case is one of material irregularity within the meaning of r 90, and the sale will be set aside if the Court is satisfied that substantial injury has resulted from the irregularity (m)

69 [S. 291] (1) The Court may, in its discretion, adjourn any sale hereunder to a specified day and hour, and the officer conducting any such sale may in his discretion adjourn the sale, recording his reason for such adjournment

Provided that, where the sale is made in, or within the precincts of, the Court-house, no such adjournment shall be made without the leave of the Court

(2) Where a sale is adjourned under sub-rule (1) for a longer period than seven days, a fresh proclamation under rule 67 shall be made, unless the judgment-debtor consents to waive it

(3) Every sale shall be stopped if before the lot is knocked down, the debt and costs (including the costs of the sale) are tendered to the officer conducting the sale, or proof is given to his satisfaction that the amount of such debt and costs has been paid into the Court which ordered the sale

Omission to fix the "day" of adjourned sale.—Where a sale is adjourned, but no day is specified to which it is adjourned, the sale is void (n)

Omission to issue fresh proclamation.—Such an omission amounts to a "material irregularity" within the meaning of r 90 below (p). See notes to r 90, rr. "Material irregularity in publishing or conducting sale," No 7.

Sale held on a date other than the one to which it is adjourned.—Where a sale is adjourned to a certain date, but it is held on a different date, the case is one of material irregularity in conducting the sale (q).

Sub rule (3): Sale in execution of a mortgage-decree.—A mortgagor judgment debtor is entitled to stop the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a mortgage decree by payment of the debt before the sale actually takes place even after a final decree for sale has been passed (r).

Rateable distribution.—Moneys paid into Court under sub r (3) to stop a sale are assets available for rateable distribution within the meaning of s 73 (s).

70. [Cf. S 287, last para] Nothing in rules 66 to 69 shall be deemed to apply to any case in which the execution of a decree has been transferred to the Collector.

Execution of decree by Collector.—See ss 68 to 72, and Sch III below

71. [S 293] Any deficiency of price which may happen on a re-sale by reason of the purchaser's default, and all expenses attending such re-sale, shall be certified to the Court or to the Collector or subordinate of the Collector, as the case may be, by the officer or other person holding the sale, and shall, at the instance of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor, be recoverable from the defaulting purchaser under the provisions relating to the execution of a decree for the payment of money.

Defaulting purchaser answerable for loss on re sale

Application of the rule.—This rule extends to all sales, whether of moveable or of immoveable property, and also to re sales made under the Code, whether made in consequence of default of payment of deposit under r 81 or of purchase money under rr 85 and 86 (t). But the re sale should only cover the property sold at the prior sale, and any substantial difference of description at the sale and re sale in any of the matters required by r 66 will not entitle the decree holder to recover the deficiency of price under this rule. Thus where the defaulting purchaser had been induced to bid for the property as unincumbered by reason of the fact that the incumbrances were not mentioned in the proclamation of sale and the re sale was on a proclamation in which the incumbrances were mentioned, it was held that he was not liable for the deficiency on re sale under this rule (u). The same was held where the property was described as that of A at the first sale and as that of B at the second (v). It is different, however, if the property re sold is substantially the same as that put up for sale at the first sale. The reasonable construction to place on rule 71 is that the re sale should be within a reasonable time after the first sale and the property resold should be substantially the same and that any difference will not matter if the difference in the condition of the property or the title thereto is one which would occur in the ordinary course of things having regard either to the nature of the property or the transactions in respect thereof having legal force at the date of sale or was brought about by the first purchaser's default (w). The deficiency may be recovered though the certificate referred to in this rule has not been issued (x).

It is to be noted that on the happening of any of the events that render a re sale necessary, the decree holder is not bound to have the same property re sold. He may proceed against any other property of the judgment debtor, leaving the latter to his remedy against the defaulting purchaser (y).

By reason of purchaser's default—These words cover a default not only in paying the balance of the price but in making the deposit of 25 per cent as provided by r. 84 below (z).

At a Court sale A bids Rs 5 000 B bids Rs 6 000 and C bids Rs 7,000 C dies before his bid is accepted by the Court Can B be said in the circumstances to be the highest bidder? No C's bid was revoked by his death before acceptance by the Court B's bid lapsed on the making of the higher bid by C, and A's bid lapsed on the making of the higher bid by B The property should therefore be put up afresh for sale (a).

Interest on deficiency—A defaulting purchaser is liable for interest on the deficiency from the date on which an order is made against him under this rule, and not from the date of sale (b).

Where defaulting purchaser merely an agent—The mere fact that the defaulting purchaser acted as the agent of another is no ground for exempting him from liability under this rule unless he informed the officer conducting the sale that he was merely an agent. The fact that the judgment debtor knew that he was merely an agent does not disentitle the judgment-debtor to an order under this rule (c).

Appeal—An order under this rule allowing or disallowing an application for the recovery of the loss by a re sale falls within s. 47 and is appealable as a decree (d). See notes to s. 102, 'Execution' on p. 279 above.

(3) Where a decree-holder purchases, by himself or through another person, without such permission, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the judgment-debtor or any other person whose interests are affected by the sale, by order set aside the sale: and the costs of such application and order, and any deficiency of price which may happen on the re-sale and all expenses attending it, shall be paid by the decree-holder.

Alterations in the rule :—

- 1 The words "subject to the provisions of section 73" are new. See notes below under the head "Amount due on the decree"
- 2 The words "any other person whose interests are affected by the sale" in sub r (3) have been substituted for the words "any other person interested in the sale" This is merely a verbal alteration.

No separate suit—Where a decree holder without leave of the Court buys the property of the judgment debtor at a Court sale, the remedy of the latter is by application under this rule and s 47, and not by a separate suit a separate suit is barred under s 47 The question whether the sale should be set aside or not is a question between the "parties to the suit" relating to the "execution" of the decree within the meaning of s 47, and it must therefore be decided by the Court executing the decree, and not by a separate suit (c) Note the words "may by order set aside the sale" in sub r (3)

"The Court may, if it thinks fit, set aside the sale."—In Rai Radha Krishna v Bisheshar Sahay (f) their Lordships of the Privy Council in dealing with the corresponding s 294 of the Code of 1882 said "Upon the construction of this section it is evident that a purchase by a decree holder who has not obtained permission is not void nor a nullity, but is only to be voided on the application of the judgment debtor or some other person interested It would be injurious to those interested in the sale if a decree holder who had been forced up in the bidding to give a large sum of money could escape from fulfilling his contract by getting the sale declared a nullity, and it would make all titles under such sales insecure if at later periods they were liable to be treated as nullities A sale is to be set aside upon application and upon cause shown" Where a decree holder purchases without the permission of the Court, the sale, as stated above, is not absolutely void, but merely voidable (g) The words "the Court may, if it thinks fit, set aside the sale" show that a purchase by a decree holder without permission is not ipso facto void the purchase is valid until it is set aside under this rule (h) Nor is the sale void because the decree holder purchases the property in the name of another after leave to bid is refused to him The sale is merely voidable It is voidable and not void, even if the decree holder had applied for permission and the permission was refused (i) In considering whether the sale should be set aside, the Court has to consider whether or

Setting off decretal amount against purchase-money—It may be one of the terms on which the permission to bid is granted that there should not be this right of set off In such a case no set off can be allowed (l) Where a decree is transferred to the Collector for execution, and the Collector, who under the Rules framed by the Court is empowered to grant permission to the decree holder to bid for the property but has no power to allow a set off, grants such leave, and the decree holder is declared to be the highest bidder, the decree holder is entitled to apply to the Court under this rule for permission to set off the decretal amount against the purchase money (m)

Leave to bid—Leave to bid should not be refused except upon good ground (n) A decree holder who has obtained leave to bid at a judicial sale is in the same position as any other purchaser, he is not bound more than any other person to disclose circumstances within his knowledge, and bearing on the sale (o) Similarly, a mortgagee purchaser who has obtained leave to bid is in the same position as an independent purchaser (p), that is to say, he does not stand in the position of a trustee for the mortgagor, and he is only bound to give credit to the mortgagor for the actual amount of his bid, and not for what may be the actual value of the property (q) It may here be noted that if the decree holder himself is the purchaser, and the decree is subsequently reversed, the sale to him will be set aside (r), but the sale cannot be set aside against a bona fide purchaser who is not a party to the suit (s) See notes to s 65, 'Effect of reversal of decree upon sale,' etc., p 192 above

"Amount due on the decree."—When more than one decree holder has applied for execution, the amount due on the decree to the decree holder purchaser is the amount to which he would be entitled on a rateable distribution under s 73 (t) This is now made clear by the addition of the words 'subject to the provisions of s 73' in sub r (2)

Interest.—A decree the satisfaction of which has resulted from the decree holder himself bidding the full amount of the decree at the execution sale, is not actually satisfied until the sale has been confirmed under r 92 below (u) If, therefore the decree carries interest, the decree holder is entitled to claim interest between the date of the sale and the date of its confirmation (v)

Procedure—A sale under this rule is to be set aside upon application and upon cause shown It has been held by the High Court of Madras that where a decree holder purchases property in contravention of the provisions of this rule, and sues the judgment debtor and transferees from him for possession, it is open to the judgment debtor to apply to have the sale set aside in that suit by way of answer to the plaintiff's claim It is not necessary that the judgment debtor should have previously applied to the Court under this rule and s 47 to set aside the sale The written statement of the judgment

Leave obtained by misrepresentation.—Where the leave to bid is obtained by the decree holder by misrepresentation, the Court may refuse to confirm the sale (y).

Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order refusing to give a decree holder permission to purchase at the Court sale (z). But an appeal lies from an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale under this rule [O 43, r 1, cl (j)].

73. [S 292.] No officer or other person having any duty to perform in connection with any sale shall, either directly or indirectly, bid for, acquire or attempt to acquire any interest in the property sold.

Place of sale of moveable property—Except in the case of agricultural produce for which provision has been made by this rule, a sale of moveables in execution of a decree should ordinarily be held at some place within the jurisdiction of the Court ordering the sale. Good and sufficient reasons ought to be shown for directing otherwise. A mere contention that a higher price is likely to be bid in some other place is not a good and sufficient reason (b)

75. [New] (1) Where the property to be sold is a growing crop and the crop from its nature admits of being stored but has not yet been stored, the day of the sale shall be so fixed as to admit of its being made ready for storing before the arrival of such day, and the sale shall not be held until the crop has been cut or gathered and is ready for storing

Special provisions relating to growing crops

(2) Where the crop from its nature does not admit of being stored, it may be sold before it is cut and gathered, and the purchaser shall be entitled to enter on the land, and to do all that is necessary for the purpose of tending and cutting or gathering it

76 [S 296] Where the property to be sold is a negotiable instrument or a share in a corporation, the Court may, instead of directing the sale to be made by public auction, authorize the sale of such instrument or share through a broker.

Negotiable instruments and shares in corporations

May—A sale through a broker is permissive, and not obligatory (c)

Sale by public auction

(2) On payment of the purchase-money, the officer or other person holding the sale shall grant a receipt for the same and the sale shall become absolute respectively bid the same sum for such property or for any lot, the bidding shall be deemed to be the bidding of the co-owner. O. rr.

Where moveable property is sold by public auction—This does not apply to negotiable instruments or shares sold through a broker under r 76 above (d)

Payment of price—The officer holding the sale has a discretion to allow the price to be paid at a reasonable time after the sale (e)

In default of payment—The provisions of r 71 apply to a re sale under this rule (f)

Sub-rule 3—This sub rule is new It gives a right of pre-emption to the co-owner See as to immovable property r 88 below

78 [s 298] No irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale of moveable property shall vitiate the sale, but any person sustaining any injury by reason of such irregularity at the hand of any other person may institute a suit against him for compensation or (if such other person is the purchaser) for the recovery of the specific property and for compensation in default of such recovery

Irregularity not to vitiate sale but any person injured may sue

Scope of the rule—This rule provides for the case of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale of moveable property Rule 90 deals with irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale of immovable property

Irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale—If the sale proclamation warrants a title the injured party may apply to set aside the sale it not being a mere irregularity (g)

O. 21, delivering possession of the property to any person except the r 79, 80 purchaser.

(3) Where the property sold is a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument, or is a share in a corporation, the delivery thereof shall be made by a written order of the Court prohibiting the creditor from receiving the debt or any interest thereon, and the debtor from making payment thereof to any person except the purchaser, or prohibiting the person in whose name the share may be standing from making any transfer of the share to any person except the purchaser, or receiving payment of any dividend or interest thereon, and the manager, secretary or other proper officer of the corporation from permitting any such transfer or making any such payment to any person except the purchaser

Forms—See App E forms nos 32, 33 and 34

80. [S 302] (1) Where the execution of a document or the endorsement of the party in whose name a negotiable instrument or a share in a corporation is standing is required to transfer such negotiable instrument or share, the Judge or such officers as he may appoint in this behalf may execute such document or make such endorsement as may be necessary, and such execution or endorsement shall have the same effect as an execution or endorsement by the party

(2) Such execution or endorsement may be in the following form, namely—

A B by C D, Judge of the Court of (or as the case may be), in a suit by E F against A B

(3) Until the transfer of such negotiable instrument or share, the Court may, by order, appoint some person to receive any interest or dividend due thereon and to sign a receipt for the same, and any receipt so signed shall be as valid and effectual for all purposes as if the same had been signed by the party himself

Execution of deed of transfer of shares.—Where a deed of transfer of shares is executed by a Judge under this rule, the company has no option as to registering the shareholder who purchased the shares in execution, and if the purchaser cannot obtain the original share certificates from the judgment debtor, the company is bound to grant him new share certificates (4) O. 2

81. [S. 303.] In the case of any moveable property not hereinbefore provided for, the Court may make an order vesting such property in the purchaser or as he may direct; and such property shall vest accordingly.

Vesting order in case of other property

Sale of immoveable property.

82 [S. 304.] Sales of immoveable property in execution of decrees may be ordered by any Court other than a Court of Small Causes

What Courts may order

83 [S. 305] (1) Where an order for the sale of immoveable property has been made, if the judgment-debtor can satisfy the Court that there is reason to believe that the amount of the decree may be raised by the mortgage or lease or private sale of such property, or some part thereof, or of any other immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, the Court may, on his application, postpone the sale of the property comprised in the order for sale on such terms and for such period as it thinks proper, to enable him to raise the amount

Postponement of sale to enable judgment debtor to raise amount of decree

(2) In such case the Court shall grant a certificate to the judgment debtor authorizing him within a period to be mentioned therein, and notwithstanding anything contained in section 64, to make the proposed mortgage, lease or sale

Provided that all monies payable under such mortgage, lease or sale shall be paid, not to the judgment-debtor, but, save in so far as a decree-holder is entitled to set off such money under the provisions of rule 72, into Court

Provided also that no mortgage, lease or sale under this rule shall become absolute until it has been confirmed by the Court

(3) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to apply to a sale of property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage of, or charge on, such property.

O. 21, Alterations in the rule.—The words, "save in so far as a decree holder is
r. 83, 84 entitled to set off such money under the provisions of rule 72" in sub-n (2), have been added to make it clear that where a decree holder is entitled to a set off under r 72 he should not be required to pay in the monies. A similar saving has been introduced into r 84, sub r 2, and n 85

Postpone the sale for such period as it thinks proper.—The postponement of sale under this rule is discretionary with the Court (l). But the postponement should be for a reasonable period (m)

The amount of the decree can be raised.—No sale should be postponed and no certificate should be granted under sub-r (2), unless the whole amount due on the decree can be raised by mortgage, lease or sale (n)

Notwithstanding anything contained in section 64.—On compliance with the conditions of this rule, a private alienation, notwithstanding s 64, becomes absolute, not only against the claim of the decree holder, but against all claims enforceable under the attachment (o)

Confirmation of sale by Court.—Where permission to raise the amount of decree by private sale has been granted to the judgment debtor by two Courts in each of which there has been a decree passed against him, it is enough if the sale is confirmed by one Court it is superfluous to apply to the other Court for confirmation of the same sale (p)

Guardian and Wards Act 8 of 1890, s 39.—A private alienation of property, though confirmed by the executing Court under this rule, is not valid, if such alienation is made by a guardian and the sale is not confirmed by the Court by which the guardian was appointed (q)

Decree for the enforcement of a mortgage.—This rule does not apply to a sale of property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage. The reason is that in the case of a mortgage-decree, the right of sale does not depend upon the attachment in execution, but is conferred by the decree itself (r)

Rateable distribution.—Money paid into Court under the proviso to sub n (2) is liable to rateable distribution under s 73, as it is paid under a pending execution application (s)

Revision.—No appeal lies from an order refusing to postpone a sale under this rule.
But the party aggrieved may apply to the High Court under s 115 for a revision of the order and the High Court may in a proper case set aside the order (t)

(2) Where the decree-holder is the purchaser and is entitled to set off the purchase-money under rule 72, the Court may dispense with the requirements of this rule.

"Declared to be the purchaser."—An execution sale is not complete until the presiding officer has accepted the bid and declared the purchaser (u)

Material irregularity—It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras that failure to deposit the 25 per cent immediately as required by this rule is no more than a "material irregularity" within the meaning of r 90, which would render the sale voidable if substantial injury has resulted by reason of such irregularity (v) It was at one time held by the High Court of Allahabad that such failure rendered the sale altogether void (w), but these decisions have now been overruled by a Full Bench, the view taken by the Full Bench being the same as that of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts (x)

Sub-rule (2)—This sub rule is new. See notes to r 83, "Alterations in the rule"

Rateable distribution—See notes to s 73, "Before the receipt of the assets," on pp 206 207 above

85. [S. 307.] The full amount of purchase-money payable shall be paid by the purchaser into Court before the Court closes on the fifteenth day from the sale of the property

Time for payment in full of purchase money

Provided that, in calculating the amount to be so paid into Court, the purchaser shall have the advantage of any set-off to which he may be entitled under rule 72.

On the fifteenth day from the sale.—The purchaser is bound to see that the money reaches the Court in time to satisfy the requirements of this rule. If the purchase-money is not received by the Court in time, it will not avail him to say that he had posted the money in time, for the Post Office is not the agent of the Court (y)

Material irregularity.—The time for payment cannot be extended without the consent of the decree holder and the judgment debtor. If it be extended without their consent, the case is one of material irregularity within the meaning of r 90 below (z)

Where the Court or office is closed on the fifteenth day—In such a case the payment may be made on the next day on which the Court or Office is open. See General Clauses Act 10 of 1897, s 10

86. [S 303] In default of payment within the period mentioned in the last preceding rule, the deposit may, if the Court thinks fit, after defraying the expenses of the sale, be forfeited to the Government, and the property shall be re-sold, and the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property or to any part of the sum for which it may subsequently be sold.

Procedure in default of payment

Alteration in the rule—The words "may, if the Court thinks fit," have been substituted for the word "shall". See notes below

Forfeiture of deposit to Government—The old section provided that the deposit "shall be forfeited to Government". This provision led to hardship in certain cases (a). To obviate any hardship that may arise, the words "may, if the Court thinks fit," have been substituted for the word "shall". It is no longer obligatory upon the Court to forfeit the deposit in every case

87. [S. 309.] Every re-sale of immoveable property, in default of payment of the purchase-money within the period allowed for such payment, shall be made after the issue of a fresh proclamation in the manner and for the period hereinbefore prescribed for the sale.

Notification on re sale

Fresh notification—A fresh notification is only necessary where the re-sale is in default of payment of the purchase money within the time allowed by r 85. No fresh notification is necessary for a re-sale in default of payment of the 25 per cent deposit required by r 84 (b).

88. [S 310] Where the property sold is a share of undivided immoveable property and two or more persons, of whom one is a co-sharer, respectively bid the same sum for such property or for any lot, the bid shall be deemed to be the bid of the co sharer.

Co sharer—A defensible title to a share is not sufficient to support a claim for pre-emption under this rule (c). It has been held by the Allahabad High Court under the Rules framed under s 70 of the Code that where a sale is confirmed by the Collector in the non-appearance of the alleged co sharer to prove his title as co sharer, he is not entitled to maintain a separate suit for possession on the ground of pre-emption (d).

89. [S 310A] (1) Where immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court,—

(a) for payment to the purchaser a sum equal to five per cent of the purchase money, and

(b) for payment to the decree holder, the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder

(2) Where a person applies under rule 90 to set aside the sale of his immovable property, he shall not, unless he withdraws his application, be entitled to make or prosecute an application under this rule

(3) Nothing in this rule shall relieve the judgment debtor from any liability he may be under in respect of costs and interest not covered by the proclamation of sale

Alterations in the rule —

- 1 The words any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale have been substituted for the words any person whose immovable property has been sold under this Chapter See notes below Who may apply under this rule
- 2 The words unless he withdraws his application and the words or prosecute in sub r (2) are new See notes below under the head Sub rule (2)

Immovable property—This rule applies only to sales of immovable property A simple mortgage bond is moveable and not immovable property The provisions of this rule do not therefore apply to a sale of such a bond in execution of a decree (c)

This rule applies to sales under a mortgage-decree—The transfer into the Code (see O 34) of the sections of the Transfer of Property Act relating to decrees in suits on mortgage shows clearly that the provisions of the present rule apply to sales under mortgage decrees as well Hence a mortgagor whose immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property passed under O 34 r 3 may apply under this rule to set aside the sale (f) As to the old section it was

O. 21, r. 89. doubtful whether its provisions applied to mortgage decrees, the High Court of Calcutta holding that they did not (g), while the other Courts holding that they did (h). The Calcutta decisions are no longer law. The present rule applies also to sales under a mortgage decree on the original side of Chartered High Courts (i).

To what other sales does the rule apply?—This rule has been held to apply to a case where an award has been made pursuant to an order of reference in a suit for partition directing the sale of an immoveable property for making certain payments, and a decree is passed on the award and the property is then sold pursuant to the terms of the decree (j). The High Court of Madras has held that this rule does not apply to a sale by a Receiver of partnership property for realising the partnership assets (k).

Who may apply under this rule?—Under the old section, the application to set aside a sale could only be made by "any person whose immoveable property has been sold under this Chapter, that is the Chapter relating to execution. Those words it was held, included—

(1) the judgment debtor,

(2) any person, though not a party to the suit or decree (l) whose interests were affected by the sale

A person whose interests were not affected by the sale could not, it was held, apply under that section (m).

Under the present rule, the application to set aside a sale of immoveable property held in execution of a decree may be made by—

(1) any person owning the property, or

(2) any person holding an interest in such property by virtue of a title acquired before the sale

"Any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale"—Under the old section the application to set aside a sale on deposit could be made by "any person whose immoveable property has been sold." Under the present rule the application may be made by 'any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale'. There is no doubt that a judgment-debtor whose immoveable property has been sold may apply under this rule as a 'person owning such property'. But what if the judgment debtor has transferred his interest in the property? How a judgment debtor may transfer his interest in the property before the Court sale or he may do so after the Court sale? Is he entitled after a transfer in either case to apply under this rule? Is the transferee from the judgment-debtor entitled to apply under this rule? We proceed to consider the decisions on the subject.

First, as regards transfer before Court-sale—Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions whether, if the judgment debtor had transferred his interest in the property before the Court sale, the transferee could apply under that section to have the same set aside. In Srinivasa v Iyyathoras (n), for instance, it was held that the transferee could apply, while the contrary was held in Ramchandra v Rakhmabai (o). Under the present rule it is clear that a transferee acquiring title before the Court sale is competent to apply to have the sale set aside. Further, it was held under the old section that a judgment debtor who had effected a private sale of his property subsequently to the attachment and prior to the court sale was entitled to apply under that section to set aside the sale (p). This ruling, it has been said, is still good law (pp).

Next, as regards transfer after Court sale—A obtains a decree against J. In execution of the decree certain immoveable property belonging to J is sold to C for Rs 166. Subsequently, but before the sale to C is confirmed under r 92, J sells the property to P for Rs 500. It is clear that if J could apply under this rule to have the sale set aside on payment of the amount mentioned in the rule, the pecuniary benefit to him would be great, for while the property was sold at the Court sale for Rs 166, it realized Rs 500 at the subsequent private sale. Is J, the judgment-debtor, entitled to apply under this rule to have the sale set aside? Is P, the purchaser at the private sale, entitled to apply under this rule? It has been held by the Allahabad High Court (q), that neither the judgment debtor nor the subsequent purchaser is entitled to apply under this rule. The ground of the Allahabad decision is that the present rule gives judgment debtors a last chance of saving the property for themselves and that it was no part of the Legislature's intention that the property should be saved for persons to whom it might be privately sold after the Court sale had taken place. The Madras High Court held in its earlier decisions that the judgment debtor is not entitled to apply (r), but that the subsequent purchaser is entitled to apply (s). The ground of those decisions was that the judgment debtor having parted with his interest in the property before the application under this rule and so having no interest in the property at the date of the application, he was not entitled to apply under this rule, unless the sale to the subsequent purchaser was by an unregistered document in which case the judgment debtor would continue to be the owner of the property and could as such owner apply under this rule (t). On the other hand, the High Court of Bombay held that the judgment debtor is entitled to apply under this rule, but that the subsequent purchaser is not so entitled (u). The ground of the Bombay decision is that the sale to the auction purchaser not being still confirmed, the judgment debtor remains the owner of the property, and that he is therefore entitled to apply as a "person owning the property" within the meaning of this rule. As regards the Allahabad decision, the Bombay Court said that the object of the present rule was not only to preserve the property in the hands of the judgment debtor, but also to save the judgment-debtor from monetary loss that might be occasioned to him if the property was sold at the auction sale at an inadequate price. As regards the reasoning of the Madras High Court in its earlier decisions, the Bombay Court observed that it was not necessary for the purposes of this rule that the judgment debtor should own or have an interest in the property at the date of the application under this rule, and that it was sufficient if he owned the property or had an interest in it at the date of the Court-sale. The High Court of Patna has followed the Bombay decision (v). In a recent case a

O. 21, r. 89 Full Bench of the Madras High Court overruled its earlier decisions, and agreeing with the Bombay and Patna decisions held that the judgment debtor was entitled to apply, and that the subsequent purchaser was not entitled to apply under this rule (w). The High Court of Calcutta has held that the subsequent purchaser is not entitled to apply under this rule. The reason given is that the interest, if any, which he held in the property was not by virtue of a title acquired by him "before" the execution sale, and consequently he is excluded by the very terms of the rule (x).

Miscellaneous cases—Under the old section it was held that a Mahomedan co heir was not entitled to apply to set aside the sale (y). The same would seem to be the law under the present rule. But it was held that a co sharer was entitled to apply (z). It is doubtful whether a co sharer is a person entitled to apply under this rule. It was also held under the old section that a durmukaridar was entitled to apply (z2).

A person who has obtained a mortgage of the property before the Court sale may apply under this rule (z3). So also a usufructuary mortgagee in possession (a). But a person who has merely agreed to purchase the property cannot apply under this rule, for a mere agreement for sale of immovable property does not of itself create any interest in the property (b). Similarly a person who is out of possession of the property and is litigating to establish his right thereto, is not entitled to apply under this rule (c).

Unsuccessful application to stop sale—The mere fact that the applicant had already unsuccessfully applied to stop the sale on payment of the decretal amount and had also put in a claim petition under r. 58 above, does not preclude him from applying under this rule (d).

Deposit without application—An application is necessary before the Court can act under this rule. Mere deposit of the required amount is not enough (e). See notes below "Limitation".

Deposit of five per cent—The deposit of 5 per cent must be made even though the purchaser may be the decree holder. The 5 per cent is intended as a compensation to the purchaser for his trouble and disappointment for the loss of that which was, perhaps, a good bargain (f).

Mistake in calculating amount to be deposited—No sale will be set aside under this rule unless the whole amount specified in sub r. (1) is deposited by the applicant within thirty days from the date of sale. If the full amount is not deposited within the aforesaid period, though it may be owing to a mistake on the part of an officer of the Court in calculating the amount, the sale cannot be set aside under this rule unless the officer was charged by the Court to make the calculation and to inform the parties as to the amount to be deposited (g). See notes below, "Limitation".

Less amount "received" by decree holder—The term "received" comprehends an actual receipt of the amount by the decree holder. A mere payment into Court of the sale proceeds does not constitute receipt within the meaning of this rule (h).

In determining what amount has been "received" by the decree holder, the Court should not give credit to the judgment debtor for any amount paid by a co judgment debtor who has not joined in the application under this rule (i)

Failure to deposit full amount—Where a judgment debtor brought into Court not the amount for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, but only the amount realized by the sale, plus five per cent, with an undertaking to pay the balance, it was held that he had not complied with the provisions of this rule, and the Court refused to set aside the sale (j)

Conditional deposit—A deposit under this rule, in order that it may be a valid deposit, must be unconditional (k)

"For payment to the decree-holder"—Rateable distribution—The expression "decree holder" in sub sec (1) (b) refers to that person alone for satisfaction of whose decree the sale has been ordered. It does not include other decree holders who would have a right to claim rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds under sec 73. It is therefore enough if the judgment debtor deposits such amount as is sufficient to satisfy the claim of the decree holder at whose instance the property was sold. It is not necessary that the amount deposited by him should be sufficient to satisfy decrees held against him by other decree holders also (l). Further, when a judgment debtor deposits in Court a sum sufficient to satisfy the claim of the person for satisfaction of whose decree the property was ordered to be sold, the other decree holders are not entitled to a rateable distribution thereof under s 73 (m)

Sub rule (2)—Where a judgment debtor applies to set aside a sale under this rule, and subsequently applies under r 90 also, he is not entitled to prosecute the application made by him under this rule (n). But the Court should in such a case put the judgment debtor to his election whether he would withdraw the application under r 90, and if he refuses to do so, it should dismiss the application made under this rule (o). An application, though purporting to be made under r 90, may not really be one under that rule but one under s 47, the provisions of sub r (2) do not apply to such a case (p)

"Court"—The word "Court" in this rule means the Civil Court, and not, in the case of decrees transferred to the Collector for execution, the Collector (q). Hence an application under this rule must be made to the Court and not to the Collector. If the judgment debtor applies to the Collector, he cannot stop limitation running against him. It is the duty, however, of the Collector in such a case to return the application to the applicant and tell him that the application should be made to the Court (r). See notes, 'Limitation' below

Sale of property by separate lots—Where property is sold in separate lots in execution of a decree, it is not open to the judgment debtor to apply under this rule to set aside the sale of some only of such lots. The application must be to set aside the sale of all the lots (s)

O 21, r. 89. Necessary parties—The auction purchaser as well as the decree holder are necessary parties to an application under this rule (i) See the proviso to s 92 sub r. (2)

Limitation—The application under this rule must be made within 30 days from the date of sale [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch I, art 166] The Court has no power to extend the time under s 148 (u) The words "date of sale" mean the date on which the property is put up for sale and knocked down to the highest bidder, and not the date on which the sale is confirmed by the Court [r 92] (v) At the same time it is to be remembered that if for any reason the final bid remains unaccepted for some days by the sale officer, the period of 30 days does not begin to run until such bid is accepted by him (w)

The words "may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court," etc. show that not only the application, but also the deposit should be made within 30 days from the date of sale It is not enough to make the application within 30 days (x) Nor is it enough to make the deposit within 30 days (y) Both the application and the deposit must be made within 30 days from the date of sale

The law does not impose any period of limitation for the issue to the parties of notice of the deposit (z)

Appeal—The law as regards appeal from an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale passed on an application under the present rule is quite different from what it was under the Code of 1882 Such an order under the Code of 1882 [s 310 A] was not appealable as an order, for it was not included in the list of appealable orders given in s 588 of that Code [now O 43 s 1] But the order being one made in proceeding in execution (a), it was appealable as a decree, if the question as to whether the sale should be set aside or not was one between "the parties to the suit or their representatives" within the meaning of s 244 [now s 47] (b), and in such a case a second appeal also lay from the order passed in first appeal And it was held that if the question was one between the judgment debtor and the decree holder, in other words between the parties to the suit, it did not cease to be so merely because the auction purchaser (not a party to the suit) was interested in the result (c) But where the question was one between a party to the suit on the one hand and the auction purchaser on the other there was a conflict of opinion as to whether an appeal lay from the order (d) In those cases however, in which it was held that no appeal lay from the order, it was held that the party aggrieved might apply to the High Court for a revision of the order (e) Under the present Code however, an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale [r 92] passed on an application under this rule [r 89] is appealable as an order, for it is included in the list of appealable orders given in O 43 r 1 [see cl. (j)] The result is that under the

Revision.—It has been held by the High Courts of Patna (i), and Madras (j), that the High Court can interfere in revision if an application under this rule has been dismissed on the ground that it was made by a person who was not entitled to apply, the reason given being that the decision in such a case is the very foundation of jurisdiction, and that the action of the lower Court in refusing to deal with the application in such a case amounts to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction within the meaning of s. 115. On the other hand, it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that no revision lies in such a case, the reason given being that the Court has jurisdiction to decide whether or not the applicant was entitled to apply to set aside the sale and a decision arrived at in the exercise of jurisdiction, though wrong, is no ground for interference in revision (k) may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it:

- 3 The words "or fraud" have been added after the word "irregularity". The addition of these words affects the right of appeal as will be seen from the notes below under the head "Fraud in publishing or conducting sale".
- 4 The words, "unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied," have been substituted for the words "unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court". This alteration has been made with a view to set at rest the doubts raised under the old section as to the evidence upon which the Court could act. See notes below, "Unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied," etc.

Who may apply under this rule—The only persons that may apply under this rule are—

- (1) the decree holder,
- (2) any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets under s. 73
- (3) any person whose interests are affected by the sale—an expression obviously of a wider import than the expression "a person holding an interest in the property sold" used in r. 89 above (m)

The words "any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets" did not occur in the old section, but it was held that the expression, "decree holder" included such person (n).

The expression "any person whose interests are affected by the sale," has been substituted for the expression "any person whose immovable property has been sold," which occurred in the old section. The latter expression was construed as meaning "any person whose interests are affected by the sale" in the Full Bench case of Ammu tunnisia Begum v. Ashruff Ali (o), and this interpretation has now been substituted for the original expression. Where an application, therefore, is made by a person other than a decree holder or one entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets, that person must be one whose interests are affected by the sale. It cannot be said of a person claiming by title paramount to the judgment debtor that his interests would be affected by the sale, inasmuch as his title to the property cannot be effected by the sale, whether it were regular or irregular. Hence a person who claims to be a purchaser of immovable property from the judgment debtor prior to the attachment cannot apply under this rule, for the sale being prior to the attachment, his interest cannot be legally affected by the sale (p). It has similarly been held that where joint family property is sold in execution of a decree against a member of the joint family, another member claiming the whole property on the death of the judgment debtor by survivorship is not entitled to apply under this rule (q). A co-sharer cannot apply under this rule, for his share does not pass under the sale (r). But a reversioner entitled to succeed on the death of a Hindu widow has been held to be entitled to apply under this rule (s). A person who claims to be the purchaser of a tenure prior to attachment from the judgment debtor whose interest in the tenure has been sold in execution of a decree for its own arrears of rent, is entitled to apply under this rule, for his interests are affected by the sale (t). Where immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree against the ostensible owner as his property, a person claiming to be the beneficial owner is entitled to apply under this rule (u), unless his right to the property is in dispute and a suit by him for O. 21 a declaration of his right is still pending at the date of the application (v)

It has been recently held by the High Court of Calcutta that the expression "persons whose interests are affected by the sale" is not limited to persons whose proprietary or possessory title is affected by the sale, and that it includes persons whose pecuniary interest is affected by the sale. Hence it has been held that a decree holder who has attached the property of the judgment debtor in execution of his decree has such interest as would entitle him to apply under this rule to set aside a sale of the property held in execution of a decree obtained by another creditor (w). But a plaintiff who has obtained an attachment before judgment is not entitled to apply under this rule (x).

In a case under s 311 of the Code of 1882, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that an auction purchaser was not entitled to apply under that section as he was not "a person whose immovable property has been sold" within the meaning of that section (y). There is a conflict of opinion whether an auction purchaser is entitled to apply to have a sale set aside under the present rule. He is so entitled if he is a "person whose interests are affected by the sale" within the meaning of this rule. The High Court of Madras has held that he is entitled to apply under this rule. The Court said "If an auction purchaser's interests are affected by an order setting aside the sale, it is difficult to see why his interests are not also 'affected by the sale'" (z). The High Court of Patna has dissented from this view, and held that an auction purchaser is not entitled to apply under this rule. In the view taken by that Court the expression "interests affected by the sale" means "interests in the property existing before the sale" (a). The Allahabad High Court has declined to follow the Patna decisions, and has held that an auction purchaser is entitled to apply under this rule. The Court said "In the ordinary use of the word ['interests'] in the English language it is a term covering every sort of interest recognized by law, such as, in the case of an auction purchaser, liability to pay the money, liability to complete and take a transfer of the property, and from his own point of view the necessity of finding the necessary funds, and also the necessity of carrying through to fruition the provisional contract into which he has entered. If the expression were 'interests in the property,' it would of course be confined to an interest in the property sold antecedent to the sale. If the word were merely 'interest' without the plural and without the words 'in the property,' it might be possible to hold that the word that the word 'interest' was confined to interest in the thing itself at the time of the sale. But that is not the expression" (b).

It is expressly provided by this rule that a person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets under s 73 is entitled to apply under this rule. Hence a person who is not entitled to a rateable distribution, as where the application for execution is not made until after the receipt of assets by the Court, cannot come in under this rule as a "person whose interests are affected by the sale" (c).

- 1 There must be a material irregularity or fraud
- 2 The material irregularity or fraud must be in publishing or conducting the sale

10 Where property belonging to a judgment debtor was attached, and the judgment debtor died pending the attachment leaving a widow and a minor son, but no notice of the subsequent proceedings in attachment was served on any person representing the minor, further, though the property consisted of 109 mouzahs, the proclamation of sale was read out without beat of drum in one only of the mouzahs, and affixed to a tree in that village, and further, the proclamation did not specify the encumbrances to which the property was liable but stated merely the annual profit income and the value of the property, and the property was sold at a gross under valuation, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the above irregularities were all material irregularities, and they accordingly set aside the sale (t)

It is to be noted in this connection that if the act or omission complained of amounts to a material irregularity the sale is not void, but voidable. Being voidable, it may be set aside under this rule on the application of any of the persons mentioned in the rule but it can not be set aside unless it is proved that substantial injury has resulted from the irregularity see the proviso to the rule. But where the act or omission complained of amounts to an illegality, it renders the sale void ab initio, and no proof of injury is required. In cases (3), (5), (8) and (9) above, it was contended that the omission complained of amounted to an illegality, and that the sale was therefore void ab initio, and that it should therefore be declared void without proof of substantial injury. But it was held that the omission amounted to a material irregularity only and that the sale was not void but voidable only, and it could not therefore be set aside unless substantial injury was proved. For instances of sales void ab initio, see notes to r 65, "Sale when void and when voidable," p 191. See also notes to r 47, p 129, case (4), and notes to O 21, r 22 "Omission to give notice," p 625, and "Notice to wrong person as legal representative," p 625.

21, r. 90. Publishing or conducting the sale—Where property not covered by the decree has been proclaimed and sold, the case is one of material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale within the meaning of this rule (u) So is an irregular preparation of the proclamation of sale (v)

The expression "conducting the sale" refers only to the action of the officer who makes the sale. Anything done antecedent to the order of sale has nothing to do with "conducting" the sale (w)

Omission to attach property before sale—The question whether an irregularity in attaching the property, as where the attachment is not properly notified, affects the sale or is merely an irregularity in "conducting the sale" within the meaning of this rule, was left open by the Judicial Committee in the undermentioned case (x). In Mahadeo v. Bhola Nath (y), a full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad held that a regularly perfected attachment is an essential preliminary to sales in execution of simple decrees for money, and when there has been no such attachment the sale is not merely voidable but void. In a later case (z), however, the same High Court held that the omission to attach immoveable property prior to sale amounted to a material irregularity in "conducting the sale" within the meaning of this rule. "An attachment," it was said, "is a step towards the sale of the judgment debtor's property." As to Mahadeo's case the Court said that it could no longer be treated as good law since the decision of the Privy Council in Tasadduk v. Ahmad (a) where it was held, with reference to a proclamation of sale issued in violation of the provisions of O 21, r. 68, that it was nothing more than a material irregularity and did not ipso facto vitiate the sale. On the other hand, in a case decided under the Code of 1859, the High Court of Bengal expressed the opinion that an attachment is not an essential preliminary in sales in execution of decrees: it is merely a measure for the protection of the decree holder and the purchaser of the property, and the absence of attachment is not, therefore, an objection which the judgment debtor is competent to raise (b). This view was adopted by the same High Court in later cases where it was held that after a sale had been confirmed, the sale was not to be considered a nullity merely by reason of the absence of attachment (c). But it has been held by the same High Court that where an objection that the property proclaimed for sale has not been attached is taken before the sale, it is the duty of the Court not to proceed with the sale and to direct an attachment (d). In the more recent case of Panchanan v. Kunja (e), decided in 1917, the High Court of Calcutta held that the Court had no jurisdiction to sell property in execution which had not been duly attached and that omission to attach rendered the sale void ipso facto. This decision, it is submitted, is not good law. In a Bombay case where the property was sold without previous attachment, the sale was set aside, the case being treated as one under s. 47 (f). The High Court of Rangoon has held that though the absence of attachment is an irregularity, it does not render the sale absolutely void, but merely voidable, and, further, that the objection as to the absence of attachment does not come within this rule, but within s. 47, the substantial question involved being one of notice to the judgment debtor (g) The High Court of Patna has taken the same view as O. 21, was taken in the earlier Calcutta decisions and refused to follow the decision in Parchanna's case. In the Patna case the application to set aside the rule was made before the sale was confirmed, while in the Calcutta cases the application was made after the sale was confirmed. As to this the Patna Court said that it did not make any difference, "because if the sale was in fact a nullity by reason of the absence of attachment, its subsequent confirmation could not make it valid (h).

Fraud in publishing or conducting sale—The words "or fraud" are new. The present rule requires that an application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale must be made under this rule. In the absence of these words in the corresponding s 311 of the Code of 1882, it was held that an application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud could only be made under s 244 [now s 47]. Had it not been for the newly added words "or fraud" in this rule, such applications would have to be made under s 47 of this Code. The result would then have been, as under the Code of 1882, that a second appeal would lie from an order made on such applications, for an order made under s 47 has the force of a decree (s 2), and every decree is open to second appeal subject, of course, to the provisions of ss 100 102 (i). The effect of adding the words "or fraud" into the present rule is to transfer applications setting up fraud in publishing or conducting the sale from s 47 to the present rule. The result is that no second appeal will now lie from an order made on such application whether the order be one setting aside the sale or refusing to set aside the sale, for the order is no longer one under s 47, but one under r 92, and only one appeal lies from an order made under r 92 (j) [see O 43, r 1 cl (j), and s 104, sub s (2)]. It will thus be seen that the object of the Legislature in requiring applications to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale to be made under the present rule instead of under s 47, is to exclude the right of second appeal from orders made on such applications with a view to bring proceedings on such applications to a speedy termination. But though only one appeal is allowed, an appeal now lies in every case from an order made under this rule and r 92, even at the instance of an auction purchaser though he may not be a party to the suit in which the sale was held. See notes to s 47, Execution purchaser, ill (a), p 137.

It may here be observed that in a large majority of reported cases in which applications were made to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale the applicant was the judgment debtor, and the fraud alleged was that the decree holder had fraudulently kept him in the dark by omitting to serve him with the writ of attachment (r 54), and that no copy of the proclamation of sale was affixed on the property so as to inform him of the execution proceedings. In all these cases it was further alleged that the fraud first became known to the judgment debtor when the auction purchaser instituted proceedings to recover possession of the property. In some of these cases, again, the auction purchaser was charged with collusion with the decree

The question is in the former case which of two innocent parties shall suffer in the latter whether he who has wronged the other party shall be allowed to enjoy the fruits of his wrong doing A Court exercising equitable jurisdiction may withhold its hand in the one case and yet set aside the sale with or without terms in the other

A charge against a decree holder that he and those who acted in concert with him have acted in such a manner as to prevent the best price from being obtained does not of itself amount to a charge of fraud within the meaning of this rule A obtains a decree against B and obtains leave to bid at the auction sale A then enters into an agreement with a third person that if that person would not bid at the sale A would sell the property to him if A should become the purchaser The property is put up for sale and purchased by A The agreement does not constitute a fraud within the meaning of this rule though it may have discouraged competition at the auction (n) In a recent case Sir Lawrence Jenkins C.J., said The word fraud is very loosely used in this class of cases that is cases under r 90 any irregularity is taken to be fraud with the consequences that such a finding involves But a finding of fraud should be reserved for that which is dishonest and morally wrong and it is not sufficient to come to a vague finding of fraud, actual fraud must be established (o) The Patna High Court has recently held that where after the publication of the sale proclamation the decree holder agrees with the judgment debtor not to hold the sale if payment was made within a specified time and he then proceeds to sell the property in contravention of the agreement it amounts to fraud in the matter of the conduct of the sale within the meaning of this rule (p)

In a recent case (q) their Lordships of the Privy Council said Charges of fraud and collusion—must no doubt be proved by those who make them—proved by established facts or inferences legitimately drawn from those facts taken together as a whole Suspensions and surmises and conjecture are not permissible substitutes for those facts or those inferences but that by no means requires that every puzzling artifice or contrivance resorted to by one accused of fraud must necessarily be completely unravelled and cleared up and made plain before the verdict can be properly found against him If this were not so many a clever and dexterous knave would escape thereby, it is bound to dismiss the application. In other words, if there be material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale, but no substantial loss occasioned by the irregularity or fraud the applicant is not entitled to have the sale set aside (r). The substantial injury alleged by the applicant must be proved, it cannot be assumed from the mere fact that there was a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale. The mere fact that there was a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale will not justify the Court in assuming that substantial injury has thereby been caused. Hence although an applicant under this rule may prove material irregularity, such as non specification of Government revenue in the proclamation of sale (s) or inadequate description of the property sold (t) or the holding of the sale before the expiry of the period prescribed by r 68 above (u), the sale will not be set aside unless it is proved that had it not been for the irregularity the property would have realized a substantially larger price than what it did at the sale. The same rule applies where the sale is impeached on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale.

"Unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud"—These words form part of the proviso to the rule. The language of the proviso to this rule differs from the language of the proviso to the corresponding section 311 of the Code of 1882 which ran as follows —

But no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity

The words "unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied" have been substituted for the words "unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court". We proceed to note the object and effect of the alteration in the language of the proviso.

Suppose that an applicant under this rule proves material irregularity or fraud. Suppose further that he proves gross inadequacy of price realised at the sale in other words he proves substantial injury. Is this sufficient to entitle him to succeed under this rule? The answer is that it is not. He must further prove that the inadequacy of the sale price has been caused by reason of the material irregularity or fraud. Now there are two possible modes in which this may be proved namely —

- (a) by direct evidence, that is, by evidence connecting the material irregularity or fraud with the inadequacy of price as cause and effect or
- (b) by circumstantial evidence that is by evidence of circumstances which will warrant the necessary or at least reasonable inference that the inadequacy of price was the result of the irregularity or fraud complained of

In Tasadduk v Ahmad (v) where a sale was sought to be set aside under the corresponding s 311 of the Code of 1882 on the ground that it was held before the expiration of 30 days from the date of the proclamation [r 68] their Lordships of the Privy Council, after referring to that section said —

In the application of that section [that is s 311] it was incumbent on the [applicant] to have proved that they sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity. They gave no such evidence and it would be extremely improbable that injury could have happened from the non compliance with the strict letter of s 290 [now s 68]. Their Lordships cannot accept the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner that loss is

l. 21, r. 80. to be inferred from the mere fact that a sale was held without full compliance with the provisions of s 290 [now r 68]. The section [that is, s 311] clearly contemplates direct evidence on the subject.

Relying on the above passage, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that to succeed under that section the applicant must prove a grossly inadequate sale price resulting from a material irregularity, and that the co-existence of an irregularity and an inadequacy however gross in the sale price was not sufficient in the absence of direct evidence to establish a causal connection between the irregularity and the inadequacy. In other words, the applicant must connect the irregularity with the inadequacy of price as cause and effect by means of direct evidence (w). On the other hand, it was held by the High Courts of Madras (x) and Calcutta (y) that the fact that the inadequacy of price fetched at the sale was the result of the irregularity complained of might be established either by direct evidence, or it might be inferred when such inference was reasonable from the nature of the irregularity and the extent of the inadequacy of price. As regards the word "direct evidence" in the passage cited above, it was observed by the High Court of Calcutta that what their Lordships intended to say by using those words was that there must be evidence showing that substantial injury was the necessary result of the irregularity complained of (z).

The distinction between the Allahabad decisions on the one hand and the Madras and Calcutta decisions on the other may be explained by an illustration. In execution of a decree obtained by A against B B's one fourth share in certain property is sold for Rs 200. B seeks to set aside the sale alleging that the property was sold at an adjourned sale, that no hour was fixed for the sale as required by r 69, that consequently there were only three bidders at the sale, and that owing to that circumstance the property fetched the grossly inadequate price of Rs 200. It is proved that the hour to which the sale was adjourned was not fixed, in other words, material irregularity is proved. Substantial injury is also proved by evidence of the sale of a share smaller than one fourth of the same property for Rs 4,000. The fact that there were only three bidders is also proved. In such a case, the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta would, under the old section, set aside the sale on the ground that the paucity of bidders could reasonably be ascribed to the non-specification of the hour, and the low price could reasonably be inferred from the fact of the paucity of bidders (a). The High Court of Allahabad, however, would not set aside the sale on a mere inference such as the above. That Court would require direct evidence to show that the paucity of bidders was due to the non-specification of the hour, and that the inadequacy of price was due to paucity of bidders.

The words "unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied" have been substituted in the proviso to give effect to the Madras and Calcutta decisions. What is necessary under the proviso is that the Court should be satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity or fraud complained of, and the Court should be satisfied upon the facts proved before it that the substantial injury was due to the material irregularity or fraud. It is no longer necessary to connect the irregularity or fraud with the inadequacy of price as cause and effect by means of direct evidence. The result is that a sale will be set aside under the present rule if there be either direct evidence connecting the irregularity with the inadequacy of price or evidence of circumstances which will warrant the necessary or at least reasonable inference that the inadequacy was the result of the irregularity complained of. If there be no such evidence the sale must be confirmed (b)

The mere fact that the property realised at the auction sale only one half of the value entered in the proclamation of sale is no ground for setting aside the sale under this rule (c)

Necessary parties—The decree holder is a necessary party to an application under this rule (d). Under the Code of 1892 there was a conflict of opinion whether an auction purchaser was a necessary party to an application under the corresponding s 311 (e). Under the present Code he is clearly a necessary party, see the proviso to r 92, sub-r (2). Where property is bought at a Court sale by A in the name of B, A, the beneficial owner, is not a necessary party to an application under this rule. Hence if an order is made setting aside the sale in a proceeding to which B was a party, it will bind A, though A was not joined as a party to the proceeding (f)

Bona-fide purchaser for value without notice—If the conditions of this rule are satisfied, the sale will be set aside though the purchaser may be a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale (g)

Waiver and estoppel—If the judgment debtor lies by, and knowing of an irregularity or fraud allows the sale to proceed without objection, he will be estopped from impeaching the sale on the ground of irregularity or fraud though substantial injury has been caused. In Arunachellam v Arunachellam (h) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: 'It would be very difficult indeed to conduct proceedings in execution of decrees by attachment and sale of property, if the judgment debtors could lie by and afterwards take advantage of any misdescription of the property attached and about to be sold, which they knew well, but of which the execution creditor or decree-holder might be perfectly ignorant, that they should take no notice of that, allow the sale to proceed and then come forward and say the whole proceedings were vitiated.' In Girdhari Singh v Hurdeo Narain (i), the notification of sale had stated the Government revenue to be Rs 3,146 instead of Rs 8,146, the sale being fixed for the 5th of August 1872. The judgment debtor applied for a postponement of sale and stated that he wished to raise money to pay off the decree holder, and in his petition, he added: 'Under such circumstances it is prayed that a postponement of one month be granted, the attachment and the notification of sale being maintained.' Upon that petition the sale was postponed for one month without the issue of a second notification. The decretal amount not having been paid, the property was put up for sale. The judgment debtor applied to set aside the sale on the ground that the Government revenue was not correctly stated and that the property therefore fetched a very low price. Upon these facts their Lordships of the Privy Council held that though the misstatement of the Government revenue amounted to a material irregularity in publishing the sale, of fraud in publishing or conducting a sale had to be made under s 244 [now s 47], and the period of limitation for the application was 3 years from the date of sale (t), such application must now be made under the present rule, and the period of limitation is 30 days from the date of sale. See notes below, 'Application to set aside sale on other grounds.' rr.

Application to set aside sale on other grounds—When the auction purchaser is the decree holder himself and when an application is made to set aside the sale on a ground other than that covered by the present rule and there is no application made under r 89, the case falls within s 47, and hence there is a second appeal (u). Similarly where a judgment debtor applies to have a sale set aside not only on the ground of material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale, but also on the ground that no notice of the application for attachment and sale was given as required by O 21, r 22, the case falls within s 47, and hence there is a second appeal (v). Neither this rule nor s 92 applies to such cases. It must, however, be noted that where an application really comes under the present rule, the mere fact that in the application s 47 is mentioned will not bring the application within s 47 for the purposes either of an appeal or of limitation (w).

Whether sale can be challenged by way of defence in a suit for possession—See notes to r 92 below under the same head.

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule and rule 92 setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale [O 43, r 1 cl (j)]. But no second appeal lies from the order of the first appellate Court (x). See s 104, sub sec (2), and notes above, 'Fraud in publishing or conducting sale'. Nor does an appeal lie under the Letters Patent from the order of the first appellate Court (y). See notes above, 'Application to set aside sale on other grounds'.

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an appeal lies from an order dismissing an application under this rule for default, the reason given being that the effect of such an order is to confirm the sale under r 92 (z). A fortiori it is so if the order dismissing the application for restoring the original application on the file also confirms the sale (a).

Revision—No revision lies from an order dismissing an application under this rule for default (b). See notes above, 'Appeal'.

O. 21. Application to set aside sale—This rule enables the auction purchaser to proceed by an application to set aside the sale where the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property. It does not apply where a sale is sought to be set aside by an auction purchaser on the ground that he had been induced by misrepresentation or concealment to buy the property for more than its real value (c). The remedy of the purchaser in such a case is by a regular suit. As to return of purchase money when a sale is set aside on the ground that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest see r 93 below.

No saleable interest—This rule applies only where a judgment debtor has no saleable interest at all. Hence the rule does not apply if the judgment-debtor has even a partial interest in the property sold (d) however small that interest may be. In other words a purchaser is not entitled to have a sale set aside under this rule on the ground that the judgment debtor had a saleable interest in a very small portion of the property and had no saleable interest in a major portion of the property (e).

For the purposes of this rule a mortgagor has a saleable interest in the mortgaged property, even though a decree has been obtained by the mortgagee for the enforcement of the mortgage (f) and although the amount due under the mortgage may exceed the value of the property (g).

Limitation—The application under this rule must be made within 30 days from the date of sale. Limitation Act 1908, sch 1 art 166.

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale made under this rule and rule 92 [O 43 r 1 cl. (j)].

Withdrawal of purchase money by auction purchaser from Court—See notes to s 151, case (bb).

Compensation for loss of part of property bought at a Court sale—A purchaser who is deprived of a part of the property bought at a Court sale is not entitled to compensation as against the judgment debtor for the loss of that part. The principle is that apart from the case provided for by this rule and apart from fraud a purchaser at an auction sale must abide by his bargain. What is sold and bought is the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in the property. The Court which sells the property does not guarantee the title and the maxim Caveat emptor applies. It does not make any difference that the property was sold in execution of a mortgage decree and the mortgagee himself is the purchaser (h). See notes to r 94 below. What passes at a Court sale.

92. [Ss 312, 314] (1) Where no application is made under rule 89, rule 90 or rule 91, or where such application is made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute.

Sale when to become absolute or be set aside

(2) Where such application is made and allowed, and where, in the case of an application under rule 89, the deposit required by that rule is made within thirty days from the date of sale, the Court shall make an order setting aside the sale

Provided that no order shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby

(3) No suit to set aside an order made under this rule shall be brought by any person against whom such order is made

Alterations in the rule —

- 1 The corresponding s 312 of the Code of 1882 applied only to applications referred to in r 90. The present rule applies also to applications referred to in rr 89 and 91 [Code of 1882 ss 310A and 313] see sub r (1)
- 2 In sub r (1) the words "as regards the parties to the suit, which occurred in s 312 after the words confirming the sale" have been omitted
- 3 In sub rule (3) the words "on the ground of such irregularity, which occurred in the old section after the words no suit to set aside" have been omitted

No suit will lie to set aside an order made under this rule —

No suit will lie to set aside an order made under this rule by any person against whom such order is made. The only remedy of the party against whom the order is made is to appeal from the order under O 43 r 1 cl (j). Now an order under this rule may be—

- (1) either an order confirming the sale or
- (2) an order setting aside the sale

Order confirming the sale—An order confirming the sale may be made—

- (i) either where no application is made at all to set aside the sale, or
- (ii) where an application is made and disallowed

No suit will lie in either case to set aside an order confirming the sale (i)

Order setting aside the sale—The language of sub rule (3) makes it clear that no suit will lie to set aside an order setting aside a sale made on an application under rule 89 90 or 91 (j). The party against whom the order is made has a remedy by way of appeal under O 43 r 1 cl (j)

It is to be noted that the only class of suits barred by sub rule (3) are suits to set aside (1) an order confirming a sale under sub rule (1) and (2) an order setting aside a sale under sub rule (2). Suits by an auction purchaser for a return of the purchase money on the ground that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold fall under this class see notes to s 93. Suit for a return of purchase money where no saleable interest. Sub rule (3) does not bar such suits. Thus a person claiming title Court belonging to an insolvent property, though his claim has been disallowed by the Insolvency Court. The present rule is no bar to such a suit (k). O. 21. Whether an execution sale can be challenged by way of defence in a suit for possession—Where a judgment debtor does not question the validity of a sale under r 90 above, and a suit is brought by the auction purchaser against him for possession, it is not competent to him to challenge the sale in that suit "The penalty imposed upon a negligent judgment debtor is set out in r 92, and it is that the Court shall make an order confirming the sale and thereupon the sale shall become absolute. This amounts to a judicial determination that none of the objections exists on which the validity of the sale could have been questioned" (l) But it has been held that the dismissal of an application made by a judgment-debtor under r 90, does not preclude him, in a suit for possession by the auction purchaser, from pleading by way of defence that the property sold in execution of a mortgage decree passed against him and bought by the purchaser was not included in the mortgage suit or decree, but was fraudulently inserted in the sale certificate (m) substituted for the words, "shall be entitled to receive back," which occurred in the third paragraph O. 21,

No saleable interest—An auction purchaser may under r 91 apply to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. If the sale is set aside, he may apply under this rule for an order for repayment of his purchase money. But no sale can be set aside under r 91 nor can any repayment be ordered under this rule if it is found that the judgment debtor had some saleable interest in the property. The reason is that in the case of a sale under a decree of the Court there is no warranty of title either by the decree holder or by the Court as there is in the case of private sales. The purchaser must be taken to pay for the property with all risks and all defects in the judgment debtor's title. Such being the case, the purchaser is not entitled to any refund, if the judgment debtor has no saleable interest at all. Rules 91 and 93, however, confer upon him a statutory right to a return of the purchase money in such cases (r).

Suit for return of purchase-money where no saleable interest—The Code of 1859 did not contain any express provision for a return of the purchase money to the auction purchaser if it turned out that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property at all. Hence it was held that the auction purchaser was not entitled to a return of the purchase money where the judgment debtor had no saleable interest (s). The right to a return of the purchase money was first given by s 315 of the Code of 1877. That section was in terms similar to s 315 of the Code of 1882. Under the Code of 1882 it was held by all the High Courts (t), following a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court (u), that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree could maintain a suit against a decree holder for recovery of the purchase money if it turned out that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold and that he was not limited to the special procedure in the execution department mentioned in that section. This view was based principally upon the words may be enforced which occurred in the last paragraph of s 315. It was also held under that section that whether he proceeded by an application for execution under that section or by a regular suit, he was not entitled to receive back his purchase money unless the judgment debtor had no saleable interest at all, if the judgment debtor had some saleable interest in the property, however small, he could not by suit, any more than by application, obtain a refund of the purchase money in proportion to the extent to which the judgment debtor had no interest (v). It was further held, having regard to the words, and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it which occurred in the second paragraph of s 315 that the cause of action did not arise and the period of limitation for a suit under that section did not commence until the purchaser was deprived of the property sold to him (w). It was also held that the purchaser was entitled to

r. 93. proceed by way of suit even after rateable distribution against those among whom the purchase money was distributed (x). It was further held that a suit would lie even after confirmation of the sale if the purchaser was after confirmation deprived of the property as the result of a separate suit by the lawful owner (y).

The second and fourth paragraphs of s. 315 of the Code of 1882 have now been omitted. The words "may be enforced" which occurred in s. 315 are not reproduced in the present rule. The present rule says that if an application is made by the auction purchaser under r. 91 to set aside the sale—and such application must be made within 30 days from the date of sale—and the sale is set aside under r. 92, the purchaser is entitled to an order for a return of the purchase money. The result, therefore, under the present Code is that if the purchaser does not apply under r. 91 to set aside the sale, or if an application is made but it is disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale under r. 92 (1). If an order is made confirming the sale, the purchaser is precluded by r. 92 (3) from bringing a suit to set aside the order confirming the sale. And it has been held by all the High Courts (z) that under the present Code an auction purchaser is not entitled as he was under the Code of 1882 to bring a regular suit for a return of the purchase money in cases where the judgment debtor has no saleable interest in the property. The result of these decisions is that if in ignorance of the true facts the purchaser fails to make the application to set aside the sale under r. 91 within the period of limitation, he must take the consequences, and the judgment debtor is entitled to take credit for the price of property not belonging to him. This may seem inequitable at first sight, but the reason of the rulings is that while in a private sale there is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor, there is no such covenant either by the decree holder or by the Court in the case of a sale in execution of a decree, and the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to such a sale. The right of the purchaser being the creation of the statute, the remedy to enforce that right must be confined to that prescribed by the statute. That remedy is to apply under r. 91 to set aside the sale, and if the sale is set aside, to apply for a return of the purchase money under r. 93. If the Court passes an order refusing to set aside the sale, he may appeal from the order under O. 43, r. 1 (j), the order being one made under r. 92. The judgment of the appellate Court is final, there being only one appeal from such order. He cannot, as stated above, bring a regular suit to set aside the sale and for repayment of the purchase money as he could under the Code of 1882 (a).

But it is otherwise where the auction purchaser has bought the property in execution of a mortgage decree, and the decree as well as the sale is set aside in a separate suit brought by parties interested in the mortgaged property. In such a case it has been held, that the auction purchaser is entitled to a return of the purchase money, his remedy being by an application under s. 47 above (b).

Where a sale took place and was confirmed by the Court before the present Code came into force, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the rights of the purchaser must be determined with reference to the provisions of the Code of 1882, and that the purchaser was therefore entitled to maintain a regular suit for a return of the purchase money if the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property (c).

Suit for return of purchase-money where sale set aside on ground of material irregularity—Where a sale is set aside on the ground of material irregularity under rr 90 and 92, the auction purchaser may bring a suit for a refund of the purchase money. Such right exists independently of the Code, the mere use of the expression "order" in this rule has not the effect of taking away that right (d).

Interest.—The Court has power by the express terms of this rule to award interest on the purchase money (e).

Limitation—The period of limitation for an application under this rule is 3 years from the accrual of the right under art 181 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (f). The period of limitation for a regular suit, in cases governed by the Code of 1882, to recover back the purchase money is 6 years from the accrual of the right under art 120 of that Act (g).

"Be entitled to an order"—Where an order is made under this rule, it may be executed in the manner prescribed for the execution of decrees. See s 30 above.

94. [S 316] Where a sale of immoveable property has become absolute, the Court shall grant a certificate specifying the property sold and the name of the person who at the time of sale is declared to be the purchaser. Such certificate shall bear date the day on which the sale became absolute.

Old section.—This rule corresponds with the first part of s 316 of the Code of 1882. The second part of that section, relating to the vesting of title, has been reproduced in s 63 of this Code with an important alteration as regards the time when the property vests in the purchaser.

Purchaser's title—See s 63 and notes thereto.

The Court shall grant a certificate—The provisions of this rule are mandatory (h).

Certificate of sale—A sale certificate does not transfer the title. It is evidence of the transfer (i).

Certificate to legal representative—Where the purchaser is dead, the certificate may be granted to his legal representative (j). See s 146 above.

What passes at a Court-sale—As regards private sales, there is in the absence of a contract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor as provided by the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s 55, sub s (2). But as regards sales under a decree of the Court, there is no warranty of title either by the decree holder or

by the Court Rule 13 of this Order shows that the decree holder, when applying for execution, has only to specify the judgment debtor's share or interest in the property "to the best of his belief," and "so far as he has been able to ascertain the same" Rule III shows that the proclamation only professes to specify the particulars prescribed by that rule including the property to be sold and the judgment debtors' interest therein "as fairly and accurately as possible" Hence what passes to a purchaser at a Court sale is the "right, title and interest" of the judgment debtor, whatever that interest may be In other words, a purchaser at a Court sale buys the property with all risks and all defects in the judgment debtor's title except where it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest at all (l) In the latter case, the purchaser may apply to have the sale set aside under r 91 of this Order and he may then apply under r 93 for a return of the purchase money If the purchase money has been distributed amongst the creditors of the judgment debtor under s 73, he may follow the money in their hands (l) But,—and this is an important consequence of the purchaser buying only the right, title and interest of the judgment debtor,—the sale will not be set aside, if the judgment debtor has even a partial interest in the property, nor will the purchaser be entitled to a refund of the purchase money to the extent to which the judgment-debtor had no interest, unless the case be one of fraud (m) On the same principle a purchaser in execution of a money decree is bound by the estoppel which binds the judgment-debtor whose interest he has purchased (n) The Madras High Court has held that he is not bound in all cases (nn)

It has been stated above that what passes to a purchaser at a Court sale in execution of a money decree is the "right, title and interest" of the judgment debtor in the property sold To determine the nature and extent of the judgment debtor's right, title and interest in the property sold, the test is as stated by Lord Watson in the course of the argument in Pellachi Chettiar v Chinnalambiar (o), what did the Court intend to sell, and what did the purchaser understand that he bought? These are questions of fact, or rather of mixed law and fact, and must be determined according to the evidence in the particular case (p) This test was applied in Balant v Hirachand (q), cited in the next following paragraph, and in Abdul Aziz v Appayyasami (r) cited in the notes below

Where a purchaser at a Court sale in execution of a decree against a member of a joint Hindu family buys 4 specific properties A, B, C and D, alleged to belong to him, and subsequently there is a partition decree by which properties A, B, X and Y are allotted to that member, the purchaser is entitled only to such of the properties as are common to the sale certificate and the share of that member under the decree, namely, properties A and B He is not entitled to have the equivalent of properties C and D out of properties X and Y (s)

A is entitled to 10 annas share in a village Out of this share he mortgages 6 annas to B In execution of a simple money decree obtained by C against A, a 4 annas share is attached and sold. The presumption is, in the absence of specific indications to the contrary, that the share sold was the share which was not mortgaged (t).

Sale in execution of a mortgage decree—Where mortgaged property is sold in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by the mortgagee against the mortgagor, the interest both of the mortgagor and mortgagee, passes to the purchaser (u).

Variance between proclamation of sale and sale-certificate—It is provided by O 21, r 66, that where property is ordered to be sold in execution of a decree, the proclamation of sale should 'specify as fairly and accurately as possible the property to be sold. By the present rule it is provided that where property is sold, and the sale becomes absolute, the Court shall grant a certificate specifying the property sold.' It sometimes happens that the property as described in the certificate of sale is different from that described in the proclamation of sale. In such a case the description of the property in the proclamation of sale is conclusive as to what was the subject matter of the sale. As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Darmaja v. Uban Ram (1) 'that which is sold in a judicial sale of this kind can be nothing but the property attached, and that property is conclusively described in and by the schedule to which the attachment refers, that is the schedule of the attached property in the proclamation of sale. Thus where a judgment debtor owned a mahal of which a 10 annas share was mortgaged and the proclamation of sale stated that what was to be sold was a 6 annas share in the mahal included in the mortgage but the purchaser obtained a certificate of sale in which the property described was a 6 annas share in the mahal not included in the mortgage, it was held that the sale certificate should be set aside. The Court has no power to grant a certificate in which the property described is different from that specified in the proclamation of sale (w). Similarly where the proclamation of sale stated that the whole interest of five brothers in a mortgaged property was to be sold, and by a mistake on the part of the officer in charge of the sale the certificate of sale omitted to mention the names of four of them, it was held that what was sold to the purchaser was the property as described in the proclamation of sale and not the property as erroneously described in the sale certificate (x). The real question in such case under the present Code of Civil Procedure, seems therefore to be what was the sale, i.e. what was bargained and paid for and that must depend not on erroneous statements of what was offered for sale but on what was actually offered for sale and bid for. What [is actually] offered for sale [is] determined by the order of the Court and the proclamation (y).

Effect of new interpretation of law on sale—A purchased at a Court sale the right title and interest of B in an impartible zamindari. By the law as then interpreted the holder of such a zamindari was only entitled to a life interest in the zamindari. [A must therefore be deemed to have purchased only the life interest of B]. Subsequently this interpretation of the law was reversed by the Judicial Committee which decided that the holder of an impartible zamindari is entitled to an absolute interest in it, and that such interest is alienable. The new interpretation does not entitle A to claim that what he purchased at the sale was the absolute interest of B (z).

Amendment of sale-certificate—A purchaser at a Court sale may apply to the Court for amendment of the sale certificate where the description of the property in the certificate differs from that in the proclamation. The Court may allow or refuse the amendment, but no appeal lies from the order in either case. Such an order is not appealable under s 104 Nor is it appealable as a decree under s 47, for the question cannot be regarded as one relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree, the decree being fully executed The only question in such a case is whether the certificate given to the auction purchaser gives a right description of the property sold (a)

Limitation—The provisions of the Limitation Act do not apply to applications for a sale certificate The reason is that it is the duty of the Court on the sale becoming absolute to issue a sale certificate and there is no duty imposed on the purchaser to apply for such a certificate The action of the Court in granting the certificate is ministerial and not judicial The Limitation Act does not apply to applications to the Court to do what it has no discretion to refuse, nor to applications for exercise of functions of a ministerial character Hence if the Court fails to issue a sale certificate, and the purchaser has thereupon to apply to the Court for a grant of the certificate, the application may be made at any time (c)

95. [s. 318.] Where the immoveable property sold is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor or of some person on his behalf or of some person claiming under a title created by the judgment-debtor subsequently to the attachment of such property and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under rule 94, the Court shall, on the application of the purchaser, order delivery to be made by putting such purchaser or any person whom he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf in possession of the property, and, if need be, by removing any person who refuses to vacate the same.

Limitation—The period of limitation for an application for delivery of possession is three years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act, 1908, s. 1, art 181] The period of limitation for a suit for delivery of possession is twelve years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [ib., art 138]

Procedure under this rule—If the Court finds on inquiry that the property is in the occupancy (1) of the judgment debtor, (2) or of some person on his behalf, (3) or of some person claiming title under him, the Court shall order delivery to be made by putting the purchaser in possession of the property. If, however, the Court finds that the person in possession of the property is holding the property on his own account, there is no option to the Court but to dismiss the application under this rule (f)

It may be observed that a purchaser at a Court sale is not bound to apply for possession under this rule. He may at his option bring a regular suit for possession, the period of limitation for the suit being 12 years as stated above. The remedy by way of application and that by way of suit are concurrent (g). Further, the fact that an application has been made under this rule and it is rejected as being time barred (h), or on other ground (i) is no bar to a regular suit for possession.

96 [S. 319] Where the property sold is in the occupancy of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under rule 94, the Court shall, on the application of the purchaser, order delivery to be made by affixing a copy of the certificate of sale in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, that the interest of the judgment-debtor has been transferred to the purchaser.

Delivery of possession to purchaser—The possession contemplated by this rule is symbolical possession. See notes to r 35 of this Order.

Resistance to delivery of possession to decree-holder or purchaser.

When rule applies—This rule does not apply unless the auction purchaser has made an attempt to obtain possession of the property either through Court or out of Court and he is resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession (2)

Regular suit—The decree holder may either resort to the summary remedy provided by this rule or he may bring a regular suit. Failure on the part of the decree holder to avail himself of the remedy under this rule does not deprive him of the right of bringing a regular suit against the party obstructing execution of the decree (1). But if he applies under this rule and fails the order against him is conclusive unless he brings a suit to establish his right to possession as provided by r 103 below. Such a suit must be brought within one year from the date of the order (1). See Limitation Act 1908 sch I art 11 A.

Limitation—The period of limitation for an applicaton complaining of resistance or obstruction to delivery of possession of immoveable property decreed or sold in execution of a decree is 30 days from the date of the resistance or obstruction (Limitation Act 1908 sch I art 167)

Fresh application for delivery of possession—Under the present Code a holder of a decree for possession of immovable property has to apply for possession under O 21 r 35 while an auction purchaser has to apply for possession under O 21 r 3a. The present rule deals with obstruction or resistance in obtaining possession. An important question that arises in this connection is whether if a decree holder or auction purchaser who is obstructed or resisted in obtaining possession omits to apply under this rule within 30 days from the date of obstruction or resistance the only other remedy open to him is to proceed by a regular suit or whether he is entitled to a fresh writ of possession. It has been held by the High Courts of Madras (m) and Patna (n) that he is entitled to make a fresh application for delivery of possession and to a fresh warrant for possession. On the other hand it has been held by the High Courts of Bombay (o) and Allahabad (p) that he is not so entitled and that his only remedy is by a regular suit.

When this rule applies.—This rule deals with two cases namely, where the obstruction is occasioned without just cause (1) by the judgment debtor, or (2) by some other person at his instigation. No order can be made under this rule if the obstruction is caused by a person other than the judgment debtor, unless the Court is satisfied that the person was acting at the instigation of the judgment debtor (g)

Purchaser from a judgment-debtor pending attachment—It has been held by the High Court of Madras that proceedings can be instituted under this rule against a purchaser from a judgment debtor pending attachment, though such a purchaser is not expressly mentioned in the rule. The reasons given are (1) that this rule is to be read with r 93 which expressly provides for the institution of proceedings against such a purchaser under that rule, and (2) that such a purchaser is a "representative" of the judgment debtor within the meaning of s 146, so that just as proceedings could be instituted against a judgment debtor under this rule so they could be instituted against such a purchaser by virtue of the provisions of that section (r)

Resistance or obstruction
by bona fide claimant

When this rule applies—The present rule deals with two cases of claimants in good faith namely (1) persons claiming on their own account and (2) persons claiming on account of some person other than the judgment debtor

Person other than judgment debtor claiming to be in possession on his own account—The word "possession" as used in this rule is not limited to actual physical possession. It includes also constructive possession, such as possession through tenants or servants. Hence a landlord who is in possession of a property through his tenants is a person in possession of the property on his own account within the meaning of this rule (t)

Where in a suit brought by a plaintiff against two defendants, a decree is passed, by consent against one of them only, the other defendant is not a judgment debtor. He is a person other than the judgment debtor within the meaning of this rule (u) has been held by the High Court of Calcutta (v), that the words "any person claiming to be in possession on his own account" means "any person claiming to be in possession as a matter of fact on his own account," and that a sub tenant is such a person. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Bombay (w), that the words "any person claiming to be in possession on his own account" means "any person claiming to be in possession on his own title," and that a sub tenant is not such a person. According to the former view, A is entitled to an order for possession against C. According to the latter view, he is not.

The Bombay High Court has also held that C is not entitled to claim the benefit of the Bombay Rent Act against A, there being no privity of contract between him and A (z).

Appeal—See notes to rr 98 and 101 under the head "Appeal"

100. [S. 332.] (1) Where any person other than the judgment-debtor is dispossessed of immoveable property by the holder of a decree for the possession of such property or, where such property has been sold in execution of a decree, by the purchaser thereof, he may make an application to the Court complaining of such dispossession

(2) The Court shall fix a day for investigating the matter and shall summon the party against whom the application is made to appear and answer the same.

Rules 100 and 101—These rules are to be read together

When this rule applies—This rule contemplates a case where a person has been dispossessed by an auction purchaser who has taken possession of the property through the Court. He then complains to the Court of such dispossession and the Court, after making a summary investigation, if it holds that the applicant was in possession of the property on his own account and not on account of the judgment debtor, directs under r 101 that possession be given back to the applicant. The party against whom the order is made may then institute a suit under r 103 to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property (y)

"Any person other than the judgment debtor"—See notes to s 47
 "Representative," on p 135 above, and cases (9) and (10), on p 136 above

"Is dispossessed"—Where mere symbolical possession is delivered to the decree holder or purchaser under r 96, the person in possession cannot be said to be dispossessed" within the meaning of this rule so as to entitle him to apply under this rule (v). It is the delivery of actual possession alone (r 95) that can constitute dispossession within the meaning of this rule. A person who is in possession through his tenant will be said to be "dispossessed" within the meaning of this rule, if the tenant is ousted from the property by the delivery of actual possession to the decree holder or purchaser (a) O. rr. 10

Dispossession under order of Collector—When a person has been dispossessed under an order made by the Collector to whom execution proceedings are transferred, he should apply to the Collector, and not to the Court, complaining of such dispossession. This rule has no application when execution has been transferred to the Collector (b)

Limitation—The application under this rule must be made within 30 days from the date of the dispossession. Limitation Act, 1908, sch I, art 165

Dismissal of application for default—It was held by the Patna High Court in the undermentioned case (c) that where an application made under this rule by a person not bound by the decree is dismissed for default, the order may be set aside under O 9, r 9, and the application may then be reheard. But this decision was disapproved by a Special Bench of the same Court in a later case (d). See notes to O 9, r 9. Whether this rule applies to proceedings in execution, on p 501 above

101. [Ss. 332, 335.] Where the Court is satisfied that the applicant was in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, it shall direct that the applicant be put into possession of the property.

Bona fide claimant to be restored to possession

"Was in possession on his own account"—A member of a joint Hindu family cannot be said to be in possession of any particular portion of the joint property on his own account. His possession is the possession of the family (e)

Ex parte order for delivery of possession—Where an order is made under rule 101, even though it be ex parte, the remedy of the other party is by way of suit under rule 103, and not by proceedings under O 9, r 13. O 9, r 13 does not apply to execution proceedings, in any event not to proceedings under rules 100 and 101 of the present Order (f). See notes to O 9, r 13. Whether this rule applies to execution proceedings on p 512b above

Appeal—The Chief Court of the Punjab has held that no appeal lies from an order made under this rule (g). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that where an application under r 100 is fought out between persons who were parties to the suit or representatives of parties, the case falls within s 47 and an appeal lies from the order (h). The Madras decision assumes that questions as to possession under r 100 are questions relating to the execution discharge and satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of s 47. Upon this point there is a conflict of decisions. The matter is discussed fully in the notes to s 47, 'Questions between the auction

102. [S 333] Nothing in rules 99 and 101 shall apply to resistance or obstruction in execution of a decree for the possession of immoveable property by a person to whom the judgment-debtor has transferred the property after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed or to the disposition of any such person

103. [Ss 332, fourth para, S 335, second para] Any party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under rule 98, rule 99 or rule 101 may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property, but, subject to the result of such suit (if any), the order shall be conclusive.

Orders conclusive subject to regular suit

Suit to establish right to present possession—The suit must be brought within one year from the date of the order, Limitation Act (1908), sch I, art 11A. If no suit is brought within the aforesaid period the order will be conclusive (i)

This rule does not apply unless there is an order made under r 98 or r 101. Therefore where an application is made under r 97 or r 100 but the Court declines to pass any order upon the application thinking it best that the applicant should be referred to a separate suit the present rule does not apply, and any suit which the applicant may subsequently institute for possession is not a suit under this rule and it is not therefore governed by art 11A of the Limitation Act (i). Not only is it necessary that there should be an actual order made but the order must be one made after investigation as contemplated by r 97, sub r (2) and r 100 sub r (2). An order dismissing an application for default of prosecution is not an order made after investigation. The present rule, therefore, does not apply to such an order (k).

“Scope of suit under this rule—It is erroneous to think that a suit under this rule is concerned only with the question of actual possession at the date of the order. The suit is to establish the right which the plaintiff claims to the present possession of the property and this right may be established without showing that the plaintiff was in actual possession at the date of the order against him (l).

Suit by auction purchaser for possession upon a different cause of action.—An auction purchaser against whom an order is made under r 99 or r 101 may bring a suit under this rule to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property. Where a suit is brought by him under this rule the suit is one for possession under his auction purchase, and the cause of action in the suit is the adverse decision under r 99 or r 100. A suit under the present rule does not concern itself with any other cause of action which such person apart from his character as an auction purchaser may have against the opposite party. It is, therefore, competent to the auction purchaser to abandon all his right in the auction sale including the right to bring a suit under this rule as auction purchaser, and to bring a suit against the opposite party for possession upon a different title altogether. To such a suit the provisions of the present rule do not apply, and the suit need not be brought within one year from the date of the order as required by art 11 A of the Limitation Act (m)

Order dismissing application under rule 101—A makes an application under r 100. The application is dismissed under r 101. A is a party against whom an order is made under r 101, within the meaning of the present rule, though there is no express provision for dismissal of an application under r 101 (n)

Order dismissing an application under r 95—An order dismissing an application under r 95 cannot be treated as an order under r 99 so as to attract the applicability of the present rule (o)

ORDER XXII.

Death, Marriage and Insolvency of Parties.

1 [S. 361] The death of a plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate if the right to sue survives

No statement by party as to death if right to sue survives

Application of Order to appeals—The provisions of this order apply to appeals. See s 107 sub s (2), and r 11 below

Application of Order to execution proceedings—The provisions of this order apply to execution proceedings except rr 3, 4 and 8. See r 12 below

'Right to sue'—The right to sue means the right to bring a suit asserting a right to the same relief which the deceased plaintiff asserted at the time of his death (p)

In what cases the right to sue survives and in what cases it does not—To answer this question, we may turn to the provisions of—

I the Indian Contract Act 9 of 1872, s 37, and

II the Indian Succession Act 39 of 1925 s 306

I Contract Act s 37—Section 37 of the Contract Act runs as follows. Promises bind the representatives of the promisors in case of the death of such promisors before performance unless a contrary intention appears from the contract. Expanding the italicized words we may say that contracts involving the exercise of special skill or involving special personal confidence are not binding on the representatives of the promisors. A promises to paint a picture for B by a certain day at a certain price. A dies before the day. The contract cannot be enforced either by A's representatives against B or by B against A's representatives. The reason is that the right to sue does not survive to or against the representatives of A.

II Indian Succession Act 39 of 1925, s 306—Section 306 of the Succession Act is as follows. "All demands whatsoever, and all rights to prosecute or demand any action or special proceeding existing in favour of or against a person at the time of

Analysing the above section we may say that the right to sue does not survive in the following cases —

(i) Suits for defamation, assault or other personal injuries not causing the death of the party [Where death is caused by a personal injury, the legal representative of the deceased may sue the wrong doer for damages, see Act 13 of 1855]

(ii) Cases where, after the death of the party, the relief sought could not be enjoyed or granting it would be nugatory

Sitaram* (1912) 36 Bom 144, 12 I C 720,

9. An action to recover damages for breach of contract of marriage abates on the death of the plaintiff Bilubhai v. Nanalal (1920) 44 Bom 446, 53, I C 624

10. A sues B for damages for malicious prosecution A dies pending the suit. Does the right to sue survive? The Calcutta High Court has held that it does and that A's legal representative is entitled to continue the suit (g). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Bombay (r), Patna (s), and Madras (t), that the right to sue does not survive and that the suit abates on A's death.

11. The right to sue for damages for breach of contract, the right to sue on a promissory note, the right to sue for a debt the right to sue on a mortgage, the right to sue for wrong done to property are all instances of rights that are not extinguished on the death of the plaintiff or defendant. In all these cases the suit does not abate on the death of the plaintiff or defendant. An agreement referring matters in dispute to arbitration is not in this country revoked by the death of any of the parties thereto before the award is made. Hence the question whether the legal representative of a deceased party is or is not entitled to enforce the contract to refer is a question which would depend upon whether the right dealt with in the reference is of a purely personal nature or is one which survives to the legal representative (u).

Death of either party pending appeal.—Where a decree has been passed for the plaintiff in a suit in which the right to sue would not have survived had the plaintiff died before decree, and either party dies pending an appeal preferred by the defendant from the decree, the appeal does not abate (v). But if the plaintiff's suit is dismissed and the plaintiff has appealed from the decree, and either party dies pending the appeal the appeal will abate (w).

Illustrations

I. A sues B for damages for defamation, and obtains a decree for Rs. 5,000. B appeals from the decree. A dies pending the appeal. The appeal does not abate, and B may continue the appeal against A's representatives. If B dies pending the appeal B's representative may continue the appeal against A.

II. A sues B for damages for defamation, but the suit is dismissed. A appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal A dies. A's representative is not entitled to prosecute the appeal. The reason is that the decree in the original suit being against A, what is sought to be enforced in appeal is A's right to sue. But the right to sue in a suit for defamation does not survive to the legal representative hence the appeal abates. Similarly if B dies pending the appeal, A is not entitled to continue the appeal against B's representative, not even if A's suit was dismissed with costs (x).

3. [Ss 363, 365 366.] (1) Where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf, shall cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit

Procedure in case of death of one of several plaintiffs or of sole plaintiff

(2) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub rule (1) the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned, and, on the application of the defendant, the Court may award to him the costs which he may have incurred in defending the suit, to be recovered from the estate of the deceased plaintiff

Alterations in the rule —

- 1 The words so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned in sub rule (2) are new See notes below The suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned

- The words the suit shall abate in sub rule (2) have been substituted for the words the Court may pass an order that the suit shall abate which occurred in s 366 of the Code of 1882 The latter words gave rise to a conflict of opinion as to whether an order that a suit shall abate was appealable The High Courts of Bombay (y) and Madras (z) held that such an order was a decree and was therefore appealable The Allahabad High Court (a) held that the order was not appealable No such question can arise under the present rule, for it is no longer necessary to make an order that the suit shall abate. The suit abates ipso facto if no application is made under sub rule (1) within the time limited by law. This view was taken by the High Court of Lahore (b), and in one case by the High Court of Allahabad (c). In a recent case, however, the Allahabad Court held that a formal order declaring that a suit or appeal has abated is necessary before an application can be made to set aside the abatement under r 11 (2) below (d). The correctness of this decision is open to question.

Limitation—The application under this rule must be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased plaintiff or appellant. Limitation Act, 1908, sch I, art 176.

The suit shall abate "so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned"—Where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue survives to the surviving plaintiffs or plaintiff alone, the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs may proceed with the suit. This case has been dealt with in r. 2 above. The present rule provides inter alia that where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving plaintiffs alone, the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff ought to be made a party to the suit. For this purpose an application should be made to the Court and such application must be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased plaintiff. Sub rule (2) provides that where no such application is made the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned. The words italicized above mean that the suit shall primarily abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned but, they do not mean that the suit shall in no case abate as a whole. If the suit is of such a nature that it can proceed in the absence of the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff it will abate so far only as the deceased plaintiff is concerned. A suit by the partners of a firm to recover a partnership debt is a suit of this nature so that if one of the partners dies pending the suit, and his legal representative is not brought on the record, the suit will abate only so far as the deceased partner is concerned (e). But if it is of such a character that it cannot proceed in the absence of the legal representative it will abate as a whole. A suit by some of the partners of a firm against the other partners for accounts and for winding up the affairs of the partnership is a suit of this character, so that if one of the plaintiffs (or defendants) dies and his legal representative is not brought on the record the suit will abate as a whole (f). See notes above, 'Alterations in the rule,' No 1.

This rule applies to appeals—The provisions of this rule apply not only to the case of a deceased plaintiff but to the case of a deceased appellant [see s 107 and r 11 below]. Therefore where one of two or more appellants dies and the right to appeal does not survive to the surviving appellant alone the legal representative of the deceased appellant ought to be brought on the record. If this is not done, the appeal will abate so far as the deceased appellant is concerned. But the appeal will abate as a whole, if the case is of such a nature that the appeal cannot proceed in the absence of the legal representative of the deceased appellant. There is particularly one class of cases in which an appeal cannot abate as a whole but abates only so far as the deceased appellant is concerned, and they are cases which come within O 41, r 4, inter alia 7.

22, r. 3. with s 544 of the Code of 1852 O 41, r 4 provides that where there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants in a suit, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or all the defendants, as the case may be. Where several plaintiffs or defendants jointly appeal from a decree in a case to which O 41, r 4 of the Code applies, the death of one of such appellants, if no legal representative of the deceased appellant is brought on the record within the period of limitation can only have the effect of causing the appeal to abate so far only as the deceased appellant is concerned it cannot have the effect of causing the appeal to abate as a whole. A and B sue C, D and E for possession of certain lands, alleging that they have been unlawfully dispossessed by the defendants. The defence is that the land belongs to C, D and E. The Court finds that the land belongs to the plaintiffs, and a decree is passed in favour of the plaintiffs. C, D and E appeal from the decree. E dies pending the appeal, but his legal representative is not brought on the record within the period of limitation. A and B (respondents) contend that the appellate Court should not proceed with the appeal, on the ground that the appeal abated as a whole. Does the appeal abate as a whole? No, it abates only so far as the deceased appellant is concerned and the appeal should therefore be proceeded with. The reason is that the ground of appeal being common to all the appellants viz., that they were the lawful owners of the land any one of them might have appealed from the whole decree under O 41, r 4 if so, the death of one of the appellants could not affect the right of the other appellants to proceed with the appeal (g)

Legal representative of deceased plaintiff—The expression "legal representative" is defined in s 2 (11). On the death of a Hindu widow pending a suit to recover property belonging to her deceased husband, the reversionary heirs of the husband are her legal representatives within the meaning of this rule (h). On the death of a Hindu female to recover her father's property from strangers, the next heirs of the father are her legal representatives within the meaning of this rule (i). On the death of a reversioner pending a suit for a declaration against a Hindu widow that an alleged adoption is invalid, the next reversioner is the legal representative, and he is entitled to be brought on the record as such (j).

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that where a suit is brought by a minor Hindu for partition, and the minor dies pending the suit, his legal representatives are not entitled to continue the suit the reason given being that the rule that the mere institution of a suit for partition effects a severance of the joint estate is not applicable to a suit by a minor, it being for the Court to determine in such a suit whether a decree for partition will be beneficial to the minor (k).

A suit brought by the head of a mutt on behalf of the mutt may be continued on his removal by his successor in office. The successor is not a legal representative, but a person on whom the interest in the trust property "devolves" within the meaning of r 10 below. Hence s 10, and not the present rule, applies to such a case (l).

Two or more legal representatives—We next proceed to consider the question whether, if there are two or more legal representatives, they should all be made parties? A Mahomedan plaintiff dies pending a suit brought by him, leaving three sons, A, B and C. A alone applies to be brought on the record in place of the deceased, and he is brought on the record as plaintiff. No application is made to bring B and C on the record within the period of limitation. Does the suit abate? It does according to the Allahabad High Court (m). According to that Court, the words "legal representative" must, when there are two or more legal representatives, be read in the plural. It has accordingly been held by that Court that all the legal representatives must be brought on the record as plaintiffs, and if any one of them refuses to be joined as a plaintiff, he should be joined as a defendant. The same view has been taken by the High Court of Madras (n), except that according to that Court if any of the legal representatives refuses to be joined as a plaintiff, he may be brought on the record even after the period of limitation, and the suit does not abate if he is so brought on the record. In Bombay it has been held that an application by one of several legal representatives is sufficient, and that the suit does not abate if others are not brought on the record (o). The same principles apply to appeals.

Wrong person as legal representative—See notes to r 4 below under the same head.

Joint Hindu family and legal representative—The High Court of Patna has held that this rule is to be applied even if the plaintiffs are members of a joint Hindu family, and that r 4 is to be applied even if the defendants are members of a joint family. According to that Court, the legal representatives of a deceased coparcener within the meaning of s 2 (11) are the surviving coparceners, and the latter must be brought on the record in their representative character though they may be already on the record in their own capacity (p). On the other hand, it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the case of members of a joint Hindu family is governed by r 2 above, that is the right to sue survives to or against the surviving coparceners alone, and if they are already on the record, it is not necessary to bring them on record also in their representative capacity (q).

Legal representative already on record in another character—The mere fact that the alleged legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or defendant is already a party to the suit does not dispense with the provisions of this or the next rule (r). As to joint Hindu family, see notes above.

A, B and C sue D and E for partition. A dies pending the suit leaving D and C as his heirs. No application is made by B and C to bring them on record as the legal representatives of A. Held by the Rangoon High Court that the suit abates only as to A, and not as a whole, the reason given being that the surviving plaintiffs themselves are the sole legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff (s).

Determination of question as to legal representative—The present rule presupposes that the party claiming to represent the deceased plaintiff is his legal representative. If there is a dispute as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, it should be determined by the Court under r 5 below (t).

What pleas may be taken by a legal representative—The legal representative of a deceased plaintiff can only prosecute the cause of action as originally framed (u). Likewise, the defendant can raise no defence against the legal representative other than what he could have raised against the deceased plaintiff himself (v). But it is otherwise where the real defendant is an institution such as a temple which may be represented at different stages by different trustees. In such a case if the original suit is against the trustee who created a debt agreeing to pay it out of the temple funds, and that trustee is removed, it is open to his successor to raise the plea not taken by the first trustee, namely, that the temple funds were not liable for the debt. The devolution of interest in such a case is the one contemplated by s 10 below and not r 4 (w).

A Hindu son sues his father and the purchaser from the father of ancestral property to set aside a sale made by the father, alleging that the sale was without legal necessity. A dies pending the suit. The father is not the proper legal representative of the son in such a case, as it is the sale by the father that is impeached, but some other member of the family who may be interested in setting aside the sale (x).

Minor applicant—A minor is as much entitled to be made a party as the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff as an adult. But he must apply through a next friend (y).

Death of plaintiff after preliminary and before final decree—This rule applies where a plaintiff dies after the preliminary and before the final decree is passed as in a suit on a mortgage. The reason is that proceedings after the preliminary decree are not proceedings in execution under the new Code. The suit continues until the final decree is passed (z).

Death after final decree—The provisions of this Order do not apply where a party dies after the final decree is passed. Thus if A sues B, but the suit is dismissed, and A dies thereafter, his legal representative may file an appeal from the decree without making any application under this rule to be brought on the record in place of the deceased (a). See also r 12 below.

Death of pauper applicant—Where there is only an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, and the applicant dies before the leave is granted, the right to sue as a pauper, being a personal right, cannot survive to his legal representative. But the legal representative may present a fresh application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, or he may institute a suit for the same relief that the deceased claimed, if the right to sue survives (b).

Effect of abatement on rights of parties—Where a suit has abated, and the abatement has not been set aside under r 9 below, the defendant is entitled as long as he continues in possession of the suit property, to plead against the plaintiff and those claiming under him that the order of abatement is conclusive of the rights to the property. In such a case the order of abatement operates as a judgment in favour of the defendant to the same extent as a judgment on the merits (c).

Suit under O. I, r. 8, and abatement.—See notes to O I, r. 8, "Abatement of suit," and "Abatement of appeal," on p 386 above

Revision—When the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff applies within the prescribed period to have his name entered on the record, the Court is bound under this rule to enter his name. If the Court fails to do so, it amounts to a failure to exercise jurisdiction vested in it by law under this rule, and the High Court may interfere in revision under s 115(d)

Execution proceedings.—This rule does not apply to proceedings in execution see r 12 below

Appeal—The decisions on the question of appeal are not uniform. In some cases to be presently considered the alteration introduced in the present rule, namely, the substitution of the words "the suit shall abate" for the words "the Court may pass an order that the suit shall abate" which occurred in the corresponding s 366 of the Code of 1882, has not been noticed, see notes "Alterations in the rule", No 2, on p 732 above. We proceed to consider the decisions of each High Court separately.

Madras Cases—The Madras High Court has held that where on the death of a plaintiff two rival claimants apply to the Court to be brought upon the record as the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, and the Court decides in favour of one of them and against the other, the party against whom the decision is given is not entitled to appeal, the reason given being that there is no abatement of the suit in such a case as the suit can be proceeded with by the other claimant (e). But it has been held that if a sole plaintiff dies, and only one person claims to be the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, and his application to be brought upon the record is dismissed on the ground that he is not the legal representative, the order rejecting the application amounts to a decree dismissing the suit within the meaning of s 2 (2), and it is appealable as such, provided the applicant is already a party to the suit in another character, the reason given being that the dismissal negatives the applicant's right to the relief which the original plaintiff had sought in the suit (f). But if the applicant is a stranger, that is, not a party to the suit, the order cannot operate as a decree, a decree being an adjudication of the rights of parties to a suit, and no appeal will lie from the order (g).

Allahabad Cases—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that no appeal lies from an adjudication that a suit (h) or an appeal (i) has abated, whether the abatement is due to the fact that no application was made to bring the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff on the record (j), or the abatement follows on the dismissal of the application made by a person to be brought upon the record as the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff (l), the reason given being that such an adjudication does not amount to a decree. In a recent case where A had obtained an ex parte decree against B, and B had applied to set aside the decree, and thereafter B died, and on B's death his son applied to continue the application, and the application was granted notwithstanding opposition on A's part it was held that the case did not fall either under r 3 or 4 of this Order and that no appeal lay from the order (l). See s 146 above.

Lahore Cases—In a case where a person applied to be brought on the record as the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, and the Court refused the application on the ground that he was not the legal representative and also made a separate order recording that the suit had abated inasmuch as no application by any legal representative had been made it was held by the High Court of Lahore that the order dismissing the application was not appealable under the Code as it was really a matter collateral to the suit. As to the order recording the abatement the Court said it would amount to a decree and be appealable as such if the applicant was already a party to the suit in another character (n). In another case (n) where an appeal was declared to have abated as a whole it was held following a Full Bench ruling of the same High Court (o) that whether the final decision was called an abatement or a dismissal it came within the definition of a decree and was appealable as such the applicants having been parties to the suit.

4. [S 368.] (1) Where one of two or more defendants dies and the right to sue does not survive against the surviving defendant or defendants alone, or a sole defendant or sole surviving defendant dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf, shall cause the legal representative of the deceased defendant to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit.

(2) Any person so made a party may make any defence appropriate to his character as legal representative of the deceased defendant.

(3) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub rule (1) the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant.

Alterations in the rule —

1 Sub rule (2) is new.

2 The words "as against the deceased defendant" in sub rule (3) are new. See notes below. The suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant.

Suit—The word "suit" in this rule includes an appeal and the word "defendant" a respondent see r 11 below.

Limitation—The application under this rule must be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased defendant or respondeat. Imitat on Act 1908 sch I art 177. The alteration in the language of art 177 as it stood in the Limitation Act 1877 art 17 C clearly shows that the word "respondent" in the present article is not confined to a respondent only in first appeal as was held by the High Court of Madras under the old article (p) but that it includes a respondent also in second appeal as was held by the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad (q). Where no application made within the period of limitation—The application to bring the legal representative of the deceased defendant on the record should, as stated above be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased defendant. If no such application is made within the aforesaid period, the suit abates as against the deceased defendant [sub rule (3)] though the plaintiff was ignorant of the death of the deceased (r). After abatement, the only course open to the plaintiff is to make an application under r 9 sub r (2), to have the abatement set aside. Such an application should be made within 60 days from the date of the abatement [Limitation Act 1908, s. 1, art 171] but the Court may entertain the application even after 60 days if sufficient cause is shown (s) [see r 9, sub r 3 and Limitation Act, 1908, s 5]. As to the inherent power of the Court to bring the legal representative of a deceased defendant on the record after abatement, see notes below. It may be stated that where a defendant dies pending a suit, it is open to his legal representative to apply to be brought on the record notwithstanding the plaintiff's omission to implead him (t).

"The suit shall abate"—See notes to r 3, Alterations in the rule, No 2, on p 732 above

The suit shall abate "as against the deceased defendant"—Where one of two or more defendants dies, and the right to sue survives against the surviving defendant or defendants alone, the suit should be proceeded with as against the surviving defendant or defendants. This case has been dealt with in § 2 above. The present rule provides inter alia that where one of two or more defendants dies and the right to sue does not survive against the surviving defendant or defendants alone, the legal representative of the deceased defendant ought to be made a party to the suit. For this purpose an application should be made to the Court, and such application must be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased defendant. Sub rule (3) provides that where no such application is made, the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant. The words 'as against the deceased defendant' are new. In the absence of these words in the corresponding section 368 of the Code of 1852, it was contended in a large number of cases governed by that section that where no application was made to bring the legal representative of a deceased defendant or respondent on the record within the period of limitation, the suit or appeal abated not only as against the deceased defendant or respondent, but as a whole. But this contention was overruled, and the Courts held that a distinction ought to be made between cases in which a suit or appeal could proceed in the absence of the legal representative and those in which it could not. In the former case it was held that the suit or appeal abated only as against the deceased defendant or respondent. In the latter case, that it abated as a whole. Sub r (3) of the present rule makes it clear that where no application is made to bring the legal representative on the record within the time limited by law, the suit or appeal abates primarily as against the deceased defendant or respondent only, and that it does not abate necessarily as a whole. That sub rule gives legislative recognition to the rulings under the Code of 1852. The result is that as under the Code of 1852 so under the present Code, if a case is of such a nature that the suit or appeal can proceed without bringing upon the record the legal representative of the deceased defendant or respondent

O. 22, r. 4. the suit or appeal abates as against the deceased defendant or respondent (u) A suit on a joint and several promissory note against the promissors, is a suit of this nature. But if a case is of such a nature that the suit or appeal cannot proceed in the absence of the legal representative, the suit or appeal will abate as a whole (v) A suit by a partner against his co partners for dissolution of partnership and for accounts is a suit of this nature [see ill (2) under the head "II. Cases in which suit or appeal held to abate as a whole, on p 741 below]

The High Court of Bombay has taken a peculiar view of the matter. To understand exactly the point of view of the Bombay High Court we shall first state the view taken by the High Court of Calcutta in cases where a suit is brought for possession of property by persons claiming to be the joint owners thereof. According to the view taken by the Calcutta Court, where the plaintiffs are joint owners, and a decree is passed for them for possession, and the defendant appeals from the decree joining the joint owners as respondents, and one of the joint owners dies pending the appeal, the appeal abates as a whole, the reason given being that the Court should not be called upon to make two contradictory decrees in the same litigation, which would be the result of allowing the appeal the other joint owners. After the appeal is heard on the merits, the Court may pass such decree as the case may require (x) The view taken by the Bombay High Court has not been taken by any other Court (y)

(2) A lets certain lands to B and C. A then sues B and C for arrears of rent, but the suit is dismissed. A files an appeal from the decree against B and C. C dies pending the appeal. No application is made by A to substitute C's legal representative in C's place within 6 months [now 90 days] from the date of C's death. The appeal does not abate as a whole but against C only. Joy Gobind v. Monmalla (1906) 37 Cal 680, Abdul Ali v. Basdeo Singh (1912) 34 All 604, 17 I C 89, Rai Kashi Nath v. Kailas Singh (1923) 4 Pat 33 69 I C 236 (23) A P 460. [In this case it is clear that A could have sued B alone without joining C as a party defendant. see Contract Act, 1872, s 43.]

11 Cases in which suit or appeal held to abate as a whole.—

(1) A, B and C are joint owners of certain property. The property is sold for arrears of Government revenue and purchased by D. A, B and C sued D to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud and irregularities and a decree is passed in their favour. D files an appeal from the decree against A, B, and C. C dies pending the appeal, but no application is made by D to bring C's legal representative on the record within the period of limitation. The appeal abates not only as against C but as a whole. In this case it is clear that, A, B and C being joint owners, the suit would have been bad if C were not joined as a party to the suit. Further, suppose that the appellate Court heard the appeal in the absence of C's legal representative and it came to the conclusion that the decree of the lower Court should be reversed, the decree could then be reversed only as to A and B but it could not be reversed as to C, for C's representative is not on the record. This conclusion is preposterous, for the case is one in which the decree, if it is set aside, must be set aside as to the sale of the entire estate. Under no circumstances could it be reversed as to the unascertained shares of some joint holders [that is, A and B], and confirmed as to the unascertained share of other joint holders [that is, in this case, C]. The case therefore is one in which the appeal could not proceed in the absence of C's legal representative. The appeal therefore must abate as a whole. Dharanjit v. Chandeshwar (1907) 11 Cal W N 304, Kali Dayal v. Jagendra Nath (1919) 24 C W N 44, 54 I C 822, Brjraj Gopal v. Umesh Chandra (1901) 6 C W N 196, Hudu v. Lala (1915) Punj Rec no 41 p 197, 21 I C 951, Jamna v. Sarjit (1919) Punj Rec no 67, p 160, 52 I C 310. According to the Bombay rulings, the appeal abates as against C only, and it should be heard on the merits against A and B. The Court may after hearing the appeal on the merits pass such a decree as the case may require. Shankarblai v. Motilal (1923) 49 Bom 118, 85 I C 197, (25) A B 122, Chandarsang v. Khinabhai (1897) 22 Bom 718.

(2) A sues his partners B, C, D and F for dissolution and for accounts of the partnership. A decree is passed in the suit by which it is ordered that a sum of Rs 9,000 should be contributed by A, B and C, and that out of that sum Rs 1,740 should be paid to D and the rest to F. A appeals from the decree making B, C, D and F party respondents. B and C also appeal from the decree making A, D and F party respondents. Pending the appeal D dies. No application is made by the appellants in either appeal to bring on the record the legal representative of D within the period of limitation. The appeal abates as a whole, for it is not a case in which the appeals could proceed in the absence of the legal representative of D, the suit being one for partnership accounts. Raj Chunder v. Gunga Das (1904) 31 Cal 487, 31 I A 71, Moti Lal v. Ram Narain (1917) 39 All 551, 40 I C 1006, Jamnadas v. Sorabji (1891) 16 Bom. 27.

O. 22, r. 4.

Inherent power to add legal representative as a party after abatement.—Notwithstanding the abatement of a suit, the Court has the power, in a proper case, to bring on the record the representative of a deceased defendant under s 101 and O 1 r 10. A sues B and C for partition of joint family property. A preliminary decree is passed and a commissioner is appointed to make a partition according to the rights declared in the decree. B then dies, but no application is made to bring his legal representative on the record within the period of limitation. Though the suit abates as regards B, the Court may add B's representative as a defendant (a). But no such order can be made if no preliminary decree has been passed (a).

Legal representative of deceased defendant—See s 2 (11) and notes to s 3. Legal representative of deceased plaintiff on p 734 above.

Two or more legal representatives—It is sufficient for the plaintiff in a suit if defendant dies to bring one of the heirs on the record as his legal representative who will then represent the estate of the deceased for the purpose of the suit. It is for the other heirs to come in if they wish to be represented in the suit (b). The same rule applies when a respondent dies pending an appeal leaving two or more heirs (c).

Indian Succession Act and legal representative—In the case of a person subject to the Indian Succession Act, his legal representatives within the meaning of s 2 (11) of the Code are his executors or administrators and not his heirs (d).

Legal representative already on record in another character—See notes under the same head to r 3, on p 735 above.

Effect of decree against legal representative—Where a defendant in a suit dies, and the plaintiff under this rule, brings a person on the record whom he alleges to be the legal representative of the deceased defendant such person sufficiently represents the estate of the deceased for the purposes of the suit, and, in the absence of fraud or collusion the decree passed in the suit as well as the sale in execution thereof will bind the estate of the deceased (e).

Wrong person as legal representative—An application to bring upon the record as legal representative of a deceased defendant a person who is not in fact such representative will be of no avail to save the running of limitation in favour of the person who really is the legal representative (f).

What pleas may be taken by a legal representative.—See sub r (2) and notes under the same head to r 3, on p 736 above.

Rehearing of suit or appeal—A plaintiff whose suit is heard and dismissed is not entitled to a rehearing of the suit on the ground that one of the defendants had died previous to the hearing of the suit and that the suit was heard without bringing the legal representative of the deceased defendant on the record. The right to have the suit re O. 22, heard is the right of the legal representative [which he would not care to exercise, the suit being dismissed], and not the right of the unsuccessful plaintiff. The same rule applies to appeals (g).

Pro forma defendant—Omission to bring on record the legal representative of a defendant against whom no relief is claimed does not cause the suit to abate (h).

Death of defendant after preliminary and before final decree—This rule applies where a defendant dies after the preliminary and before the final decree in a suit for dissolution of partnership and for accounts or a suit on a mortgage (i). See notes to r. 3, "Death of plaintiff after preliminary and before final decree" on p. 736 above.

Decree for or against a dead person—A decree against a person who was dead at the date of the institution of the suit is a nullity (j). Similarly a decree passed against a defendant who died pending the suit without bringing his legal representative on the record, is a nullity and it cannot be executed against the legal representative (k). A decree passed against a respondent in ignorance of the fact of his death is a nullity (l). A decree in a suit for pre-emption passed against the defendants respondents in ignorance of the death of one of them and without bringing his legal representative on the record, is a nullity, as the right to sue in such a case does not survive against the surviving defendants alone (m). Conversely it has been held that a decree passed in a suit for pre-emption in favour of three plaintiffs who jointly claimed the right of pre-emption, in ignorance of the death of one of them, and without bringing his legal representative on the record, is a nullity (n). But it has been held that a decree passed by the Privy Council against the respondents in ignorance of the death of one of them is not a nullity, though the legal representative of the deceased was not brought on the record, the decree being an order of the sovereign (o).

§ 41, r. 20, and abatement.—O 41, r. 20, does not override the provisions of O 22 of the Code (p).

Sub rule (2): Defence appropriate to his character as legal representative—See notes to r. 3, "What pleas may be taken by a legal representative," on p. 736 above.

§ 1, r. 8, and abatement—See notes on p. 386 above.

Appellate Court and abatement of suit—An appellate Court has no power under this rule to declare that a suit, as distinct from an appeal, has abated in a case in which there has been a decree already passed before the death in consequence of which the suit is alleged to have abated took place (q). See r. 11 below.

Execution proceedings—This rule does not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree. See r. 12 below.

O. 22, r. 4, 5 Appeal—It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that an adjudication that an appeal has abated as a whole amounts to a decree and is appealable as such (r) See notes to m 3, "Appeal" on p 737 above.

5 [S 367] Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or a deceased defendant, such question shall be determined by the Court.

Determination of question as to legal representative

Alterations in the rule:—

- 1 The words "where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative," have been substituted for the words "if any dispute arises as to who is the legal representative." The object is to make it clear that this rule applies not only where two or more persons claim to be the legal representatives of a deceased party but where there is only one claimant and his representative character is denied. This is in accordance with the interpretation put upon the words of the old section in the undermentioned cases (s)
- 2 Under the old section where a question arose as to whether any person was or was not the legal representative of a deceased party, the Court had the power either to stay the suit until the question was determined in another suit, or to determine the question itself. Under the present rule the Court is bound to determine the question itself (t)
- 3 It is provided by rules 3 and 4 of this Order that once the Court determines who the legal representative is, and the legal representative is brought on the record under those rules, "the Court shall proceed with the suit." No objection therefore as to the representative character of such person can be entertained after he is brought on the record, though the hearing of the suit has not commenced. Under the old section the objection could be taken "at or before the first hearing of the suit." But the words "at or before the first hearing" have been omitted in the present rule, the object being that the objection as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative of a deceased party should be taken before such person is made a party under rules 3 and 4 above (u). But if a person alleging himself to be a legal representative is brought on the record as such without notice to the other side, the other side is entitled to raise the objection at the hearing (v)

"Legal representative"—See s 2, cl (11), and notes to m 3, "Legal representative of deceased plaintiff" on p 734 above

"Shall be determined."—If the Court of first instance fails to determine the question as to who is the legal representative, it is necessary for the appellate Court to determine it (w)

Effect of order under this rule—This rule provides a summary procedure for appointing a person to be the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff for the purpose of prosecuting the suit. Hence an order admitting a person to be the legal representative for the purpose of prosecuting the suit does not operate as a final determination of the representative character of such person in other words it does not operate as res judicata (x). This rule it is conceived must be read as if it contained the words for the purposes of rules 3 and 4 after the word shall. Compare s 47, sub s (3).

Power of Court to correct its order.—If an ex parte order is made under this rule and it is found to be a mistaken order the Court has the power to correct it (y).

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order under this rule (z). But a party aggrieved by the order may object to the order in an appeal from the decree (s 10) provided he was a party to the decree (a). But the order will not be set aside unless it is shown that it has affected the decision of the case (b). See notes to r 3 Appeal, on p 737 above.

6. [New] Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing rules, whether the cause of action survives or not, there shall be no abatement by reason of the death of either party between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncing of the judgment, but judgment may in such case be pronounced notwithstanding the death and shall have the same force and effect as if it had been pronounced before the death took place.

No abatement by reason of death after hearing

No abatement by reason of death after hearing—This rule is new. It gives effect to the decisions in the unmentioned cases (c). See notes to s 47, case (4) p 129 above.

In a mortgage suit the judgment referred to in this rule is the judgment supporting the final decree and not the judgment supporting the preliminary decree and the hearing referred to in the rule is the hearing of issues upon which judgment is to be delivered determining the plaintiff's right to a final decree. The result is that this rule does not apply where a party to a mortgage suit dies before the application for a final decree is made and heard (d). See notes to r 3. Death of plaintiff after preliminary and before final decree on p 736 above and notes to r 4. Death of defendant after preliminary and before final decree on p 743 above.

7. [S 369.] (1) The marriage of a female plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate, but the suit may notwithstanding be proceeded with to judgment, and, where the decree is against a female defendant, it may be executed against her alone.

8. [S. 370.] (1) The insolvency of a plaintiff in any suit which the assignee or receiver might maintain for the benefit of his creditors, shall not cause the suit to abate, unless such assignee or receiver declines to continue the suit or (unless for any special reason the Court otherwise directs) to give security for the costs thereof within such time as the Court may direct

When plaintiff's insolvency bars suit

(2) Where the assignee or receiver neglects or refuses to continue the suit and to give such security within the time so ordered, the defendant may apply for the dismissal of the suit on the ground of the plaintiff's insolvency, and the Court may make an order dismissing the suit and awarding to the defendant the costs which he has incurred in defending the same to be proved as a debt against the plaintiff's estate

Procedure where assignee fails to continue suit or give security

Insolvency of plaintiff—This rule lays down the procedure to be followed when a plaintiff becomes insolvent

Insolvency of defendant.—As to the case of the insolvency of a defendant in a presidency town it is now provided by sec. 18 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909 that where a defendant to a suit has been adjudged an insolvent the Court may, at any time after the making of the order of adjudication stay any suit or other proceeding pending against the insolvent before any Judge or Judges of the Court or in any other Court subject to the superintendence of the Court. It is further provided by the same section that any Court in which proceedings are pending against a debtor may on proof that an order of adjudication has been made against him under the Act either stay the proceedings or allow them to continue on such terms as it may think just. As to cases governed by the Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 see sec. 29. See also notes to r. 10 (c) w. Insolvency of defendant joiner of Official Assignee

"Insolvency.—This rule does not apply to a case where there has been an application to declare the plaintiff an insolvent and a vesting order has been made but the proceedings are subsequently annulled, and the party is not declared an insolvent. Therefore in such a case where a suit has been dismissed for the non appearance of the plaintiff or the Official Assignee on the date fixed for the hearing, it is O 9, r 9, that applies (e)

Limitation—There is no limitation provided for the Official Assignee to appear and apply for substitution. Again, where the plaintiff's name is struck off and the Official Assignee is substituted for the insolvent plaintiff, and the adjudication is thereafter annulled, there is no limitation for the plaintiff to appear and apply for the restoration of his name on the record (f)

Insolvency of pauper applicant.—In the case of a pauper who has applied for leave to sue as a pauper, the present rule can be applied only after leave to sue is granted, but not before (g)

Costs payable by plaintiff prior to his insolvency—The general principle is "that a person who comes in by representation, whether it be an assignee in bankruptcy or as an executor or administrator of an original plaintiff, where costs are due by the person whom he represents, the suit cannot be carried on except upon the costs of the original suit being paid. It has accordingly been held that where a plaintiff, who has been ordered to pay the costs of a proceeding in the suit, becomes bankrupt, and the suit is revived by his assignee, the Court will stay proceedings until payment of the costs which the plaintiff has been ordered to pay (h)

Costs of successful defendant.—Where a suit is continued by the assignee in bankruptcy, and the defendant obtains judgment with costs, the defendant is entitled to be paid all his costs in full, and not merely the costs as from the date of insolvency with liberty to prove for the costs previously incurred (i)

Practice.—As to the form of the order under this rule, see the undermentioned case (j)

Execution proceedings—This rule does not apply to proceedings in execution. See r 12 below

Cause of action arising after insolvency.—If, an undischarged insolvent, sues B for brokerage earned by him subsequent to his adjudication, B applies for security for costs. If the Official Assignee has not intervened, no order should be made for security for costs. Even if he has intervened, no order should be made if the amount of the claim exceeds the plaintiff's liability (k)

9. [Ss 371, 372A] (1) Where a suit abates or is dismissed under this Order, no fresh suit shall be brought on the same cause of action.

Effect of abatement or dismissal

(2) The plaintiff or the person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or the assignee or the receiver in the case of an insolvent plaintiff may apply for an order to set aside the abatement or dismissal; and if it is

(3) The provisions of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, shall apply to applications under sub-rule (2).

Sub rule (1): No fresh suit on the same cause of action—This rule prohibits a fresh suit on the same cause of action. As to the meaning of "Cause of action," see notes to s. 20, 'Cause of action,' p. 90 above.

A, a member of a joint Hindu family, sues B for redemption of a mortgage of ancestral property executed by A to B. A then dies. A's heirs are not brought on the record, and the suit abates. Subsequently A's son and grandsons institute another suit against B for redemption of the same mortgage. There is no indication that A's suit was brought by him in a representative capacity, that is, as representing the joint family. The second suit is not barred (1).

Sub-rule (2): Who may apply under this rule—The following persons may apply under sub-r (2), namely, (1) the plaintiff, where a suit has abated under r. 4 (3) (m), (2) the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, where a suit has abated under r. 3 (2), (3) the assignee of an insolvent plaintiff, where a suit is dismissed under r. 8 (2).

Limitation—An application under this rule for an order to set aside an abatement must be made within 60 days from the date of the abatement [Limitation Act 1908, sch. I, art. 77]. Similarly an application for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit must be made within 60 days from the date of the order of dismissal [Ib., Art. 172]. If no application is made within 60 days, the Court has the power under s. 5 of the Limitation Act to admit the application after the expiry of that period if the applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not making the application within 60 days. See sub-r (3).

Sub rule (2) "Sufficient cause"—An application to bring upon the record the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff must be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased [Limitation Act, 1908, sch. I, art. 176]. An application to bring upon the record the legal representative of a deceased defendant must also be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased [Ib., Art. 177]. If no application is made within the prescribed period, the suit abates in the case of a deceased plaintiff under r. 3 (2), and in the case of a deceased defendant under r. 4 (3). But the plaintiff or the person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff as the case may be, may apply under r. 9 (2) for an order to set aside the abatement. The application to set aside the abatement must be made within 60 days from the date of the abatement. If no application is made within 60 days, the Court may under s. 5 of the Limitation Act admit the application if the applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not making the application within 60 days. See sub-r (3).

An abatement ought not to be set aside as a matter of course or lightly. The reason is that when a suit abates the setting aside of the abatement deprives the party in whose favour the abatement operates of a valuable right. Under sub r (2), the applicant has to satisfy the Court that he was prevented by some sufficient cause from making the application to bring the legal representative of the deceased upon the record within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased. Under sub r (3) the applicant has to satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for not making the application to set aside the abatement within 60 days from the date of abatement (n). The two sub rules are distinct. In dealing with an application under sub r (2) the Court has to decide whether there was sufficient cause for not bringing the legal representative of the deceased upon the record within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased independently of sub r (3) (o).

Ignorance of the death of the deceased (p) or of the whereabouts of the legal representatives of the deceased (q) may be a sufficient cause for excusing the delay unless the ignorance was due to negligence. Where the defendants appealed from a decree passed against them and one of the defendants died pending the appeal and the legal representative of the deceased was under the impression that the co-defendants were prosecuting the appeal and challenging the validity of the entire decree it was held that it was a sufficient cause for excusing the delay in making the application to bring him on the record in place of the deceased (r).

Whether formal order of abatement necessary before abatement can be set aside —The words in s 371 of the Code of 1882 were "may apply for an order to set aside the order for abatement". The words "set aside the abatement" have now been substituted for the words "set aside the order for abatement". The reason is that under the present Code a suit or an appeal abates automatically when no application is made within the prescribed time to bring upon the record the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or appellant. It is not necessary to make an order that the suit shall abate. Note the words "shall abate" in r 3 (2) and r 4 (3) above. This is the view taken by the High Court of Lahore (s) and in one case by the High Court of Allahabad (t). In a later case however the High Court of Allahabad held that the abatement of a suit or appeal does not take place automatically but it is necessary that there should be a formal order of the Court declaring the suit or appeal to have abated and that unless there is such an order no application can be entertained under sub r (2) to set aside the abatement (u). In a still later case however it was assumed by the same High Court that the abatement took place automatically (v). See notes to s 3. Also see notes in the rule. See also on p 732 above.

Substitution without setting aside abatement —The Patna High Court has held that where a sole defendant dies and the suit has abated no order can be made for substituting his legal representative in his place until the abatement has been set aside under this rule (w). The Bombay High Court would treat the omission to set aside the abatement as merely a formal defect (x).

rr. 9, 10.

Minor and abatement.—Where an application on behalf of a minor to be brought on the record in place of his deceased father who was the plaintiff in the suit was dismissed under r 3 above as being time barred, and the minor then made a second application to be brought on the record and that application was also dismissed, it was held that the lower Court should have in the circumstances of the case treated the second application as one under r 11 to set aside the abatement and that it should have in the circumstances of the case set aside the abatement (x)

Remand.—When the High Court in second appeal declares the first appeal to have abated it has no power to set aside the abatement, but should remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for disposal under this rule (y)

Cause of action in revived suit.—Where an abatement is set aside under this rule, the suit is revived. No fresh cause of action can be imported into the revived suit, the reason being that the proceedings in the revived suit are a continuation of the proceedings in the original suit (z)

Appeal.—An appeal lies under the Code from an order refusing to set aside the abatement or dismissal of a suit, O 43, r 1 (k). But no appeal lies under the Code from an order setting aside an abatement. But it has been held that if the order setting aside the abatement is passed without jurisdiction and is really not one under r 9, it is appealable or at least open to revision (a)

Letters Patent Appeal.—The High Court of Allahabad has held that an appeal lies under cl 10 of the Letters Patent of that Court (corresponding with cl 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Calcutta, from an order of a single judge of the High Court refusing to set aside the abatement of an appeal. The decision proceeds upon two grounds, namely, (1) that an order rejecting the application to set aside an abatement would, if unappealable, be a final order determining once and for all the rights of parties, and (2) that an appeal was allowed by the Code to the High Court from an order of a District Judge refusing to set aside an abatement of a suit, and it would be strange, if there was permission to appeal, as undoubtedly there was, from the lower appellate Court to the High Court, that there should not also be the right of appeal not merely in a suit but when the question arose in a Court of appeal (b)

The High Court of Calcutta has held that an order setting aside the abatement of a suit is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent, and is appealable as such, the reason given being that when a suit has abated, the setting aside of the abatement deprives the party in whose favour the abatement operates of a valuable right (c)

10. [S. 372.] (1) In other cases of an assignment, creation or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit, the suit may, by leave of the Court, be continued by or against the person to or upon whom such interest has come or devolved.

(2) The attachment of a decree pending an appeal there- O. 22, from shall be deemed to be an interest entitling the person who procured such attachment to the benefit of sub-rule (1).

Alterations in the rule.—(1) The words 'either in addition to or in substitution for the person from whom it has passed, ' which occurred in s. 372 of the Code of 1882 after the words 'interest has come or devolved,' have been omitted. It would seem to follow from some of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the undermentioned case (d), that the effect of the omission of those words was that a transferee pendente lite cannot under this Code be added as a party, but that he may be substituted for his transferor. It is not clear whether their Lordships intended to go that length. If they did, a difficulty would arise in every case where a mortgagee pendente lite applied to be joined as a party.

(2) Sub rule (2) is new. See notes below under the heading 'Sub rule (2)'

Other cases of assignment, creation or devolution of interest.—It will be observed that the preceding rules deal with certain specified cases of assignment, creation and devolution of interest. Rule 8 deals with the case of assignment on the insolvency of a plaintiff, rule 7 with the case of creation of an interest in a husband on marriage, and rules 2, 3 and 4 with the case of devolution of interest on the death of a party to a suit. The present rule provides for cases of assignment, creation and devolution of interest other than those mentioned above (e).

Assignment of interest.—This includes a sale, or a mortgage, or a lease (f) of the property in suit.

Devolution of interest—The successor to the head of a mutt (g) or to the trustee of a temple (h) is entitled to continue or defend a suit or appeal under this rule. Where during the pendency of a suit instituted by the manager of an encumbered estate, the estate is released from management and restored to the owners, it is open to the owners to apply to be made plaintiffs in place of the manager under this rule (i). See ill (7) on p. 753.

"Interest."—The word 'interest' in this rule means interest in the property the subject matter of the suit (j).

2. A sues the firm of B C to recover Rs. 5,000. Pending the suit the firm of B C transfers all its assets and liabilities to the firm of X Y. Thereupon A applies to the Court under this rule to have the firm of X Y joined as a party defendant. The firm of X Y should not be joined as a party, for the assignment cannot be said in any sense to be an assignment of the defendant's interest in the subject matter of the suit. Harish Chandra v Chandpore Co, Ltd (1903) 30 Cal 961. O. 22, r. 10. Insolvency of defendant : Joinder of Official Assignee—This section applies to the devolution of an interest by reason of an adjudication in insolvency and a vesting order thereunder (L)

(a) A sues B for recovery of possession of certain immovable property. The defence is that B is the full owner of the property. Pending the suit, B is adjudged an insolvent and his property vests in the Official Assignee. This is a case in which the Court may add the Official Assignee as a party defendant under this rule. The reason is that the property which forms the subject matter of the suit is part of the property which has passed to the Official Assignee under the vesting order. See Punithavelu v Bhaskyam (1902) 25 Mad 406. If the Official Assignee refuses to defend the suit, the insolvent is not entitled to defend the suit independently of the Official Assignee. Tribhovandas v Abdulally (1914) 39 Bom 568, 28 I C 506. As to the old law on the subject see the undermentioned case (I)

(b) A sues B to recover Rs 5,000. Pending the suit B is adjudged an insolvent, and his property vests in the Official Assignee under a vesting order made by the Insolvency Court. The Official Assignee should not be added as a party defendant, for though the vesting order has the effect of an assignment of the estate of the insolvent to the Official Assignee it could not be said, when an action purely in personam (as distinguished from an action relating to the insolvent's property) is brought against the insolvent that any part of the subject matter of the suit has been assigned to the Official Assignee. See Miller v Budh Sing (1891) 18 Cal 43, Chandmull v Ranee Soondery (1895) 22 Cal 259, Punithavelu v Bhaskyam (1902) 25 Mad 406, 421. See notes above, "Interest"

Note—It will be noted that the above illustrations are confined to the case of an insolvent defendant. The reason is that the case of an insolvent plaintiff is dealt with in r 8, and the present rule deals with cases of assignment other than those specified in the preceding rules.

"During the pendency of a suit."—These words mean 'before a final decree or order has been passed or made in the suit' [see the marginal note to the rule]. Hence the provisions of this rule apply if the assignment, creation or devolution of interest takes place before a final decree or order is passed or made in the suit. In the case of an appeal, the provisions of this rule apply if the assignment, etc., takes place before a final decree or order is passed or made in the appeal [see r 11 below]. Though a suit may be compromised and the terms of the compromise filed in Court, the suit will be deemed to be pending until a decree is passed in terms of the compromise. Until the decree is passed, a transferee pendente lite is entitled to apply under this rule to be joined as a party (m). If he is joined as a party, he is entitled to object to a decree being passed in terms of the compromise arrived at between his transferor and the opposite party (n).

3. The assignment of the interest of a mortgagee in a suit for sale of the mortgaged property after a preliminary decree for sale, but before the passing of the final decree, is within this rule Chunni Lal v Abdul Ali Khan (1901) 23 All 331

4. In a suit by A against B to recover certain immoveable property a decree is passed for A. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal, A sells the property to C. C may be made a party to the appeal under this rule Rajaram Bhagiat v Jibai (1885) 11 Bom 151, *Pandit Gocul Chand v. 5. A sues B to recover Rs 5,000, and a decree is passed for him. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal, A assigns the decree to C. C may be made a party to the appeal under this rule. Durga Prasad, in the matter of (1900) 22 All 231

6. A sues B for redemption of a mortgage. A preliminary decree for redemption is passed, and a time is fixed within which the mortgage money is to be paid by A into Court. The money is not paid by A within the time fixed by the Court, nor is any application made by B under O 34, r 8 (4), for a decree for sale. A then sells the mortgaged property to C. This amounts to an assignment pending the suit so as to entitle C to be brought on the record as a party under this rule Muhammad v Jarao (1915) 37 All 226 27 I C 771

7. A sues B for possession of certain land and mesne profits. Pending the suit B lets the lands to C and delivers possession to him. A decree is then passed for A for possession and mesne profits. After the decree C at B's request delivers possession of the land to A. A then applies in execution proceedings to join C as a party to the suit so as to compel C to account for profits which he had received from the land. C should not be joined as a party, for it cannot be said that B's liability for mesne profits has devolved from him to C within the meaning of this rule Manindra v Ram Lal (1922) 49 I A 220, 1 Pat 581

Application under this rule when to be made.—This rule only governs an application to continue a suit. An application by a transferee of the interest of a party made after the termination of a suit is not within this rule (o). But where an appeal is preferred from the decree, an application under this rule can be made to the appellate Court even though the devolution of interest occurred when the case was pending in the trial Court (p).

Illustration

A sues B to establish his right to certain property. Pending the suit B mortgages the property to C. A decree is then passed in favour of A. B does not appeal from the decree. C, being desirous of appealing from the decree, applies to be made a party to the suit. The suit having terminated, C should not be joined as a party to the suit. He may, however, appeal from the decree under s 146 as a person claiming under B within the meaning of that section. Sitaramaswami v Lakshmi (1918) 41 Mad 510 48 I C 840

Laches—An applicant under this rule is not entitled to leave to be joined as a party as a matter of right. The Court has a discretion in the matter, and it may refuse leave on the ground of laches or delay (q).

Sub-rule (2)—A obtains a decree against B. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal C, who holds a decree against A, attaches the decree obtained by A against B. C may be made a party under this rule. See O 21, r 53.

O. 22, 10, 11. No new suit—It is clear from the terms of this rule that when a party is brought on the record under this rule, there is, as regards him, no new suit at all. He is brought on the record as a party to a suit that has already been instituted, and that suit is continued by or against him. His substitution as a party does not initiate, as regards him, a new proceeding (r).

Trial Court can bring assignee on record pending Appeal—The Court of first instance has jurisdiction to bring on record the assignee of a party to the suit, though there may be an appeal pending in the appellate Court from an interlocutory order made by the Court of first instance (s).

Transfer of decree—This rule does not apply to transfers of decrees. O 21, r 16, applies to such transfers (t).

Doctrine of lis pendens—In this connection may be noted the provisions of s 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which runs as follows: "During the active prosecution of a contentious suit or proceeding in which any right to any immovable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding, so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein, except under the authority of the Court, and on such terms as it may impose."

Limitation—The right to apply under this rule accrues from day to day, and is not therefore barred by lapse of time. An application therefore to be added or substituted as a party under this rule may be made at any time (u).

As to the effect of adding or substituting a new plaintiff or defendant, it is now provided by s 22 of the Limitation Act, 1908, that in the case of substitution or addition of any party owing to an assignment or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit, the suit should, as regards such party, be deemed to have been instituted when it was commenced.

Appeal—Under the Code of 1882 an appeal was allowed from an order giving leave to be joined as a party, but none from an order refusing such leave (v). Under the present Code an appeal lies from an order giving or refusing to give leave [O 43, r 1, cl (1)]. The High Court of Madras has held that an order purporting to be passed under this rule is appealable though on the facts the order should not have been passed under this rule (w).

Letters Patent Appeal—An order refusing leave to be joined as a party is a judgment "within the meaning of cl III of the Letters Patent, and is appealable as such (x).

11. [S. 582, 1st para] In the application of this Order to appeals, so far as may be, the word "plaintiff" shall be held to include an appellant, the word "defendant" a respondent, and the word "suit" an appeal.

12. [New.] Nothing in rules 3, 4 and 8 shall apply to proceedings in execution of a decree or order

Application of Order to proceedings—

Execution proceedings—Rules 3 and 4 relate to the death of a party pending a suit or appeal. Rule 8 relates to the insolvency of a plaintiff pending a suit, and the insolvency of an appellant pending an appeal. The present rule provides that nothing in rules 3, 4 and 8 shall apply to proceedings in execution of a decree. It sets at rest the conflict on the question whether the provisions relating to the abatement of suits and appeals apply to proceedings in execution.

Illustrations

(1) A sues B. The suit is dismissed. After the dismissal A dies leaving a will of which C is the executor. C may appeal from the decree without applying under r 8 to be substituted for A. The reason is that A having died after the termination of the suit, r 3 does not apply. see Ramanada v Minatchi (1881) 3 Mad 236

(2) A sues B, and obtains a decree against him. A then applies for execution of the decree against B. B dies during the pendency of the execution proceedings. Rule 4 does not apply. A should proceed under s 52 of the Code.

(3) A sues B, and obtains a decree against him. A then applies for execution of the decree against B, and an order is made in execution proceedings. B appeals from the order. Pending the appeal B dies. The appeal being one from an order in execution proceedings, r 4 does not apply, and there can be no abatement of the appeal. Mir Khan v. Sharfu (1923) 5 Lah L J 163, 74 I C 577, (23) A L 500

(4) A obtains a decree against B. After the decree B is adjudicated an insolvent. A then applies for execution of the decree against the Official Assignee. A should proceed under O 21, r 22.

Mesne profits—A obtains a decree against B for possession and mesne profits. B dies pending the inquiry into mesne profits. Under the Code of 1882 an inquiry as to mesne profits was a proceeding in execution and hence there could be no abatement of the proceeding under that Code. Kedarnath v Anant Prasad (1925) 52 I A 188, 4 Pat 507, 88 I C 492, (25) A PC 117. Under the present Code an inquiry as to mesne profits is an inquiry pending the suit, hence r 4 applies and B's legal representative should be brought on the record. See notes to O 20, r 12, 'Inquiry as to mesne profits' no longer a proceeding in execution, on p 576 above.

ORDER XXIII.

Withdrawal and Adjustment of Suits.

1. [S. 373.] (1) At any time after the institution of a suit the plaintiff may, as against all or any of the defendants, withdraw his suit or abandon part of his claim.

Withdrawal of suit or abandonment of part of claim

23, r. 1

(2) Where the Court is satisfied—

- (a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or
- (b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim, it may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit or abandon such part of a claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject matter of such suit or such part of a claim

(3) Where the plaintiff withdraws from a suit, or abandons part of a claim, without the permission referred to in sub rule (2), he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject matter or such part of the claim

(4) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to authorize the Court to permit one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the others

Appeal—This rule applies to appeals see s 107 Hence an appellate Court may allow an appeal to be withdrawn (y) and the High Court may allow a second appeal to be withdrawn (z) See O 41 r 22 (4) and notes thereto

Sub rule (1) * Withdrawal "of" Suit

Distinction between sub-rule (1) and sub rule (2)—Sub rule (1) is new It does not create any new right It merely affirms the right of a plaintiff to withdraw a suit in whole or in part against all or any of the defendants and is added here to make the rule a complete enunciation of the law relating to the withdrawal of and from suits Sub r (1) contemplates a withdrawal of the suit sub r (2) a withdrawal from the suit If a party desires to withdraw from the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit he must apply to the Court under sub r (2) to permit him so to withdraw If he does not desire to have that liberty, then he can withdraw the suit of his own motion under sub r (1) and no order of the Court is necessary (a)

Withdrawal "of" suit by plaintiff—Where a suit is one for partition, and pending the suit the parties come to a compromise the plaintiff is not at liberty to withdraw the suit under sub rule (1) and the defendants are entitled to a decree in terms of the compromise under O 23 r 3 (b)

Withdrawal "of" suit by plaintiff appellant—Where in a suit for partition or in a suit by a plaintiff against several defendants the plaintiff and some of the defendants enter into a compromise whereby a concession is given to those defendants, and a decree is then entered in the suit based in part on the compromise as to the rest in invitum and the plaintiff appeals from the decree and pending the appeal he withdraws the suit and the withdrawal is objected to by the defendants with whom the compromise was entered into, it is not open to the plaintiff to annul the concession by withdrawing the suit in the appellate Court. The reason is that the rights actually vested by the decree of the first Court cannot afterwards be annulled by the plaintiff by withdrawing of his own free will and without permission of the Court. If the plaintiff withdraws in such a case, the proper course is for the appellate Court to dismiss the appeal and the decree of the first Court will then stand as a subsisting decree (c).

Withdrawal "of" suit by Plaintiff respondent—There is no provision of law allowing a plaintiff respondent in an appeal to withdraw as of right his suit as against the appellant. It is discretionary with the appellate Court to allow such a withdrawal and the appellate Court will not allow such a withdrawal if the result will be to prejudice the appellant and other respondents who have not appealed. A sues B and C. The claim against B is to establish his right to a channel and against C to prevent interference by him in the use of the channel. A decree is passed against both the defendants. C does not appeal from the decree. B appeals from the decree and joins C as a party respondent in the appeal. At the hearing of the appeal A claims that he is entitled as of right to withdraw the suit as against P and to content himself with the decree against C, and applies that he may be allowed to withdraw the suit as against B. B opposes the application on the ground that if the decree against C were allowed to stand he would be considerably prejudiced. Held upon the above facts that A, the plaintiff respondent should not be allowed to withdraw the suit as against B the defendant appellant, and the proper course is to hear the appeal on the merits (d).

Withdrawal by decree holder "of" application for execution—Though a decree holder who has applied for execution of his decree may not be entitled by virtue of the provisions of O 23 r 4 to withdraw his application under sub r (1) of this rule he is entitled to apply to the Court that his application may be dismissed as he does not want to proceed with it (d2).

Withdrawal "of" application for withdrawal of suit—Where an application for withdrawal of a suit has not been finally disposed of it is open to the Court in a proper case to allow the plaintiff to withdraw the application for withdrawal of the suit and to proceed with the trial (e).

Sub-rules (2) and (3) Withdrawal "from" Suit

Scope of sub rule (2)—Sub r (2) allows the Court in the cases specified therein to grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in which case the bar against the fresh suit which is otherwise imposed on a plaintiff who abandons his first suit is removed (f).

"Formal defect"—Sub r (2) provides that where the Court is satisfied that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect or that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject matter of suit the Court may on such terms as it thinks fit grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject matter of such suit. A misjoinder of parties or of causes of action is a formal defect within the meaning of this rule (g). Similarly an erroneous valuation of the subject matter of a 23, r. 1. suit is a formal defect, and leave may be granted to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit (h). But leave should not be granted where the suit is deliberately undervalued to save Court fees and to bring it in a Court of a lower grade (i). Leave to withdraw may also be granted where a material document is not properly stamped (j), or reentered (l) for these are in the nature of formal defects. Where a plaintiff institutes two suits for rent, and then applies for leave to withdraw the suits with liberty to file a fresh suit consolidating the two claims to avoid the danger of the second suit being held barred under the provisions of O 2, r 2, the case is one of a formal defect, and leave may be granted under sub r (2) (l). The institution of a suit in a Court which has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit is a formal defect, or at least a defect analogous to a formal defect so as to bring the case under sub r (2) (b). In such a case however, the Court should not act under this rule, but return the plaint under O 7 r 10 to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court (m). But O 7, r 10, does not apply to Chartered High Courts. In the case, therefore, of a Chartered High Court, the Court may, it seems, act under this rule

"Other sufficient grounds" —Sec 97 of the Code of 1859 ran as follows —

"If the plaintiff at any time before final judgment satisfies the Court that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the same matter, it shall be competent to the Court to grant such permission on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it may deem proper."

It is to be noted that sec 97 of the Code of 1859 did not contain the words "some formal defect" which occur in the present Code. In Watson v Collector of Rayshaye (n) the plaintiff sued the defendant to set aside an auction sale of a putnee Taluk for arrears of rent. A preliminary issue was framed whether the plaintiff was in a position to sue. A commission was issued for the examination of witnesses but it was returned unexecuted as the witnesses had not been presented for examination. Upon this the Court finding no excuse for the plaintiff's neglect dismissed the suit for want of evidence, but with a reservation that the order made was not to be a bar to the plaintiff from proceeding as if the action had not been brought. The plaintiff then brought a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. The High Court of Bengal held that the second suit was barred as res judicata under s 2 of the Code of 1859. This decision was affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council. In the course of the judgment their Lordships of the Privy Council, referring apparently to sec 97 of the Code of 1859, said as follows:—

"There is a proceeding in those Courts (Courts of India) called a non suit which operates as a dismissal of the suit without barring the right of the party to litigate the matter in a fresh suit. But that seems to be limited to cases of misjoinder either of parties or matters in contest in the suit, to cases in which a material document has been rejected, because it has not borne a proper stamp, and to cases in which there has been an erroneous valuation of the subject of the suit. In all those cases the suit fails by reason of some point of form, but their Lordships are aware of no case in which upon an issue joined, and the party having failed to produce the evidence which he was bound to produce in support of that issue, liberty has been given to him to bring a second suit except in the particular instance that is now before them."

The passage cited above indicates their Lordships' view of the meaning of the words "sufficient grounds" in sec 9th of the Code of 1879. This decision was followed by the High Court of Bengal in Madan Ram v I rail (o) where it was held that a plaintiff cannot be permitted to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit after issues have been joined and he has failed to produce the evidence to support his claim. Madan Ram's case was also a case under the Code of 1859. The words "by reason of some formal defect" appeared for the first time in sec 373 of the Code of 1877. The decision in Watson's case was also followed by the High Court of Calcutta in Alarda Co Ltd v Doorga Charan (p) a case under the present Code. The question in that case was whether a plaintiff can be permitted to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit after he has adduced all his evidence and finds that the evidence is insufficient to establish his case. It was contended for the plaintiff that the words "other sufficient grounds" were wide enough to entitle the Court to allow the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit under any circumstances that might be deemed sufficient by the Court but this contention was overruled and it was held that the Court has no power to allow a plaintiff to withdraw from the suit after evidence had been adduced and the evidence was found to be insufficient to support his case. In the course of his judgment Moolerji J. after referring to clause (a) and (b) of sub rule (c) said "The intention plainly is that a ground indicated in clause (b) must be of the same nature as the ground specified in clause (a)". This decision has been followed by the same High Court in subsequent cases (q). The High Courts of Patna (r) and Lahore (s) have followed the Calcutta decisions. The High Court of Bombay held in some cases that the Court should not allow a suit to be withdrawn after the parties were ready for trial if such withdrawal might operate to the prejudice of the defendant (t). But this view has been dissented from in a recent case in which the Court followed the Calcutta decisions (u). In an Allahabad case (v) Richards C.J. observed that a Court ought to be very slow to give liberty to bring a fresh suit after a case has been heard out on the merits. In Madras there is a conflict of opinion whether the words "other sufficient grounds" mean grounds analogous to a formal defect as held in Calcutta or include grounds which may not be analogous to a formal defect. In Uneca's case (v) the High Court held that the words "other sufficient grounds" must be ejusdem generis with the words "some formal defect" and that the Court had no power under this rule to give leave to the plaintiff after a substantial portion of his evidence had been heard. In a later case (w) however Sadashiva Ayyar J. expressed the opinion that the words "other sufficient grounds" were not ejusdem generis with the words "some formal defect" and that they included grounds which might not be analogous to a formal defect and that even if they did not objections to a suit on the ground of jurisdiction or insufficient Court fees were analogous to formal defects. It will be seen from what has been stated above that the majority of Judges are in favour of the view that the mere inability of the plaintiff to prove his case is not a sufficient ground within the meaning of this rule for giving him leave to withdraw with liberty to institute a fresh suit.

Where a plaintiff sought to recover a sum of money upon certain allegations which were found untrue by the first Court, and the first Court dismissed the suit, and on appeal the District Judge came to the same conclusion, but granted leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit, it was held by the High Court that the order should not have been made and the same was set aside (x)

"On such terms as it thinks fit."—Where leave is granted to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit, the defendant is ordinarily entitled to the costs of the suit (y). It has been held by the High Court of Madras that where leave is granted to a plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs on or before a specified date, but no payment is made on or before that date, the plaintiff is precluded from bringing a second suit, and if such suit is brought, it should be dismissed (z). It has been similarly held by that Court that if leave is granted to bring a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs (without specifying any date), the plaintiff is precluded from bringing a second suit unless the costs are paid before the institution of the second suit. The payment of costs after the close of the trial in the second suit is not a compliance with the condition (a). But the same Court has held, that when it is absolutely impossible for the plaintiff to pay the costs on or before the date fixed by the Court as where the exact amount of costs cannot be ascertained in time, the Court has power to extend the time (b).

The High Court of Calcutta has not taken the same strict view of the condition as to the payment of costs as the Madras High Court. Thus in Abdul Aziz v Ebrahim (c), where leave was granted to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs, it was held that though the payment of costs was a condition precedent to the institution of a second suit, non payment of costs before the institution of the second suit did not render the fresh suit bad ab initio, and, further, that payment of costs before the trial of the fresh suit cured the irregularity. In Shital v Gaya (d), Sir Lawrence Jenkins, while agreeing with the result of the ruling in Abdul Aziz v Ebrahim based his decision on somewhat different reasons. In that case also permission was granted to the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs. The plaintiff did not pay the costs and brought a second suit. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif for non payment of costs. The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge. Pending the appeal the plaintiff paid the defendant's costs. The Subordinate Judge thereupon sent back the case to the Munsif for trial on the merits. It was held that inasmuch as the permission to withdraw and bring a fresh suit was made conditional on a certain payment, the original suit could not be deemed to be withdrawn until those costs were paid, and it must therefore be deemed to be a pending suit which became disposed of as soon as payment was made. In the course of the judgment the learned Judge said: "When a plaintiff has obtained leave to withdraw upon payment of costs, it is his duty to pay the costs at once, for until they were paid there is no withdrawal with the permission of the Court. In that view, when the case came before the Munsif he was not entitled to dismiss it. All he could do was to regard sec 10 (of the Code) as a bar to his proceeding with the trial of the suit. In so far as he dismissed it, he exercised a power that was not vested in him, and I think the Subordinate Judge was right when, on payment of the costs, he set aside the decree of the Munsif and sent back the case in order that the Munsif should proceed with the trial, for on the payment of those costs there was the withdrawal complete under O 23. It appears to me important in cases of this kind to have regard to the precise terms of the section, and I think it will be well that the Court when giving permission to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit should see that the orders are complete, and the proper order in such circumstances is one which limits the time within which the payment should be made and which goes on to direct that on failure to pay within the time, the original suit is dismissed with costs." The High Court of Patna has followed the Calcutta decisions (e). The High Court of Madras has dissented from the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Shital v Gaya, and held that the withdrawal operates not when the costs are paid, but from the date of the Court's order granting permission to withdraw (f).

Where a plaintiff who had brought a suit for redemption against the mortgagee was allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit within two years, and he brought the fresh suit after two years the High Court of Bombay held that he was entitled to do so. The reason given was that a mortgagor has a right to sue for redemption at any time within the period of limitation unless his equity of redemption has in the meantime been extinguished (g).

Notice—Though this rule does not specifically require that notice of an application under it must be given to the opposite party, still it is an elementary rule of universal application that a judicial order which may possibly affect or prejudice any party cannot be made unless he has been afforded an opportunity to be heard. Hence if an order is made under this rule granting leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit without giving notice to the opposite party, the order will be set aside under s 115 of the Code on the ground of material irregularity (h).

Permission need not be express—The permission mentioned in this section need not be given in express terms. It is sufficient if it can be implied from the order read with the application on which the order was made (i).

Form of order—Where leave is granted to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, the order must not be one dismissing the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, but one granting permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit (j). Where leave is refused, the Court should simply dismiss the application. It should not make an order disposing of the suit on the assumption that the plaintiff would withdraw the suit under sub rule (1) if the application was refused (k).

Permission extends to one fresh suit only—The permission granted in the original suit to bring a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter extends only to the filing of one fresh suit and not more. Hence where leave is granted to a plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs, and the plaintiff brings a fresh suit without paying the costs, and the suit is dismissed, the dismissal is a bar to the institution of a third suit in respect of the same subject matter (l).

Dismissal of suit coupled with liberty to bring a fresh suit—There is no power in the Courts of India to dismiss a suit with liberty to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit for the same matter (m).

Liberty to consolidate withdrawn suit with another pending suit—A Court, it seems, has no power under this rule to grant permission to a plaintiff to consolidate the claim in the suit which is withdrawn with a claim in another suit pending at the

O. 23, r. 1. time But if such an order is made, it cannot be said to be one made without jurisdiction and it is not a nullity (n) But there is nothing to prevent the Court from granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from two suits with liberty to bring a fresh suit consolidating the claims in the two suits (o)

Withdrawing with permission: additional relief in fresh suit—Where a suit is withdrawn with the permission of the Court the effect is to leave the parties in the same position as that in which they stood before the suit was brought. Such being the case, the plaintiff may include in the fresh suit a relief which he might have included in the first suit, but which he had omitted to include in it (p)

Withdrawing with permission after suit has abated against some of the defendants—Where a suit has abated against some of several defendants and it is then withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit, such permission does not entitle the plaintiff to join the legal representatives of the deceased defendant as party defendants in the fresh suit (q)

Withdrawing without permission Bar of fresh suit—Where a plaintiff withdraws from a suit without the permission of the Court, he is precluded from instituting a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter [sub rule (3)] and against the same defendant. See notes below 'Same defendant,' and 'Same subject matter'

Same defendant—Though the rule does not expressly say so the fresh suit that is barred must be a suit against the same defendant. A second suit will not be barred if it is brought against a different person. A obtains a decree against B and in execution of the decree attaches certain property alleged to belong to B. C intervenes under O 21, r. 18 all going that the property belongs to him. C's application is rejected and he brings a regular suit against A alone to establish his title to the property. C then withdraws from the suit without obtaining permission of the Court to bring a second suit for the same subject matter. After the suit has been withdrawn the attachment falls through. A then re-attaches the same property in execution of the same decree, and the property is sold and purchased by D. C does not appear to contest the second execution proceeding after the withdrawal of his suit. He then institutes a suit against D to recover possession of the property, alleging that the property is his sole and exclusive property. The suit is not barred under this rule, as B the judgment debtor, was not a party to the first suit (r)

Same subject matter—As stated above, if a suit is withdrawn without the permission of the Court the plaintiff is precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same 'subject matter'. The expression used in the corresponding s 33 of the Code of 1882 was "matter". As to that expression it was held in a Calcutta case under the Code of 1882 that it did not mean property, but that it had reference to the right in property which the plaintiff seeks to enforce. In that case A had instituted a suit to establish his right to sell certain property in satisfaction of a decree against B, but he withdrew the suit without obtaining leave to bring a fresh suit. Subsequently he instituted another suit to establish his right to sell the same property in satisfaction of another decree against B. It was held that the second suit was not barred. The Court said 'Now, though the property in respect of which the present suit is brought is the same as that in respect of which the former suit was brought still that would not be sufficient to make the present suit one for 'the same matter' as that for which the former suit was brought within the meaning of s 373'

the causes of action in the two suits being different (s) In a Madras case under the present Code where the next reversionary heir of a deceased Hindu instituted a suit against the widow of the deceased and an alienee from her of her husband's property for a declaration that the alienation was not binding on the estate and the widow died pending the suit, and the reversioner withdrew the suit without obtaining leave to bring a fresh suit, and subsequently brought a suit against the alienee for possession of the same property it was held that the second suit was not barred Wallis, C J, in delivering the judgment of the Court, said 'The terms 'subject matter' and 'the same matter' which occurred in the corresponding section 373 of the old Code have not been defined, and must we think be construed strictly in a penal provision of this character Without attempting an exhaustive definition of all that may be included in the term 'subject matter,' we are of opinion that where as in the present case, the cause of action and the relief claimed in the second suit are not the same as the cause of action and the relief claimed in the first suit, the second suit cannot be considered to have been brought in respect of the same subject matter as the first suit' (t) The contrary, however, was held by the Chief Court of the Punjab in a case in which the facts were almost similar to the Madras case (u) In a Bombay case (v) A sued to eject B Finding, however, that there was no sufficient notice to quit, he withdrew the suit without obtaining the leave of the Court Subsequently A gave a formal notice to quit, and brought a fresh suit for ejectment It was held that the suit was not barred under this rule, as the previous suit was not for the same subject matter as the second suit Scott, C J, said, 'We are of opinion that subject matter means, to use the words of Order I, Rule 1, the series of acts or transactions alleged to exist giving rise to the relief claimed Obviously the first series of acts or transactions which formed the basis of the first suit was incomplete, or the plaintiff would have been able to prosecute his suit to decree It was incomplete because there was no notice to quit The second series of acts or transactions is complete because the notice to quit has been given and, therefore, the two suits are not in respect of the same subject matter But the withdrawal of a prior suit for a declaration of title to certain war bonds is a bar to a subsequent suit for consequential relief in respect of the same bonds [that is, for recovery of possession] (w)

A suit for partition, however stands on a different footing, the cause of action in such a suit being a recurring cause of action Hence the withdrawal of a suit for partition of joint property though without permission of the Court, is no bar to a second suit for partition of the same property against the same defendants (x)

Withdrawing without leave of Court but with consent of defendant—In a case decided under s 97 of the Code of 1859 it was observed by Norman J, that where a plaintiff withdraws his suit without the permission of the Court, but with the consent of the defendant, he is not precluded from instituting a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter (y) The observations of Norman, J, on this point have been doubted in a recent case (z) The doubt seems to be well founded

Withdrawing from suit pending arbitration—When the matters in dispute in a suit are referred to arbitration by an order of the Court made under Schedule II, para 3, the Court has no power under this rule to grant permission to the plaintiff

- 23, 1. to withdraw from the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit. The provisions of this rule do not apply to such a case, for when once a matter is referred to arbitration, the Court is precluded from dealing with it in the same suit save in the manner and to the extent provided in Schedule II. 4 sues B for possession of certain property. The matters in difference between the parties are referred to arbitration by an order of the Court. The Court has no power, either before or after the award is made, to grant permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit (a). But where a reference to arbitration has been made without the intervention of the Court (that is, not by an order of the Court), and one of the parties to the reference applies to the Court under Schedule II, para 20, to file the award, the provisions of this rule apply, and it is open to the applicant to withdraw the application, though numbered and registered as a suit under that para 20, under sub s (1) of this rule (b).

Power of appellate Court to give leave to plaintiff to withdraw from a suit—It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (c), Madras (d), and Bombay (e), that where a plaintiff's suit is dismissed, and he appeals from the decree, the appellate Court has power to allow the plaintiff appellant to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter: see s 107 (2). The contrary view seems to be implied in a Calcutta decision (f). But an appellate Court has no power to grant such leave before the appeal is admitted (g).

Erroneous order granting leave to withdraw and jurisdiction—An order for withdrawal of a suit with leave to institute a fresh suit made in circumstances not within the scope of this rule, that is, made in a case where there is no "formal defect" or other sufficient ground within the meaning of this rule, cannot be treated as an order made without jurisdiction [though it may be challenged in revision on the ground of material irregularity—see notes below, Revision], such order is consequently not null and void (h). The order not being a nullity, a fresh suit instituted upon leave so granted is maintainable, it is not barred as res judicata. Further, the Court trying the subsequent suit is not competent to enter into the question whether the Court which granted the plaintiff permission to withdraw the first suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit had power to make the order and had properly made it (i).

Appeal—An order under this rule granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit or to abandon a part of his claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit is not appealable. Such an order is not one of the appealable orders mentioned in O 43, s 1, nor is it a "decree" within the meaning of s 2 (2) (j).

Letters Patent appeal—An order of a single Judge of a High Court granting leave to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent, and appealable as such (l). Similarly an order of a single Judge of a High Court dismissing an application for the revision of an order giving leave to withdraw a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit is a "judgment" within the meaning of that clause, and is appealable as such (l) O. 23

Revision—Though an order granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit is not appealable, it is open to revision if it falls within s 115 of the Code. An order is open to revision under that section, if the Court which made it had no jurisdiction to make it as in the undermentioned case (11), or if the Court acted illegally or with material irregularity in making the order.

An order granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit in circumstances not within the scope of the present rule, that is, in a case in which there is no formal defect or other sufficient ground for making it, as where the order is made on the ground of the plaintiff's inability to prove his case, cannot be treated as an order made without jurisdiction [see notes, "Erroneous order granting leave to withdraw and jurisdiction, on p 764]. The High Court, therefore has no power to interfere with such an order on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction (m). But it has been held in a series of cases that the High Court will interfere with such an order on the ground of material irregularity and will set it aside in revision (n). Similarly the High Court will interfere and set aside in revision on the ground of material irregularity an order granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit if the order was made ex parte (o), or if leave was granted without assigning any reasons (p) or if leave was granted on the ground that there was a formal defect or other sufficient ground but no inquiry was made as to whether there was in fact a formal defect or other sufficient ground (q). In a Patna case, the High Court held that where the defendant himself alleges a formal defect, the Court has jurisdiction to pass any order it pleases under this rule (r). But this seems to be an extreme view. In a Madras case where the plaintiff deliberately undervalued his suit and paid insufficient court fees and brought the suit in a District Munsif's Court, and then applied for leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and leave was granted it was held that the Court acted with material irregularity and the order was set aside in revision (s). In a Calcutta case, the first Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit on a finding that the plaintiff's allegations were untrue. On appeal the District Judge came to the same conclusion, but granted leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The High Court held that the order was not properly made and the order was set aside (t).

In Allahabad, it has been held that the High Court will interfere in revision if the lower Court has not applied its mind to the circumstances of the case and the provisions of this rule. In other words, if it has not exercised a judicial discretion (u).

Effect of reversal of order granting leave to withdraw—Where an order granting leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit is reversed by the High Court in revision but before the reversal a fresh suit is filed the procedure is to declare the fresh suit null and void and to direct the lower Court to proceed with the original suit from the stage which it had reached when the order granting leave was made by that Court (w)

Sub-rule (4), Co-plaintiffs

Co plaintiffs—By sub r (4) it is enacted that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to authorise the Court to permit one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the others. This sub rule limits the jurisdiction of the Court to grant permission to withdraw a suit to cases where all the plaintiffs join in the application. Where the Court in contravention of this sub rule allows two out of four plaintiffs without the consent of the other two to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit it acts without jurisdiction and a second suit in respect of the same subject matter is barred. But if the suit that was withdrawn was a suit for partition the second suit it has been held will not be barred the reason given being that a cause of action in a suit for partition is a recurring one and a joint owner has a right to come to Court at any time provided he proves that he has a subsisting joint title and possession in the property within the period of limitation (x)

3. [s 375.] Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or where the defendant satisfies the plaintiff in respect of the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the suit, the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded, and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit

(Compromise of suit)

Alterations in the rule—This rule differs from the corresponding s 375 of the Code of 1882 in three respects namely —

- 1 The words where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that have been added into the rule to set at rest the conflict of opinion noted below in the commentary under the head Where a compromise set up by one party is denied by the other
- 2 The words the Court shall order such agreement to be recorded have been substituted for the words such agreement shall be recorded The object is to bring out the word 'order' prominently, as an appeal is now given from an order made under this rule recording or refusing to record an agreement See O 43 r 1 cl (m) and notes below, Appeal
- 3 The words and such decree shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction which occurred in the old section after the words so far as it relates to the suit have been omitted See notes to s 96, Sub s (3) consent decree not appealable

Scope of the rule—The agreement compromise or satisfaction contemplated by this rule may (1) relate wholly to the suit, or (2) it may relate only to a part thereof or (3) it may also comprise matters that do not relate to the suit When the agreement relates wholly to the suit, the Court must, on being invited by the parties record the agreement and pass a decree in accordance with the agreement, and the suit stops there Where the agreement relates to a part only of the suit, the Court must, on the application of the parties pass a decree in accordance with the agreement and the suit may be proceeded with as to the rest Where the agreement, besides relating to the suit or a part thereof, comprises matters that do not relate to the suit, the decree must comprise only such terms of the agreement as relate to the suit but not the rest As to the case where a decree comprises matters not relating to the suit, see below notes Where the decree comprises matters that do not relate to the suit

O. 23, r. 3 vention of the Court in a pending suit cannot be recorded as an adjustment under this rule unless all parties agree thereto (o) The High Court of Madras has expressed the opinion that such an award may be recorded as an "adjustment" under this rule (p) In a recent case a Full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad dissented from the Calcutta rulings, and followed the decision of the Bombay High Court in Manilal's case (q) It is submitted, with respect, that the view taken by the Calcutta High Court is correct

It has been held that a mere agreement to refer to arbitration matters in difference in a pending suit, where the parties have not gone beyond the agreement to refer and no award has been made, cannot be treated as an "adjustment" of the suit within the meaning of this rule (r) It has also been held that a decree obtained upon an award on a reference to the presiding judge and another individual must be regarded as a consent decree, and it is not subject to the provisions of the Sch II (s)

"Agreement" adjusting a suit—Where in the course of a suit the pleaders for both parties agreed that if a certain fact appeared upon a certain document, the Court should decree the suit, otherwise the suit should be dismissed, it was held that the agreement was not one adjusting the suit within the meaning of this rule, for it was not complete, and left something to be done by the Court, viz., to ascertain whether a certain fact appeared upon a certain document (t) But an agreement that the parties will consent to a decree being passed in terms to be stated by a person named is an adjustment of the claim (u) Where a defendant made an offer to the plaintiff that if a certain witness in the case would eat kachcha food served by the plaintiff the suit should be decreed, and the plaintiff accepted the offer and the witness ate the food served by the plaintiff, it was held that the offer and its acceptance amounted to a contract, and that the suit should be decreed It was also held that the present rule did not apply to such a case (v)

Agreement to take oath under the Oaths Act—Where it is agreed in the course of the hearing of a suit between the plaintiff and the defendant that the plaintiff should take a certain oath on a certain date, and that if he did so, there should be a decree for him, but that if he failed to do so, his suit should be dismissed, and the plaintiff fails to take the oath, the agreement does not amount to an adjustment of the suit so as to entitle the defendant to have the suit dismissed In such a case the Court should not dismiss the suit, but should record the refusal and the reasons thereof under s 12 of the Oaths Act 10 of 1873, and proceed with the trial of the suit (w)

"Lawful agreement or compromise."—Where both parties to a suit apply to the Court under this rule to pass a decree in accordance with the compromise arrived at between them, the Court has no power to refuse to pass the decree, because in its view the compromise is lawful and not opposed to public policy, the Court should refuse to pass a decree in accordance with the compromise even if the parties consent thereto (y) If a decree is passed under this rule on a compromise which is not lawful, the Court should not enforce the decree in execution proceedings Thus a sale of an office attached to

Procedure to be followed under this rule—It is important to note that a consent decree under this rule can be passed only after an order is made directing the compromise to be recorded. This is not a mere matter of form, as the aggrieved party has a right of appeal against such order under O 43, r 1, cl (m) (c). See notes below, 'Appeal'.

Where a compromise set up by one party is denied by the other—Suppose that a party, to a suit, alleging that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful agreement, applies to the Court to record the agreement and to pass a decree in accordance therewith. Suppose, further, that the opposite party to the suit denies that there was any such agreement as alleged, or, while admitting that there was such an agreement, alleges that he wishes to recede from it. Has the Court power if the fact of the agreement is denied, to determine whether as a fact the alleged agreement adjusting the suit was made, and to pass a decree if it finds as a fact that the alleged agreement was made? Further, if the opposite party, while admitting that there was such an agreement, alleges that he wishes to recede from it, has the Court power under this rule to pass a decree in accordance with the agreement? Both these questions were, under the old section, answered in the affirmative by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta (d), but in the negative by the High Court of Allahabad (e). According to the Allahabad decisions the Court had no power under the old section to record an agreement and to pass a decree in accordance therewith, unless both the parties consented before the Court to have the agreement recorded, that is to say, even where there was an agreement to adjust the suit, the Court could act under that section only if both the parties were in agreement at the moment of moving the Court, and if they were not then in accord, the agreement could only be enforced by a fresh suit for specific performance. The conflict arose from the words 'if a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise with which a 375 commenced'. The present rule gives effect to the Bombay, Madras and Calcutta decisions. The words "where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part" clearly show that the Court has power under this rule, where an agreement or compromise is denied, to decide whether, as a fact, the alleged agreement or compromise was made, and if it is satisfied that it was made, to record it (f).

Submission and award—It was held in two Bombay cases under the Code of 1882 that when the matters in difference in a pending suit are referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, and an award is made, the submission and the award may be treated as an "adjustment of the suit by an agreement" within the meaning of s 373 of that Code, and it may be recorded as an adjustment under that section (g). In the later of the two cases (h), Stirling J., said that it was open, to the plaintiff to proceed under s 525 [now sch II, para 20], but that it was not obligatory upon him to do so, as there was no express provision in the Code of 1882 that no other course than that prescribed by s 525 should be followed.

The present Code, however, does contain such a provision, for it is enacted by s 89 that save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the second Schedule. In a Bombay case decided under this Code, it was held by Davar, J., that where in a pending suit the parties go to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and an award is made, the provisions of para 21 of Schedule II do not apply to the award, but that the submission and the award may be recorded as an "adjustment" under this rule. As to s 89, it was said that the words "any other law for the time being in force" were wide enough to include the provisions of O 23, r 3 (1). Four years later Sir Norman Macleod, another judge of the same High Court, held in Shatahshaw v Tyab Haji Ayub (j), that the words "any other law for the time being in force" in s 89 does not include the present rule, and that having regard to the provisions of that section a submission and an award could not be recorded as an adjustment under this rule, and that the correct procedure was to apply to the Court to file the award under paragraphs 20 and 21 of Sch II. The above decisions were reviewed by Sir Norman Macleod in Manilal v Genculias (k). The learned judge came to the conclusion that his decision in Shatahshaw's case was erroneous, and he held as follows: "They [that is, the parties] may make the agreement an order of Court, and then paras 1 to 16 of Schedule II apply. If they do not make the agreement an order of Court, they cannot ask for the agreement to be filed under para 1" they cannot ask for the award if made to be filed under paras 20 and 21. If an award is made and both parties accept the award, they can apply for a consent decree in terms thereof and there is no need to apply for an order recording the terms of the adjustment. If the plaintiff disputes the award for any reason and proceeds with the suit the defendant may plead the award and have the case set down for hearing on the issue whether the award is binding as an adjustment. If the defendant disputes the award the plaintiff may have the case set down for trial on the issue whether the an adjustment within the meaning of this rule and as such it may be enforced under the general law of contract. The result, according to that ruling, is that where parties to a suit refer their disputes to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, and an award is made, an application to pass a decree in terms of the award is an application to record a compromise within the meaning of this rule. Further, if an objection is taken to the award on the ground of misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, the Court acting under this rule, has jurisdiction under this rule to inquire into the charge of misconduct. If the Court does make the inquiry, and refuses to record the submission and award, the order is not open to revision under s 115 above (l). The High Court of Calcutta has dissented from the decision in Manilal's case, and held that the words "any other law for the time being in force" in s 89 do not include the present rule, further, that where in a pending suit the parties go to arbitration without an order of the Court, the award cannot be enforced under this rule or Schedule II or under the Arbitration Act, also that if a submission to arbitration of matters in difference in a pending suit is to take place, there is no provision for it other than the provisions in Schedule II (m). The result, according to the Calcutta decisions, is that if an award is made under a reference without an order of the Court in a pending suit, the Court should not take any notice of the award, and the suit may be proceeded with on the application of either party (n). The High Court of Lahore has held that an award made without the inter

The High Court of Madras has expressed the opinion that such an award may be recorded as an "adjustment" under this rule (p). In a recent case a Full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad dissented from the Calcutta rulings, and followed the decision of the Bombay High Court in Manila's case (q). It is submitted, with respect, that the view taken by the Calcutta High Court is correct.

It has been held that a mere agreement to refer to arbitration matters in difference in a pending suit, where the parties have not gone beyond the agreement to refer and no award has been made, cannot be treated as an "adjustment" of the suit within the meaning of this rule (r). It has also been held that a decree obtained upon an award on a reference to the presiding judge and another individual must be regarded as a consent decree, and it is not subject to the provisions of the Sch II (s).

"Agreement" adjusting a suit—Where in the course of a suit the pleaders for both parties agreed that if a certain fact appeared upon a certain document, the Court should decree the suit, otherwise the suit should be dismissed, it was held that the agreement was not one adjusting the suit within the meaning of this rule, for it was not complete, and left something to be done by the Court, viz., to ascertain whether a certain fact appeared upon a certain document (t). But an agreement that the parties will consent to a decree being passed in terms to be stated by a person named as an adjustment of the claim (u). Where a defendant made an offer to the plaintiff that if a certain witness in the case would eat lachcha food served by the plaintiff the suit should be decreed, and the plaintiff accepted the offer and the witness ate the food served by the plaintiff, it was held that the offer and its acceptance amounted to a contract, and that the suit should be decreed. It was also held that the present rule did not apply to such a case (r).

Agreement to take oath under the Oaths Act—Where it is agreed in the course of the hearing of a suit between the plaintiff and the defendant that the plaintiff should take a certain oath on a certain date, and that if he did so, there should be a decree for him, but that if he failed to do so, his suit should be dismissed, and the plaintiff fails to take the oath, the agreement does not amount to an adjustment of the suit so as to entitle the defendant to have the suit dismissed. In such a case the Court should not dismiss the suit, but should record the refusal and the reasons thereof under s 12 of the Oaths Act 10 of 1873, and proceed with the trial of the suit (x).

"Lawful agreement or compromise."—Where both parties to a suit apply to the Court under this rule to pass a decree in accordance with the compromise arrived at between them, the Court has no power to refuse to pass the decree, because in its view the compromise is too favourable to one of the parties (x). But if the agreement or compromise is unlawful, as where it is opposed to public policy, the Court should refuse to pass a decree in accordance with the compromise even if the parties consent thereto (y). If a decree is passed under this rule on a compromise which is not lawful, the Court should not enforce the decree in execution proceedings. Thus a sale of an office attached to a temple is against public policy. Hence if in a suit against the holder of such an office a compromise is arrived at whereby the holder of the office consents to the office being sold in satisfaction of the debt due to the plaintiff, and a decree is passed on the compromise, the Court should notwithstanding the consent decree refuse to sell the office in execution (-) It is clear that if the matter had rested in contract only, the Court could not have enforced the sale in a suit brought for that purpose. The mere fact that the contract is embodied in a decree does not alter the incidents of the contract. By private agreement, converted into a decree, parties cannot empower themselves to do that which they could not have done by private agreement alone (a). The principle is that where a decree is based on an agreement of compromise, the Court must be taken to adopt the agreement with all its incidents (b). "The contract of the parties is not the less a contract, and subject to the incidents of a contract, because there is superadded the command of a judge" (c). On this principle in a case where A sued B on a mortgage, and C, who was a second mortgagee, was joined as a party defendant and A and B entered into a compromise whereby A agreed to pay to B more than what B was entitled to, the Court refused to pass a decree in terms of the agreement on the ground that the compromise was detrimental to the interests of C, and that it was not therefore 'lawful' within the meaning of this rule (d). See notes to s 11, "Consent decree and estoppel," p 63 above. The following are further illustrations —

(a) B holds certain lands under a lease from A. The rent falls into arrears, and A sues B for arrears of rent and for possession. It is subsequently agreed between the parties that B should continue to hold the lands as A's tenant, but upon fresh terms arranged between the parties, and that if default should be made in payment of rent on the due dates, the lease should be forfeited [note that this last is a forfeiture clause]. A decree is passed in terms of the agreement under this rule. B commits default in payment of rent. A thereupon applies for possession of the land in execution of the decree. B offers to pay the arrears, and applies that he may be relieved against forfeiture. It is clear that if the matter had rested in contract only, the Court could have granted the relief. The mere fact, therefore, that the agreement has been recorded and a decree passed in accordance therewith, does not preclude the Court from granting relief against forfeiture (e).

(b) The facts are the same as in the above illustration, except that instead of proceeding in execution, a fresh suit is instituted by A against B for possession on default of payment of rent. The same principle applies as in the above case (f). It would seem that the proper procedure in cases where the forfeiture clause is in the form stated in ill (a) is to enforce the forfeiture not by an application to execute the consent decree, but by a regular suit (g). The clause does no more than declare the right of forfeiture, and thus far the decree is declaratory, and it is an elementary principle that a declaratory decree can only be enforced by a suit.

Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act —It has been held by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court that a compromise in a suit between parties one of whom is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act (XVII of 1879), is not bad in law because it is made without compliance with the provisions of sec. 15B of that Act (h), and that the compromise may be recorded under this rule.

O. 23, r. 3. But it has also been held by the same High Court that the present rule does not exclude the operation of the special provisions of s 13 of that Act, and the Court can under that section go behind the transaction where the whole of the claim is admitted by the agriculturist defendant (i)

Compromise of probate proceedings—Unless a will is proved in some form, no grant of probate can be made merely on the consent of parties. Hence an agreement or compromise as regards the genuineness and due execution of a will, if its effect is to exclude evidence in proof of the will, is not "lawful" within the meaning of this rule and no probate can be granted merely because the caveator consents to the grant. Such an agreement is against public policy, for its object is to exclude inquiry into the genuineness of the will which it is the duty of the Probate Court to make (j). Hence it is open to the caveator, before probate is granted, to withdraw from the compromise and to require that the will be proved (k). For the same reason if an executor withdraws his petition for probate, such withdrawal being pursuant to a compromise, he is not precluded by the provisions of r 1 above from presenting another petition for probate, though the first petition was withdrawn without the permission of the Court (l).

Form of decree where compromise includes matters which do not relate to the suit—In Hemant Kumari v Midnapore Zamindars Co (m), where a decree comprised lands outside the suit, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—

* A perfectly proper and effectual method of carrying out the terms of this [rule] would be for the decree to recite the whole of the agreement and then to conclude with an order relative to that part that was the subject of the suit or it could introduce the agreement in a schedule to the decree, but in either case, although the operative part of the decree would be properly confined to the actual subject matter of the then existing litigation the decree taken as a whole would include the agreement. This in fact is what the decree did in the present case. It may be that as a decree it was incapable of being executed outside the lands of the suit, but that does not prevent it being received in evidence of its contents."

It is clear from the passage cited above that where a suit is adjusted by a lawful agreement between the parties the proper course is to recite the agreement in the decree or to annex it as a schedule to the decree but in either case the operative part of the decree should be confined to the actual subject matter of the suit. It would be wrong to refuse to incorporate in the decree matters which form part of the compromise because they are extraneous to the suit, such matters are to be excluded only from the operative part of the decree.

Where in a testamentary suit, consent terms are proposed some of which fall within the testamentary jurisdiction, and others do not, the decree may properly embody all the terms in a schedule for reference, but its operative part should be confined to such terms as are within its jurisdiction, and the Testamentary Court should leave the parties to take separate proceedings in the ordinary original civil jurisdiction to enforce the remaining terms if necessary (n).

Matters which relate to the suit—It is clear from what is stated above that where a compromise comprises matters extraneous to the suit, the operative part of the decree should be confined to matters that relate to the suit. What, then are matters that 'relate to the suit'? In a case reported in 35 Cal 837 (o), Mitra J said "The question whether any particular term relates to the suit must be decided from the frame of the suit, the relief claimed, and the relief allowed by the decree on adjustment by lawful agreement. The mutual connection of the different parts of the relief granted by a consent decree is an important element for consideration in each case in deciding whether any portion of the relief is within the scope of the suit. No hard and fast rule can be laid down, each case being governed by its own facts." In a later Calcutta case (p), Rankin J said "In some of the decisions section 375 [now, (1) 23, r 3] has been applied by making a distinction between property in suit and property extraneous to the litigation. Where a suit is merely for the recovery of specific properties, that distinction will be adequate and will be equal to the distinction between matters which relate to the suit and matters which do not. In some cases, however, suits are not for the recovery of property but to establish particular rights and I certainly prefer the opinion expressed in the case reported in 35 Cal 837 to the effect that the facts have to be looked at as whole in order to decide whether matters have been introduced into the suit that do not relate to the suit." As to the latter class of cases it may be stated that as a general rule 'all terms which form the consideration for the adjustment of the matters in dispute, whether they form the subject matter of the suit or not, become related to the suit and can be embodied in the decree.' Thus where A sued B on a promissory note, and a compromise was arrived at between the parties whereby B agreed to pay the amount of the note by instalments, and the amount was also made a charge on certain immoveable property of B it was held that there was nothing in the present rule to preclude the Court from making the amount a charge on B's property, even though the relief claimed was for a money decree only. The charge, though not claimed as a relief, related to the suit (q). It formed the consideration for the time allowed for payment of the sum decreed by instalments, and thus constituted an integral and necessary part of the adjustment of the claim in the suit (r). It has similarly been held that where A and B are joint tenants of certain land, and A, having paid up the entire rent, sues B for contribution, and a compromise is arrived at whereby B in consideration of A abandoning his claim gives up his share of the land to A, the term as to B giving up his share is a term which relates to the suit (s). Where in execution of a decree obtained by A against B, A attaches certain property, and C claiming the property as his own brings a suit against A for a declaration of his title to the property, and a compromise is arrived at between the parties whereby A admits C's ownership of the property, and C agrees to execute a mortgage of the same property in favour of A for the amount of the decree obtained by A against B, the term as to the execution of the mortgage is a term which relates to the suit (t). But where A sued B to restrain B from building a projected house in such a way as to interfere with A's enjoyment of light and air, and a compromise was arrived at between the parties whereby B undertook not to build his house higher than what it originally was, and also agreed, as regards a passage between the two houses, not to let water into the passage, it was held that the 23, r. 3, arrangement as to the passage did not relate to the suit, and that the operative part of the decree should be confined to the undertaking as to the house (u). But the parties can get over the difficulty by amending the pleadings with the leave of the Court so as to comprise in the pleadings and the decree matters that did not relate to the original suit but are comprised in the compromise (v). In a Patna case where the plaintiff claimed Rs. 7,000 with interest at the rate of 9½ per cent per annum, and a consent decree was passed whereby the defendant agreed to pay Rs. 2,500 with interest at the rate of 9 per cent per annum if the amount was paid on a specified date, but at 24 per cent per annum if it was not paid on or before that date, the Court refused execution of the decree with interest at 24 per cent on the ground that that part of the compromise which provided for the payment of interest at the rate of 24 per cent per annum was outside the scope of the suit, and allowed execution with interest at 9 per cent only (w). This decision cannot be supported either on principle or on authority so far as the ground on which it is based is concerned. See notes below, 'Execution of decree based on a compromise'.

Parties—A compromise cannot be recorded under this rule if besides the parties to the suit there are other persons who are parties to the compromise, unless those persons are brought on the record as parties to the suit. The reason is that before recording a compromise under this rule the Court has to be satisfied that there is a lawful compromise, and this cannot be done in the absence of those that are not parties to the suit (x).

Compromise pending arbitration—It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that where the matters in dispute in a suit are referred to arbitration under an order of reference made by the Court, and pending the reference the parties adjust the suit by an agreement in writing signed by them and the arbitrators, the agreement does not amount to an award. Nor can it be recorded as an adjustment under this rule unless the arbitration has been superseded by an order of the Court, the mere fact that the time for making the award has expired does not amount to a supersession of the arbitration, there must be an order of supersession under para 8 of Schedule II (y). In a Madras case, where the lower Court had under somewhat similar circumstances recorded the adjustment under the present rule, it was held that as the time for making the award had expired when the adjustment was recorded, the Court must be deemed to have exercised its power to supersede the arbitration under para 8 of Schedule II (z).

Execution of decree based on a compromise—This rule requires that where the Court is invited to pass a decree in terms of an agreement or compromise, the agreement or compromise should be lawful, and, further, that the operative part of the decree should be confined to the actual subject matter of the suit. Suppose now that a decree is passed on an agreement that is not lawful, or that the operative part of the decree comprises matters that do not relate to the suit. Is the Court bound to execute the decree literally according to its terms? We proceed to state the effect of the decisions on the subject.

First, where a consent decree is based on an agreement or compromise that is not lawful. As to this, it has been held that "so far as the decree embodies unlawful terms of a compromise, it is inoperative, and will not be enforced" (a). This subject has already been dealt with above in the notes, "Unlawful agreement or compromise".

Next, where a consent decree embraces matters that do not relate to the suit — Where a decree passed on a compromise includes terms that relate to the suit, all the terms may be enforced in execution of the decree. But where it contains terms that do not relate to the suit, there is a conflict of opinion whether those terms can be enforced in execution. According to the Allahabad and Madras decisions, such terms can be enforced in execution of the decree (b). It is not open to the party against whom the decree is sought to be executed to object to the decree on the ground that it contains matters foreign to the suit. Such an objection, it has been said by the Madras High Court, must be taken by way of appeal from the decree [and now by way of appeal under O 43, r 1 (m), from the order recording the compromise], and it cannot be taken in execution of the decree (c). On the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta has expressed the opinion that such terms cannot be enforced in execution of the decree, but they may be enforced as a contract by a separate suit (d). Such a suit, however, according to the Allahabad High Court, would be barred under s 47, the question in the view taken by that Court being one relating to execution (e). In Hemanta Kumari v Midnapur Zamindari Co (f), where a decree comprised lands outside the suit, the Judicial Committee observed: "A perfectly proper and effectual method of carrying out the terms of [the present rule] would be for the decree to recite the whole of the agreement and then to conclude with an order relative to that part that was the subject of the suit, or it could introduce the agreement in a schedule to the decree, but in either case, although the operative part of the decree would be properly confined to the actual subject matter of the then existing litigation, the decree taken as a whole would include the agreement. This in fact is what the decree did in the present case. It may be that as a decree it was incapable of being executed outside the lands of the district, but that does not prevent it being received in evidence of its contents. The correct view, it is submitted, is that the decree may be executed as to the operative part alone which, as stated above, is to be confined to the actual subject matter of the suit. As to the rest it may be enforced as a contract by a separate suit."

Appeal—An order under this rule recording or refusing to record a compromise is appealable under O 43, r 1 (m). The Court may, under this rule either record a compromise or it may refuse to do so. If an order is made recording the compromise, the Court must pass a decree in accordance with the compromise. If an order is made refusing to record the compromise, the suit will be proceeded with. But in either case, as stated above, an appeal will lie from the order. Where an order is made recording the agreement, an appeal may be preferred on any of the following grounds —

- 1 That there was no compromise at all, or no such compromise as the Court ordered to be recorded (g)
- 2 That the compromise is not lawful (h)
- 3 That the compromise recorded by the Court comprises matters that do not relate to the suit (i)

O. 23,
rr 3, 4.

A compromise entered into by a pleader without the authority of his client is no compromise at all (j), and as such it comes under group (1) above.

It has been held by the High Courts of Lahore (1), and Madras (1), that the fact that a decree has been passed in accordance with the compromise does not preclude an appeal from the order recording the compromise. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an appeal from the order is incompetent if the appeal is filed after the passing of the decree (2). See notes to s 96, "Sub sec (3) consent decrees not appealable," p 263 above, and notes above under the head "Scope of the rule."

O 17, r 1 (m) does not apply to an order setting aside an award under a reference made through the intervention of the Court. Such a case falls within Schedule II of the Code (m).

Registration—As to registration of decrees based on a compromise, see Mulla's Registration Act, p 78, et seq.

Execution proceedings—See r 1 below.

4. [S. 375 A] Nothing in this Order shall apply to any proceedings in execution of a decree or order.

Proceedings in execution of decrees not affected

Proceedings in execution—This rule provides inter alia that the provisions of r 3 shall not apply to execution proceedings. The reason is that O 21, r 2 and s 47, taken together provide a complete procedure for recording compromises arrived at in execution proceedings (n). This rule also provides that the provisions of r 1 shall not apply to proceedings in execution. Hence where an application for execution of a decree has been made, the Court has no power to allow the applicant to withdraw the application under r 1 (2) above with permission to make a fresh application (o). For the same reason the applicant cannot withdraw his application under r 1 (1) above, though he may apply for its dismissal if he does not wish to proceed further with it (o2). A compromise of a suit after the passing of a preliminary decree and during the pendency of an enquiry before the Commissioner is not a compromise of a proceeding in execution. Such a compromise may therefore be recorded under r 3 above (p). The High Court of Patna has held that an application to set aside a sale under O 21, r 90, is not a proceeding in execution, and that a compromise arrived at between the parties that on the judgment debtor paying a certain sum into Court by a particular date the Court sale should be set aside may, therefore, be recorded under r 3 above (q). But the correctness of this decision is doubtful.

ORDER XXIV.

Payment into Court.

O 24, r. 1.

1. [S. 760. R. S. C., O. 21, r. 1.] The defendant in any suit to recover a debt or damages may, at any stage of the suit, deposit in Court such sum of money as he considers a satisfaction in full of the claim.

Payment into Court with denial of liability—There is no provision in this rule enabling a defendant to pay money into Court with a defence denying liability in other words without prejudice to his contentions as there is in the corresponding English rule see R E C O 22, rr 1 and 6

Mere willingness to pay—A mere allegation of willingness to pay made in the written statement is not equivalent to payment into Court and it does not stop interest from running (r)

"Suit to recover a debt or damages"—This Order applies only to suits to recover a debt or damages and not to any other suits Where a suit is instituted against a defendant to recover a debt or damages, he may pay into Court such amount as he considers a satisfaction in full of the plaintiff's claim By such payment into Court the defendant may be benefited (1) in respect of interest for which see r 3 and (2) in respect of costs for which see r 4 and illustrations thereto

Suit for injunction—A suit for an injunction to restrain a defendant from doing so as to interfere with the plaintiff's right and not including any claim for damages is not a suit for debt or damages within the meaning of this rule No doubt, the Court has in such a suit a discretion under s 19 the Specific Relief Act 1 of 1877 to award damages in lieu of injunction but this circumstance does not make the suit one for damages within the meaning of this rule (s) But it has been held by the High Court of Bombay in view of the long established practice of that Court that where a defendant in a suit for an injunction pure and simple pays into Court a sum which he considers a satisfaction in full of the plaintiff's claim though it be with defence denying liability and the Court allows damages only to the plaintiff and that too to the extent of the amount deposited by the defendant the principle underlying r 4 below ought to regulate the discretion of the Court (which it has under s 30) in directing the payment of costs (t)

Suit for accounts—This rule does not apply to suits for accounts (u)

Suit to recover debt or damages together with other relief—This rule applies to suits to recover debt or damages though there may be other reliefs claimed in the suit e.g. injunction (v)

"At any stage of the suit"—This means before decree as indicated by the words in full of the claim and the subsequent rules See notes to r 3 below Execution proceedings

Payment into Court and insolvency of defendant—In England it has been held that when money is paid into Court admitting liability the plaintiff in the event of the defendant's bankruptcy is a secured creditor in respect of it and when liability is denied he is a secured creditor to the extent to which his claim is admitted by the trustee in bankruptcy or proved (w)

Form—For form of notice, see App H, form no 3

“Unless the Court otherwise directs”—These words show that the Court has a discretion to refuse to allow monies to be paid out. That discretion however, should be exercised reasonably. Where the money sued for and paid into Court is due on a promissory note it would be unreasonable in the absence of special circumstances not to allow the plaintiff to take the money out. The fact that the payment into Court is accompanied by a denial of liability on the ground of minority is not such a circumstance (x). Where there are conflicting claims as where the amount deposited in Court is claimed by different parties no party can withdraw the amount without an order of the Court (y).

3. [S 378] No interest shall be allowed to the plaintiff on any sum deposited by the defendant from the date of the receipt of such notice, whether the sum deposited is in full of the claim or falls short thereof.

Interest on deposit not allowed to plaintiff after notice

Tender—A plea of tender before action must to stop interest be accompanied by a payment into Court after action otherwise the tender is ineffectual (z).

Execution proceedings—The principle of this rule applies to proceedings in execution therefore if money is paid into Court by a judgment debtor no interest should be allowed to the decree holder on the amount so paid although such amount may not in fact be the whole amount due under the decree (a).

4. [S 379.] (1) Where the plaintiff accepts such amount as satisfaction in part only of his claim, he may prosecute his suit for the balance, and, if the Court decides that the deposit by the defendant was a full satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff shall pay the costs of the suit incurred after the deposit and the costs incurred previous thereto, so far as they were caused by excess in the plaintiff's claim.

Procedure where plaintiff accepts deposit as satisfaction in part

(2) Where the plaintiff accepts such amount as satisfaction in full of his claim, he shall present to the Court a statement to that effect, and such statement shall be filed and the Court shall pronounce judgment accordingly, and, in directing by whom the costs of each party are to be paid, the Court shall consider which of the parties is most to blame for the litigation.

"Unless the Court otherwise directs."—These words show that the Court has a discretion to refuse to allow monies to be paid out. That discretion however, should be exercised reasonably. Where the money sued for and paid into Court is due on a promissory note it would be unreasonable in the absence of special circumstances not to allow the plaintiff to take the money out. The fact that the payment into Court is accompanied by a denial of liability on the ground of minority is not such a circumstance (x). Where there are conflicting claims as where the amount deposited in Court is claimed by different parties no party can withdraw the amount without an order of the Court (y).

3. [S. 378.] No interest shall be allowed to the plaintiff on any sum deposited by the defendant from the date of the receipt of such notice, whether the sum deposited is in full of the claim or falls short thereof.

ORDER XXV.

Security for Costs

1. [Ss 380, 382.] (1) Where, at any stage of a suit, it appears to the Court that a sole plaintiff is, or (when there are more plaintiffs than one) that all the plaintiffs are residing out of British India, and that such plaintiff does not, or that no one of such plaintiff does, possess any sufficient immoveable property within British India other than the property in suit, the Court may, either of its own motion or on the application of any defendant, order the plaintiff or plaintiffs, within a time fixed by it, to give security for the payment of all costs incurred and likely to be incurred by any defendant.

(2) Whoever leaves British India under such circumstances as to afford reasonable probability that he will not be forthcoming whenever he may be called upon to pay costs shall be deemed to be residing out of British India within the meaning of sub rule (1).

(3) On the application of any defendant in a suit for the payment of money, in which the plaintiff is a woman, the Court may at any stage of the suit make a like order if it is

2. 25, r. 1. satisfied that such plaintiff does not possess any sufficient immoveable property within British India.

Object of the rule.—The object of the rule is to provide for the protection of defendants in certain cases where, in the event of success, they may have difficulty in realizing their costs from the plaintiff (b)

Application of the rule—Security for the costs of a defendant may be required from a plaintiff in the following two cases —

- I (a) Where the plaintiff resides out of British India, or where there are two or more plaintiffs, all the plaintiffs reside out of British India, and
- (b) where none of the plaintiffs has sufficient immoveable property within British India other than the property in suit
- II (a) Where the plaintiff is a woman,
- (b) where her suit is for the payment of money, and
- (c) she does not possess sufficient immoveable property within British India

Discretion of Court in requiring security for costs from non-resident plaintiffs—The word “may” implies discretion. In the exercise of this discretion the Court will not order security for costs from a plaintiff residing out of British India in cases in which he cannot be rendered liable for the defendant’s costs e.g., an administration suit by the plaintiff as a creditor or a legatee in which the plaintiff’s claim is admitted, or a suit on a mortgage or a promissory note where there is no defence. In such cases no security for costs will be ordered even though the plaintiff resides out of British India, and has not sufficient immoveable property within British India, not even though the plaintiff be a woman (c)

“Resides” —The “residence” intended in this rule is residence under such circumstances as will afford a reasonable probability that the plaintiff will be forthcoming when the suit is decided. Mere presence in British territory at the time of suit is not “residence” (d). Thus a resident of a Native State staying in Bombay for the sole purpose of taking proceedings to get his wife back cannot be said to “reside” in Bombay within the meaning of this rule (e). See notes to s. 20, “Actually and voluntarily resides,” on p. 87 above

Trading corporations—The “residence and domicile” of an incorporated trading company are determined by the situation of its principal place of business. By the principal place of business is meant the place where the administrative business of the company is conducted. This may not be the place where its manufacture or other operations are carried on. Dicey’s Conflict of Laws, 3rd ed, p. 164

British India—Aden is within British India (f). The Kathiawar States are not within British India (g), nor is the Cantonment of Wadhwan (h), nor the Cantonment of Secunderabad (i), nor the Rajkot Civil Station (j). See notes to s. 1, “British India,” p. 2 above

“Immoveable property.”—A plaintiff who is entitled under a will to a beneficial interest in a part of the surplus income derived from immoveable property cannot be said to possess immovable property within the meaning of this rule (k). Leasehold property = immovable property within the meaning of this rule (l).

Poverty of plaintiff—Mere poverty is no ground for requiring a plaintiff to give security for the costs of the suit (m). But it is otherwise if he is not the real litigant and is suing on behalf of another who is not a party to the suit (n). In a recent Bombay case a suit was brought by a Parsi father and his minor daughter as plaintiffs for damages for the defendant's breach of his promise to marry the daughter. The father was an undischarged insolvent and it was alleged that the suit was really the father's suit and that he was seeking to make money out of his daughter's engagement. The Court upon these grounds ordered the father to furnish security for the costs of the defendant (o). In the last mentioned case the Court relied upon a dictum of Bowen, L. J. in Correll v. Taylor (p) that in order to prevent abuse if an insolvent sues as nominal plaintiff for the benefit of somebody else he must give security.

Inherent power to order security for costs—The case for security for costs from a puppet plaintiff is clearly outside the scope of this rule. It can only be brought in under the inherent power of the Court. In one case the Calcutta High Court said that it had such power (q). In a later case the same High Court said that the Court had no such power the reason given being that the inherent power of the Court cannot be invoked in matters for which the Code does actually provide (r). See notes above. Poverty of plaintiff.

Where leave has been granted to plaintiff to sue as a pauper—The Court has no power under this rule to require security for costs from a person to whom leave has been granted under O. 33 r. 8 to sue as a pauper, for to do so would be to render the leave nugatory (s). If an order is made requiring a plaintiff to furnish security for the costs of the defendant and leave is subsequently granted to the plaintiff to continue the suit as a pauper the order ceases to operate as regards antecedent costs, provided leave is granted before the time limited for giving security has expired (t).

Where the plaintiff is a minor—The power as to requiring security for costs is a discretionary one and except in exceptional cases neither a minor plaintiff nor his or her next friend should be required to give security for costs (u) not even if both the minor and his next friend are residing out of British India and do not own immovable property in British India (v).

Where the plaintiff is a woman—The necessity for the provisions of sub r. (3) arises from the provisions of s. 56 by which it is enacted that no woman can be arrested or detained in the civil prison in execution of a decree for the payment of money (w). But the Court has a discretion in the matter and in the exercise of its discretion it will not as a general rule require security for costs from a woman plaintiff, if the result of such an order will be practically to defeat the suit where it has been instituted bona fide (x).

rr 1, 2.

"Suit for the payment of money"—The words "suit for the payment of money" have been substituted for the words "suit for money" which occurred in the old section. Suits which are not exclusively for the payment of money, but which will result in a decree for the payment of money on the relief sought, are "suits for the payment of money" within the meaning of this rule (y). Thus a suit to recover possession of specific moveable property (e.g., ornaments), or in the alternative the money value of such property, is a "suit for the payment of money" within the meaning of this rule (z). But a suit for the administration of an estate which consists largely of immovable property is not a "suit for the payment of money." Such a suit is in fact a suit relating to immovable property, though it may ultimately be necessary to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds in money (a).

Cross-claim and security for costs.—There is no hard and fast rule of practice which prevents the Court from making an order for security for costs against a person residing out of British India who, upon being sued in British India sets up a cross claim either by counter claim or by cross suit. It is for the Court to consider, in the exercise of its discretion, whether, having regard to the circumstances of the particular case, the cross claim must be treated as made, substantially, by way of defence to the suit against the claimant, or whether it must be regarded as being substantially in the nature of an independent claim made in respect of matters foreign to that suit, and therefore one with regard to which security for costs ought to be ordered to be given (b).

Appeal.—There is no appeal under the Code from an order made under this rule, but there is one from an order rejecting an application under r 2 (2) below for an order to set aside the dismissal of the suit. But an order under this rule made by a Chartered High Court requiring a plaintiff to give security for the costs of a suit is a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and is therefore appealable (c).

Revision.—Where a Court passes an order under this rule requiring a plaintiff to give security for costs in a case to which the rule does not apply, e.g., where an order is erroneously made for security for costs against a woman in a suit which is not a "suit for the payment of money" within the meaning of sub s (3) the case is one of illegal exercise of jurisdiction within the meaning of s 115, and the High Court has power to interfere in revision (d).

Other cases in which security for costs may be required under the Code.—See O 22, r 8 [plaintiff's insolvency]; O 37, r 4 [summary suit on negotiable instruments]; O 41, r 5 [security on stay of execution]; O 41, r 6 [security where execution is granted of a decree appealed from]; O 41, r 10 [security from appellant]; and O 45, r 7 [security on grant of certificate of leave to appeal to the Privy Council].

2. [S. 381.] (1) In the event of such security not being furnished within the time fixed, the Court shall make an order dismissing the suit unless the plaintiff or plaintiffs are permitted to withdraw therefrom

(2) Where a suit is dismissed under this rule, the plaintiff may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and, if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from furnishing the security within the time allowed, the Court shall set aside the dismissal upon such terms as to security, costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit

(3) The dismissal shall not be set aside unless notice of such application has been served on the defendant

Res Judicata—A plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed under this rule for failure to furnish security is not precluded from instituting a fresh suit on the same cause of action (e) or from pleading the subject matter of such suit in answer to any other suit instituted against him (f) A sues B for the cancellation of a promissory note alleging that the note was obtained by fraud. The suit is dismissed under this rule for failure to furnish security. This does not preclude A from instituting a fresh suit for the cancellation of the note nor does it preclude him if a suit is brought against him by B to recover the amount of the note from pleading fraud in answer to such suit

Limitation—An application by a plaintiff for an order to set aside a dismissal for failure to furnish security for costs must be made within 30 days from the date of dismissal [Limitation Act 1908 s. 1 art 163]

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit see O 43 r 1 (n)

ORDER XXVI

COMMISSIONS

Commissions to examine witnesses

1 [S 383] Any Court may in any suit issue a commission for the examination on interrogatories or otherwise of any person resident within the local limits of its jurisdiction who is exempted under this Code from attending the Court or who is from sickness or infirmity unable to attend it

(a) as to the issue of a commission to examine witness

Power of Court to issue commissions See s. 3 above

Cases in which commissions may be issued—A commission can only be issued in the cases specified in this rule and rules 4 and 5 below and in no other case. Therefore a commission should not be issued for the examination of the head of a mutt though it may be alleged by him that it is derogatory to a person in his position to appear personally in Court as a witness. But where the other side applies to the Court to summon the head of a mull as a witness for him, the Court may, if it thinks that the application is vexatious, refuse the application and allow the head of the mull to be examined on commission (g)

Persons exempted from attending the Court—Amongst those so exempted are women who according to the custom and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public (see s 132). Such women ought to be examined on commission even though they may have appeared in public before (f) and though an allegation of immorality is made against them (i). A woman may have entirely abandoned the protection of the parda and yet she may be exempted under s 132 from giving evidence in Court if the Court is satisfied having regard to the class and community to which she belongs that she should not be compelled to appear in the witness box (j). A religious preceptor is not one of the persons exempted from attending the Court (k).

Sickness or infirmity—If sickness or infirmity is alleged, the character and gravity of that sickness or infirmity have got to be assessed and the risk consequent upon a refusal to issue a commission will have to be taken into consideration. At the same time the importance of having witnesses present before the Court should not altogether be lost sight of (l).

Arbitration—It is competent to the Court to issue a commission for the examination of witnesses, though the matters in difference in the suit have been referred to arbitration under Schedule II of this Code (m).

Appeal—See notes to rule 4 below 'Appeal'

2 [S. 384.] An order for the issue of a commission for the examination of a witness may be made by the Court either of its own motion or on the application, supported by affidavit or otherwise, of any party to the suit or of the witness to be examined

- (b) any person who is about to leave such limits before the date on which he is required to be examined in Court , and
- (c) any civil or military officer of the Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service

(2) Such commission may be issued to any Court, not being a High Court, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person resides, or to any pleader or other person whom the Court issuing the commission may appoint

(3) The Court on issuing any commission under this rule shall direct whether the commission shall be returned to itself or to any subordinate Court.

Form—For form of commission to examine absent witness, see App H form no 7.

May issue—The Court has a discretion to grant or refuse a commission (n) But the discretion must be exercised judicially (o) If the Court fails to exercise the discretion judicially such failure of itself is not a ground for interfering with the decree in appeal the appellate Court should not interfere, unless it is shown that, if the lower Court has exercised the discretion judicially, the decision would have been different from what it was (p)

Commission for the examination of witnesses—“Ordinarily, in the case of a witness not under the control of the party asking for a commission, who resides beyond the limit fixed under O 16 r 19 (b), a commission should issue as a matter of right, unless the Court is satisfied that the party is merely abusing its authority to issue process It is not for the Court to decide whether the party will be benefited thereby or not, that is a matter entirely for the party” (pp)

Plaintiff asking for a commission to examine himself—Suppose a plaintiff, residing in Delhi, institutes a suit in Bombay, and then applies to the Bombay Court for the issue of a commission for his examination in Delhi In such a case the Court will refuse the application unless a very strong case is made out, because the Bombay tribunal is chosen by the plaintiff himself (q)

Defendant asking for a commission to examine himself—The case, however, is different where the application is made by a defendant, and especially a defendant lawfully resident out of the jurisdiction, according to the ordinary course of his life and business The Court will not regard the case of a defendant with the same strictness as the case of a plaintiff (r) See preceding paragraph

Appeal—It was held at one time by the High Court of Madras that an appeal lay under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order made by a single Judge of the High Court directing the issue of a commission (s) as well as from an order refusing a commission (t), on the ground that such order amounted to a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. But those decisions have since been overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court (u). In Bombay it has been held that no appeal lies from an order directing the issue of a commission, the reason given being that such an order is merely an interlocutory order and not a "judgment" within the meaning of the said clause (v). The High Courts of Calcutta (w) and Rangoon (w²) have held that no appeal lies from an order refusing a commission.

Revision—An order refusing the application of a defendant to be examined on commission is in a proper case open to revision (x). Similarly an order granting the application of the plaintiff to be examined on commission may in a proper case be revised by the High Court (y).

Commission or request to examine witness not within British India

Where any Court to which application is made for the issue of a commission for the examination of a person residing at any place not within British India is satisfied that the evidence of such person is necessary, the Court may issue such commission or a letter of request.

"Or a letter of request"—These words are new. See s 77 above. For form of letter of request, see App H, form no 8.

Evidence of a foreign witness—Evidence of a foreign witness taken in foreign territory (e.g. Chandernagore) under a commission issued under this rule and executed in accordance with the provisions of r 17 below, is clearly admissible (z).

Revision—An order made under this rule refusing the issue of a commission is not subject to revision under s 115 (a).

6. [S. 388.]

Court to examine witness pursuant to commission

Every Court receiving a commission for the examination of any person shall examine him or cause him to be examined pursuant thereto.

Examination on commission—A party who has not joined in a commission is entitled to cross examine the witness examined under the commission (b). Evidence taken on commission without full opportunity for complete cross examination should not be admitted (c). But where the Court is satisfied that the cross examination of any witness on commission is being unnecessarily prolonged it will order such cross examination to be concluded within a certain time (d).

[S. 389.] Where a commission has been duly executed, it shall be returned, together with the evidence taken under it, to the Court from which it was issued, unless the order for issuing the commission has otherwise directed, in which case the commission shall be returned in terms of such order, and the commission and the return thereto and the evidence taken under it shall (subject to the provisions of the next following rule) form part of the record of the suit.

Return of commission with depositions of witnesses
Evidence taken on commission shall form part of the record of the suit—See notes to r 11 below, "Reading depositions in evidence"

8 [S. 390] Evidence taken under a commission shall not be read as evidence in the suit without the consent of the party against whom the same is offered unless—

When depositions may be read in evidence

- (a) the person who gave the evidence is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or dead or unable from sickness or infirmity to attend to be personally examined, or exempted from personal appearance in Court, or is a civil or military officer of the Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service, or
- (b) the Court in its discretion dispenses with the proof of any of the circumstances mentioned in clause (a), and authorizes the evidence of any person being read as evidence in the suit, notwithstanding proof that the cause for taking such evidence by commission has ceased at the time of reading the same.

"Or is a civil or military officer public service."—These words which occur in cl (a) are new.

Reading depositions in evidence.—According to the practice prevailing on the Original Side of the High Court of Calcutta, evidence taken on commission is not treated as evidence in the suit until the same has been tendered and read as evidence in the suit by the party on whose behalf it has been taken. It therefore follows that evidence taken under a commission at the instance of one party cannot be used by the opposite party until it is tendered and read as evidence by the party on whose behalf it has been taken (c). On the other hand, the practice in the Courts in the mofussil of Calcutta is to treat the deposition of a witness examined on commission as evidence in the case even though it has not been formally tendered and this practice has been said to be not only perfectly consistent but also in strict accordance with the provisions of rules 7 and 8 (f)

Admissibility of documents—Where a document is produced before a Commissioner, and no objection is taken to its admissibility no such objection can be taken before the Court hearing the suit to which the commission is returned (g) But if the admissibility of the document is objected to before the Commissioner the party who has objected to the admissibility of the document before the Commissioner on one ground is not precluded from objecting to its admissibility before the Court on any other ground (f)

Commissions to examine accounts

11 [S 394] In any suit in which an examination or adjustment of accounts is necessary, the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit directing him to make such examination or adjustment

Commission to examine

Commission to examine accounts—The words of this rule clearly indicate that no order can be made for the appointment of a commissioner unless the examination or adjustment of accounts is considered necessary (p)

The commissioner to whom a suit is referred by a Judge on the original side of the High Court of Bombay is entitled to decide questions of law which may arise while taking accounts (g)

Form—For form of commission to examine accounts see App H form no 9

12 [S 395] (1) The Court shall furnish the Commissioner with such part of the proceedings and such instructions as appear necessary, and the instructions shall distinctly specify whether the Commissioner is merely to transmit the proceedings which he may hold on the inquiry, or also to report his own opinion on the point referred for his examination

Court to give Commissioner necessary instructions

(2) The proceedings and report (if any) of the Commissioner shall be evidence in the suit, but where the Court has reason to be dissatisfied with them, it may direct such further inquiry as it shall think fit

Proceedings and report to be evidence Court may direct further inquiry

Commissions to make partitions

Commission to make partition of immoveable property

Procedure of Commission shall, after such inquiry as may be necessary, divide the property into as many shares as may be directed by the order

under which the commission was issued, and shall allot such shares to the parties, and may, if authorized thereto by the said order, award sums to be paid for the purpose of equalizing the value of the shares

(2) The Commissioner shall then prepare and sign a report or the Commissioners (where the commission was issued to more than one person and they cannot agree) shall prepare and sign separate reports appointing the share of each party and distinguishing each share (if so directed by the said order) by metes and bounds. Such report or reports shall be annexed to the commission and transmitted to the Court, and the Court, after hearing any objections which the parties may make to the report or reports, shall confirm, vary or set aside the same

(3) Where the Court confirms or varies the report or reports it shall pass a decree in accordance with the same as confirmed or varied, but where the Court sets aside the report or reports it shall either issue a new commission or make such other order as it shall think fit

Alterations in the rule—The words shall confirm vary or set aside the same at the end of sub rule (2) and the whole of sub rule (3) have been substituted for the words shall either quash the same and issue a new commission, or (where the Commissioners agree in their report) pass a decree in accordance therewith. Under the wording of the old section it was held that the Court must either accept the report or reject the report and that it had no power to vary it (1). The word vary has been added into sub rule (2) to enable the Court to modify the report in a proper case

Resistance to Commissioner—Where a commission has been issued to make a partition, the circumstance that the plaintiff or his agent resists the Commissioner is not sufficient to justify the dismissal of the suit (2)

17. [S. 399] (1) The provisions of this Code relating to the summoning, attendance and examination of witnesses, and to the remuneration of, and penalties to be imposed upon witnesses, shall apply to persons required to give evidence or to produce documents under this Order whether the commission in execution of which they are so required has been issued by a Court situate within or by a Court situate beyond the limits of British India, and for the purposes of this rule the Commissioner shall be deemed to be a Civil Court

(2) A Commissioner may apply to any Court (not being a High Court) within the local limits of whose jurisdiction a witness resides for the issue of any process which he may find it necessary to issue to or against such witness, and such Court may, in its discretion, issue such process as it considers reasonable and proper

Sub rule (2)—This sub rule is new. It enables the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction a witness resides to issue a summons for his examination on the application of the Commissioner. In the absence of any such provision in the old section, it was held that where a witness failed to appear before a Commissioner pursuant to a notice issued by him the only course left open to the Commissioner was to return the commission to the Court from which it was issued and the latter Court would then send the commission to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the witness to be examined resided (u)

ORDER XXVIII.

Suits by or against Military Men.

1. [S. 466.] (1) Where any officer or soldier actually serving the Government in a military capacity is a party to a suit, and cannot obtain leave of absence for the purpose of prosecuting or defending the suit in person, he may authorize any person to sue or defend in his stead.

Officers or soldiers who cannot obtain leave may authorize any person to sue or defend for them

(2) The authority shall be in writing and shall be signed by the officer or soldier in the presence of (a) his commanding officer, or the next subordinate officer, if the party is himself the commanding officer, or (b) where the officer or soldier is serving in military staff employment, the head or other superior officer of the office in which he is employed. Such commanding or other officer shall countersign the authority, which shall be filed in Court.

(3) When so filed the countersignature shall be sufficient proof that the authority was duly executed, and that the officer or soldier by whom it was granted could not obtain leave of absence for the purpose of prosecuting or defending the suit in person.

Explanation.—In this Order the expression “commanding officer” means the officer in actual command for the time being of any regiment, corps, detachment or depot to which the officer or soldier belongs.

- 2 [S. 465.] Any person authorized by an officer or a soldier to prosecute or defend a suit in his stead may prosecute or defend it in person in the same manner as the officer or soldier could do if present; or he may appoint a pleader to prosecute or defend the suit on behalf of such officer or soldier.

Person so authorized may act personally or appoint pleader

3. [S. 467.] Processes served upon any person authorized by an officer or a soldier under rule 1 or upon any pleader appointed as aforesaid by such person shall be as effectual as if they had been served on the party in person.

Service on person so authorized or on his pleader, to be good service

Suits by or against Corporations.

D. 29, r. 1.

1. [S. 435.] In suits by or against a corporation, any pleading may be signed and verified on behalf of the corporation by the secretary or by any director or other principal officer of the corporation who is able to depose to the facts of the case.

subscription and verification of pleading

Foreign corporation—The procedure prescribed by this rule applies to foreign corporations as well. It is not necessary before a foreign corporation can claim the benefit of this rule that it must be registered under the Indian Companies' Act or under an Act of Parliament (1). Thus a plaint in a suit by the Singer Manufacturing Company, which is a company incorporated in the United States, may be verified by an agent holding a general power of attorney from the company as a "principal officer" of the company within the meaning of this rule (2). The fact that the Agent also acts for another foreign firm is not material (2).

Suit by an unregistered or unincorporated society—A suit by an unregistered or unincorporated society must be brought in the names of all the members of the society (3). Where there are numerous members, the suit may be instituted by one or more of them with the permission of the Court on behalf of all (O 1, r 8)

Suit by or against a registered company.—A suit by or against a registered company must be instituted in the name of the company. A suit against two companies described as "the India General S N and R Co, Ltd, and the Rivers S N Co, Ltd, by their joint agent A E Rogers," is substantially a suit against Rogers and it is in contravention of the provisions of this rule. The words "by their joint agent A E Rogers" should be omitted (4).

"Other principal officer of the corporation."—The manager at Lucknow of the local branch of the Delhi and London Bank was authorized by a power of attorney to manage the affairs of the Bank, and to substitute any person for himself. In pursuance of this power he gave a power of attorney to the accountant of the Bank to manage the affairs of the Bank, but such power omitted words giving authority to sue. It was held that the accountant was, under the circumstances, the principal officer of the Bank, and that he could, as such, sign and verify the plaint in a suit filed by the Bank (5).

"Who is able to depose to the facts of the case."—Where a pleading is signed and verified by a director, secretary or other principal officer of a corporation, it must be stated in the pleading that he is a director secretary or principal officer of the Company, and that he is able to depose to the facts of the case. If there is no such statement in the pleading, the pleading should not be admitted unless the defect is made good by an affidavit containing such statement (a)

Dismissal of suit.—Where in the case of a suit by a corporation, the plaint is signed and verified by an officer other than a principal officer of the corporation, the suit should be dismissed (b). Similarly, the suit should be dismissed if in the case of an unregistered or unincorporated society, the suit is brought in the names of some only of the members of the society (c). See notes above

2. [S 436] Subject to any statutory provision regulating service of process, where the suit is against a corporation, the summons may be served—

Service on corporation

- (a) on the secretary or on any director, or other principal officer of the corporation, or
- (b) by leaving it or sending it by post addressed to the corporation at the registered office, or if there is no registered office then at the place where the corporation carries on business

Service by post—The language of the old section has been enlarged so as to allow of service by post on corporations and by this means the rule is brought into line with the provisions of s 148 of the Indian Companies Act 7 of 1913

3. [S 436, last para.] The Court may, at any stage of the suit, require the personal appearance of the secretary or of any director, or other principal officer of the corporation who may be able to answer material questions relating to the suit

Power to require personal attendance of officer of corporation

ORDER XXX

Suits by or against Firms and Persons carrying on business in names other than their own

1. [New. R S. C., O. 48A, r 1.] (1) Any two or more persons claiming or being liable as partners and carrying on business in British India may sue or be sued in the name of the firm

(if any) of which such persons were partners at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, and any party to a suit may in such case apply to the Court for a statement of the names and addresses of the persons who were, at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, partners in such firm, to be furnished and verified in such manner as the Court may direct.

(2) Where persons sue or are sued as partners in the name of their firm under sub-rule (1), it shall, in the case of any pleading or other document required by or under this Code to be signed, verified or certified by the plaintiff or the defendant, suffice if such pleading or other document is signed, verified or certified by any one of such persons

Suits by or against firms—The whole of this Order is new. It is a reproduction almost verbatim of the principal rules comprised in O 48A of the English rules. The rules as to the attachment of partnership property and the execution of decrees against firms will be found in O 21, rr 49 and 50 above.

In applying English decisions under the corresponding rules in England, it must be remembered that there is a distinction between the English and the Indian law as to the liability of partners. According to the English law, the liability is joint according to the Indian law it is joint and several. See Indian Contract Act, 1872, ss 42 to 45.

This order deals with the mode of suing firms. Rule 1 provides that two or more persons claiming or being liable as partners may sue or be sued in the firm name. Rule 3 provides that where a suit is instituted by partners in the name of their firm, the plaintiffs shall on demand in writing by the defendant, declare in writing the names and places of residence of the partners. If the plaintiffs fail to comply with the demand the Court may stay further proceedings. If the demand is complied with the suit will proceed as if all the partners had been named as plaintiffs in the plaint. As regards signature and verification where a suit is brought in a firm name, it is provided by r 1, sub r (2), that it will suffice if the pleading or any other document required to be signed or verified is signed or verified by any one of the partners. It is not necessary that all the partners should sign or verify it. As regards appearance in a suit brought against a firm, it is to be noted that a firm cannot appear as a firm, and the partners should therefore appear individually in their own names, but all subsequent proceedings should continue in the name of the firm (r 1). Where a suit is brought against a firm, no partner can put in a personal defence (d). He can only file a written statement for and in the name of the firm. The decree also must be in the name of the firm (e), though all the partners may not have appeared (f).

Minor—The fact that one of the members of a partnership, which is sued in the firm name, is a minor does not prevent judgment being obtained against the firm and execution issuing thereon against the property of the partnership (g). In this connection it is to be noted that a minor cannot become a partner by contract, but he may be admitted to the benefits of a partnership. He cannot be made personally liable for any obligation of the firm, but his share in the property of the firm is liable for the obligations of the firm see Indian Contract Act, 1872, s 247 The share of which s 247 speaks is no more than a right to participate in the property of the firm after its obligations are satisfied (A). A partner suing in the firm's name may refer the suit to arbitration and if a minor is a member of the firm his share will be bound by the reference (i). See O 21, r 50

Suit against "manager and owner" of a firm—In a Bombay case (j) the plaintiff filed a suit against "C K, manager and owner of the shop of M C," but as C K was already dead before the suit was filed plaintiff applied to bring the heirs of C K on the record. The period of limitation had by that time expired and so the lower Court dismissed the suit as time barred. The High Court reversed the decree on the ground that the suit was in substance a suit against the firm.

“At the time of the accruing of the cause of action”—These words show that a suit may be brought by or against a firm in the firm name though the firm may have been dissolved before the date of the suit, provided the cause of action arose before dissolution (k)

"Carrying on business in British India"—This rule applies to all partnerships carrying on business in British India. Therefore a firm which carries on business in British India may be sued in the firm name under this rule, although it be a foreign firm the members of which are resident out of the jurisdiction (l). "The only question to be considered in order to see whether the case comes within the rule is whether the firm carries on business [in British India]" (m). If it does, the partners may be sued in the firm name. If it does not, the partners cannot be sued in the firm name (n). The expression "carry on business" has no special legal meaning. It must be interpreted in the ordinary business sense (o). A firm in England cannot be said to carry on business in Bombay, merely because it has employed an agent in Bombay to collect orders for the firm, the agent having no authority to accept or reject the orders (p). It does not make any difference that the name of the firm is affixed to the agent's office (q). See notes to s. 20, "Carries on business," p. 88.

Statement of names and addresses—Rule 2 enables a defendant to obtain disclosure of the names of the partners in a plaintiff firm by a statement in writing by the plaintiffs or their pleader. Under r 1 any party to the suit may apply to the Court for a statement of the names of the partners in the plaintiff or defendant firm to be furnished and verified in such manner as the Court may direct (r). It is perhaps not altogether easy to reconcile the two rules, but r 2 is applicable to the case only of plaintiffs, whereas r 1 applies generally (s). Where an affidavit has been filed under r 1 or a declaration made under r 2, the Court has no power to require the deponent or declarant to attend to be cross examined on the affidavit or declaration, nor has the Court any power to direct the separate trial of an issue as to whether a person whose name has been disclosed in the affidavit or declaration was a partner in

Disclosure of partners names—See notes to r 1 above Statement of names and addresses p 799 If the plaintiff firm has not made a full disclosure of their partners the proper procedure is not to dismiss the suit but to allow the firm to put in a further declaration making a full disclosure, and thus remedy the defect (v) as the Court may direct; and such service shall be deemed O 30, r 50 good service upon the firm so sued, whether all or any of the partners are within or without British India.

Provided that, in the case of a partnership which has been dissolved to the knowledge of the plaintiff before the institution of the suit, the summons shall be served upon every person within British India whom it is sought to make liable.

Service of summons.—This rule is to be read with r 1 above and with O 21, r 50. It applies only to suits against partners in the name of their firm. It provides a special mode of service upon firms carrying on business in British India, whether the partners reside within or without British India (w). One mode of service authorized by the rule is service upon any one or more of the partners, the other is service at the principal place of business of the partnership, within British India, upon the manager of such business. If the summons is not served in either of these ways, the service is irregular (z). If it is served in either of these ways, the service is good service upon the firm whether all or any of the partners are within or without British India. The service being good service upon the firm, any decree that may be passed in the suit against the firm may be executed against the property of the firm. When the firm has been dissolved, the only method of service is under clause (a) on a partner (y), and if service by registered post has been ordered, the registered letter should be addressed to a partner and not to the firm name at the place where the business used to be carried on (yy).

If the service is effected in the first mode prescribed by the rule, that is, if the service is upon a partner, it is good service upon the firm as well as upon that partner personally, but it is not service upon any other member of the firm so as to make such member "a person who has been individually served as a partner," etc., within the meaning of O 21, r 50, sub r (1), cl (c). If the service is effected in the second mode prescribed by the rule, that is, upon a manager at the place of partnership business, and the manager is not a partner, the service is good service upon the firm, but it is not service upon any member of the firm so as to make such member "a person who has been individually served as a partner," etc., within the meaning of O 21, r 50, sub r (1), cl (c) (z). This distinction is important for the purposes of execution, for, as we have seen in O 21, r 50, where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution can at once issue without leave of court against the property of the firm and also against the separate property of any individual partner who was served with the writ. But execution cannot be issued without leave of Court against the separate property of any partner who was not served with the writ and did not appear (a).

Dissolution of partnership before institution of suit.—Where there has been dissolution to the knowledge of the plaintiff, he cannot make an outgoing partner liable, unless he served the writ of summons upon him. A sues the firm of B & Co upon a promissory note passed to him by the firm. When the note was given, the firm consisted of three partners, X, Y and Z, but Z had retired from the firm before the institution of the suit, and A knew before he instituted the suit that Z had so retired. Z resides in British India, but he is not individually served as required by the proviso to this rule. Z does not appear. A obtains a decree against the firm. The decree cannot be executed against the personal property of Z. Nor can A apply under O. 21, r. 50, sub-r (2), for leave to execute the decree against the personal property of Z. The reason is that the present rule overrides O. 21, r. 50, and the latter rule only applies where there has been no dissolution to the knowledge of the plaintiff (b). The above ruling would not apply to the case of a partner who had left the firm before the institution of the suit without the knowledge of the plaintiff. If the plaintiff was not aware of the dissolution when he filed his suit, the decree binds all the partners in the firm whether they have been served individually or not (c).

Service on manager, subsequent service on partner.—Where a summons is served upon a manager, and subsequently upon a partner, it is the date of the latter service from which time is to be counted for the appearance of the defendant firm (d).

"Principal place at which the partnership business is carried on"—See notes to r. 1 above, "Carrying on business in British India," p. 799.

"As the Court may direct."—These words do not occur in the corresponding English rule. According to the English rule, the summons may be served upon a partner or upon the manager at the plaintiff's option. Under the present rule, it would seem, that the plaintiff has no such option, and that he should obtain the directions of the Court as to the mode of service. It is conceived, however, that omission to obtain such directions would not vitiate the service, but would constitute at the most an "irregularity" within the meaning of s. 99 above.

Notice to be given to the person served as to the capacity in which he is served.—See r. 5 below and notes thereto.

4. [New.] (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 45 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, where two or more persons may sue or be sued in the name of a firm under the foregoing provisions and any of such persons dies, whether before the institution or during the pendency of any suit, it shall not be necessary to join the legal representative of the deceased as a party to the suit.

(2) Nothing in sub-rule (1) shall limit or otherwise affect any right which the legal representative of the deceased may have—

(a) to apply to be made a party to the suit, or

(b) to enforce any claim against the survivor or survivors.

to recover the amount of the note. The suit must under s 45 of the Contract Act be brought by C along with B's legal representative. The effect of the present rule is that where the suit is brought in the firm name it is not necessary to join B's legal representative as a party plaintiff. But the legal representative may apply to be made a party plaintiff. The mere fact that he does not apply will not affect his right to claim the benefit of any decree that may be passed against C.

5 [New R S C, O 48A, r 4] Where a summons is issued to a firm and is served in the manner provided by rule 3, every person upon whom it is served shall be informed by notice in writing given at the time of such service, whether he is served as a partner or as a person having the control or management of the partnership business, or in both characters, and, in default of such notice, the person served shall be deemed to be served as a partner.

Notice in what capacity served

Notice in what capacity served—Where a suit is brought against a firm in the firm name the summons will be issued against the firm. Such summons may be served either upon any one or more of the partners or upon the person in control of the business [r 3]. The present rule provides that the person served should be informed by notice in writing given at the time of service whether he is served as a partner or as a person in management of the business or in both characters. In default of notice the person served will be deemed—not merely presumed—to be served as a partner. If he contends that he is not a partner the proper course for him to adopt is to appear under protest under r 8 below denying that he is a partner. If he does not do so he will be deemed to have been served personally as a partner within the meaning of O 21 r 50 sub r 1 cl (c) and execution may be granted against him personally (e).

Service on manager—If service is effected on the person in control of the business and no notice is served as provided by this rule the service is not effective and cannot be made so [Annual Practice notes to O 48A s 4].

Appearance under protest—Where a summons is served upon a person as a partner but such person appears under protest denying that he is a partner the plaintiff may disregard the appearance altogether and proceed as if the summons had not been served: that is he may have service subsequently effected upon a partner or partners or upon any person having the control of the business as provided by r 3 above. The mere fact that the person served as a partner denies that he is a partner and appears under protest does not preclude the plaintiff from otherwise serving the summons on the firm (r 8 below).

Where a summons is served upon a person both as a partner and manager and such person appears with denial of partnership but does not deny that he is the person in management of the business the plaintiff is entitled to a decree against the firm for the service is then one under s 3 cl. (b) and such service is good service upon the firm.

6. [New. R. S. C. O. A, r. 5] Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, they shall appear individually in their own names, but all subsequent proceedings shall, nevertheless, continue in the name of the firm.

Appearance of partners

Appearance of partners.—Though all proceedings in a suit instituted against a firm in the firm name are to be conducted in the firm name, the partners should, so far as appearance is concerned, appear individually in their own names. The reason of the rule is that a firm cannot appear as a firm. Where a suit is brought against a firm in the firm name, the appearance of one partner is the appearance of the firm (f)

The only persons entitled to appear in a suit against a firm are—

(i) persons who allege they are partners of the firm sued, or were partners at the time the cause of action arose, and

(ii) persons who are served as partners, but deny that they are partners of the firm sued or were partners of the firm at the time the cause of action accrued. Such persons may appear under protest. See rr. 7 and 8 below.

A person served as a manager of the partnership business need not appear unless he is a member of the firm sued (r. 7 below). A managing partner of a business firm has an implied authority, in the ordinary course of business, to appoint solicitors, to defend a suit brought against the firm in the firm name, and to instruct them to enter an appearance for the other partners as well. No suit will therefore lie against the solicitors at the instance of the other partners for entering an appearance in their name without their express authority (g).

The expression "individually" is not synonymous with "in person", hence a partner can be forced under this rule to appear in person (h).

"All subsequent proceedings shall continue in the name of the firm"—Where persons are sued as partners in the firm name, the plaintiff (i) and every subsequent proceeding must be headed with the firm name as defendants. The proceedings in a suit so brought continue in the name of the firm even though the names of the partners are disclosed (j). The written statement must be headed in the firm name, and the decree also must be against the firm in the firm name. The Court cannot in such a suit pass any personal decree against a partner, unless he is sued personally along with the firm (l).

Defence—Where a suit is brought against a firm in the firm name, the claim being against the partnership, the partners ought, if they can agree, to put in one written statement. But if they cannot agree on one defence, each partner is entitled to put in a separate written statement. In any case the written statement should be a written statement of the firm, but where the partners cannot agree on one defence and a partner puts in a separate defence, the proper form would be "written statement of the defendant firm of AB & Co., by XY, one of the partners appearing in the suit." It may be asked, what is the plaintiff to do if he finds a series of inconsistent defences put in by the different partners? The answer is that "to entitle him to judgment against the partnership, he must, to use a homely phrase, beat all the defences—that is to say, he must show and satisfy the judge at the trial that not one of the defences prevents a judgment being entered against the partnership" (l). What would happen if some of the partners did not appear at all? In case, say, one partner alone chooses to appear, he would be entitled and would be bound to put in a written statement for the firm. He might if he choose add "by" so and so, "one of the partners served and appearing", but his defence would be the defence of the firm, and the suit would be tried upon that defence, and in that case judgment could be obtained against the firm. Of course, if the partner chose to put in an improper defence and so rendered the partnership liable in a case where it ought not to be made liable, he might thereby as between himself and his co-partners be committing a breach of duty for which he would be liable to them, but so far as the plaintiff is concerned, the plaintiff would be able to obtain judgment against the firm. A partner is not entitled, in a suit against a firm in the firm name, to put in a personal defence: he can only put in a defence for and in the name of the firm (m). But where a partner is sued personally along with the firm, he may put in a personal defence besides a defence for the firm (n).

Decree.—Where a suit is brought against a firm in the firm name, the decree must be against the firm in the firm name (o). From this it follows that if one of the partners fails to appear, no decree can be passed against him separately for want of appearance (p), and if any one partner does appear, no decree can be passed against the firm for want of appearance (q), the appearance of one partner being the appearance of the firm (r). It can never be said that a decree against a firm is ex parte against one of the partners because he has not appeared. As soon as a decree is passed against a firm the assets of the firm are liable to satisfy it (s). The firm name is only a compendious way of describing in the writ the partners who compose the firm and a plaintiff who sues a firm sues the partners (t). But though the decree against the firm makes them all liable as to the partnership property, it can only be decided in execution proceedings whether a particular partner is personally liable to satisfy the decree (u). See O 21 r 30, and notes to r 8 below. As to minor partner, see notes to r 1, "Minor" on p 798 above.

O. 30, preclude the plaintiff from otherwise serving a summons on
 rr. 8-10. the firm and obtaining a decree against the firm in default of appearance where no partner has appeared.

Appearance under protest—Where a person served with a summons as a partner denies that he is a partner, he may enter appearance under protest under this rule. Where an appearance is entered under protest, its effect is to nullify the service altogether as regards the defendant firm. In such a case the plaintiff may disregard the appearance under protest altogether, and have the summons served upon one who is admittedly a partner or one who has the control or management of the defendant firm as provided by r 11 above, and having obtained a decree against the firm, he may apply for leave to execute it against such person under O 21, r 50. But the plaintiff is not bound to adopt this course. He may take out a chamber summons and contend that the party who appeared under protest is a partner or was a partner at the time the cause of action accrued, and apply on that basis to strike out of such appearance the denial of partnership. See Annual Practice notes to O 48A, rr 4 and 7. In a case where the plaintiff did not take out a summons to decide whether the party appearing under protest was a partner he was allowed an adjournment to serve the firm. But it was not equitable that the claim should be left hanging over the protesting party pending proceedings under O 21, r 50, the Court directed that the issue whether or not he was a partner should be tried in the suit (v).

Party appearing under protest not entitled to dispute liability of firm—In England a party appearing under protest is not allowed to plead in the alternative that if he is a partner [the firm is not liable] (w).

9. [New. R S C., O.48 A, r.10] This order shall apply to suits between a firm and one or more of the partners therein and to suits between firms having one or more partners in common; but no execution shall be issued in such suits except by leave of the Court, and, on an application for leave to issue such execution, all such accounts and enquiries may be directed to be taken and made and directions given as may be just.

Scope of the rule—This rule provides that suits between a firm and one of its members, or between two firms with a common member, may be instituted in the firm name, provided the firms carry on business in British India (r 1). But no execution can be issued in such a suit except by leave of the Court.

10 [New. R. S. C., O 48 A, r. 11.] Any person carrying on business in a name or style other than his own name may be sued in such name or style as if it were a firm name; and, so far as the nature of the case will permit, all rules under this Order shall apply.

Suit against person carrying on business in name other than his own

Scope of the rule—A person trading by himself as a firm or in an assumed or trading name may be sued in his trade name, but he cannot sue in that name (x). The words "as if it were a firm" and "so far as the nature of the case will permit" shew that the case is not identical for one man cannot constitute a firm (y). If a sole proprietor dies, a suit after his death must be brought against his legal representatives (z). It cannot after his death be brought against him in his trade name. If the suit is brought against him in his trade name, the suit is one against a dead man and a nullity (21). If he dies pending the suit, the suit will abate unless his legal representative is brought on the record within 90 days from the date of his death (a). This rule does not enable a plaintiff to sue the proprietor of a newspaper in the name of the newspaper (b).

Non-resident foreigner.—As to the corresponding English rule it has been held that it does not apply where the person carrying on business in a name other than his own is a foreign subject resident out of the jurisdiction, though he may carry on business through an agent within the jurisdiction. The decision proceeded upon the broad ground that an English Court has no jurisdiction over foreigners residing abroad merely because they carry on business within the jurisdiction, and that the words "any person," though large enough to include a foreigner, refer only to an English subject (c). The question as to whether the Courts of this country have jurisdiction over foreigners residing abroad merely because they carry on business here through an agent arose in the recent Privy Council case of Annamalai v. Murugasa (d), but the point was not decided by their Lordships. In both Courts in India it was assumed that the Court had jurisdiction, but their Lordships said: "This assumption appears to their Lordships to require more attention than it had received."

Application of foregoing rules—By the latter part of this rule all the foregoing rules of this Order relating to proceedings against firms are to apply to a person trading in a name other than his own so far as the nature of the case will permit. By virtue of r. 1, this rule does not apply unless the business is carried on in British India. By virtue of rr. 1 and 2, the person sued in his tradename may be required to disclose his real name and private address. By virtue of r. 3, the summons may be served upon the person sued or upon any person having the control or management of the business, but in the latter case execution cannot be issued against the personal property of the persons sued except by leave of the Court [O. 21, r. 50]. As regards appearance the person sued must appear in his own name (r. 6).

ORDER XXXI.

Suits by or against Trustees, Executors and Administrators.

O. 31,
rr 1, 2 or administrator shall represent the persons so interested, and it shall not ordinarily be necessary to make them parties to the suit. But the Court may, if it thinks fit, order them or any of them to be made parties.

Scope of the rule—This rule applies only where the contention is between the beneficiaries and a third person. It does not apply where the contention is between beneficiaries and trustees or between the beneficiaries inter se. In suit between beneficiaries and a third person the trustees sufficiently represent the beneficiaries (e), though the beneficiaries are an unascertained and unascertainable class (f) or persons (g). As to declaratory decrees it is provided by s. 43 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, that a declaration made under s. 42 of that Act is binding where any of the parties are trustees on the persons for whom it is in existence at the date of the declaration such parties would be trustees. Compare M. S. C. 16 r. 8.

When beneficiaries may be added as parties—Beneficiaries should always be made parties when the executors are wholly uninterested in the case or where they have fully administered the estate (h) or where they have an interest adverse to that of the beneficiaries (i). Where a suit was brought by an executor, and the names of the beneficiaries who took possession of the estate pending the suit were substituted as plaintiffs, it was held that it did not amount to a substitution of new plaintiffs within the meaning of s. 22 of the Limitation Act (j).

A purchases certain property at an execution sale in the name of B. If the sale is sought to be set aside by the judgment debtor, A is not a necessary party to the proceeding, regard being had to the provisions of this rule (l).

2 [S. 438] Where there are several trustees, executors or administrators, they shall all be made parties to a suit against one or more of them.

Joinder of trustees, executors and administrators

Provided that the executors who have not proved their testator's will, and trustees, executors and administrators outside British India, need not be made parties.

Trustees—The word "trustees" has been newly added in this rule.

Several trustees, executors or administrators.—This rule applies only to suits against, and not to suits by, trustees, executors or administrators. It provides that all executors who have proved the will should be made parties to the suit. The Court may, however, entertain an application as for a receiver even though all proving executors are not made parties to the suit (l). An executor who has neither proved nor intermeddled with the estate cannot be sued as representing the estate (m). See Indian Succession Act 39 of 1925, sec. 311.

ORDER XXXII.

Suits by or against Minors and Persons of Unsound Mind.

1. [S 440, 1st para] Every suit by a minor shall be instituted in his name by a person who in such suit shall be called the next friend of the minor.

Minor to sue by next friend

Minor.—Every person domiciled in British India who has not completed the age of 18 years is a minor. In the case, however, of a minor of whose person or property a guardian has been appointed by a Court of Justice, or whose property is under the superintendence of a Court of Wards, the age of majority is deemed to have been attained on the minor completing his age of 21 years: see Indian Majority Act IX of 1875, s 3

Object of having next friend or guardian ad litem.—As a minor is deemed incapable of prosecuting or defending a suit himself, it is necessary that his interests in the suit should be watched by an adult person. Such person is, in the case of a minor plaintiff, called his next friend and in the case of a minor defendant his guardian ad litem or guardian for the suit. But neither the next friend nor the guardian ad litem is a party to the suit (p). The next friend of a minor plaintiff is just as much entitled to change his attorney as any other plaintiff who is sui juris (q). As to liability of next friend for costs, see notes below

Title of suit.—Where a suit is brought on behalf of a minor the title of the suit should run thus "A B a minor by his next friend C D v. X Y". Where a suit is brought against a minor, the title of the suit should be "F O v. A B, a minor by his guardian ad litem C D". Where the title of a suit in a case was "A B for self and his minor daughter C D" instead of "A B, and C D a minor by her next friend A B," and the objection was raised for the first time in appeal, it was held that the error did not affect the merits of the case, and that it was not therefore fatal to the suit (r) [s 99]. See notes to r 3 below under the head "Where a minor defendant is substantially represented by a guardian ad litem."

Objection to authority of next friend.—Where a minor plaintiff has a cause of action, no objection to the authority of the next friend through whom the suit is brought will be entertained in appeal (s).

When minor may sue without next friend—A minor may sue in a Presidency Small Cause Court without a next friend, when the amount claimed does not exceed Rs 500, and is due to him for wages or for work done as a servant. Presidency Small Cause Court Act 15 of 1882, s 32

Liability of next friend for costs—Where a suit brought by a minor by his next friend is dismissed, and the Court finds that the suit was not for the benefit of the minor, the Court may direct the next friend personally to pay the costs (f). But if the Court finds that there were reasonable grounds for instituting the suit, and the next friend has acted bona fide, the Court will not mulct the next friend in costs, and will direct the costs to come out of the property of the minor (u).

Suit on behalf of an alleged minor who is not in fact a minor—A suit is instituted on behalf of a person alleged to be a minor, through his next friend. It is found that the plaintiff was not in fact a minor at the date of the institution of the suit. In such a case the suit should, according to Allahabad decisions, be dismissed (v) according to Calcutta (w) and Madras (x) decisions, the suit should not be dismissed, the proper course being to return the plaint for amendment. The latter seems to be the better opinion.

Decree against a major treating him as a minor—A decree passed against a person treating him as a minor while in reality he was a major at the date thereof is not a nullity, consequently, whatever rights he may have to apply to set aside the decree, a sale in execution of the decree cannot be set aside on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree (y). See notes below under the head "estoppel".

Estoppel—A minor who, representing himself to be a major, collects rents and gives receipts therefor, is estopped from recovering again the rents once paid to him by instituting a suit through a next friend (z). Similarly a minor who representing himself to be of full age sells certain property and executes a deed of sale, is estopped from suing to set aside the sale on the ground that he was a minor at the date of sale (a). But if the purchaser knew that the vendor was a minor, the purchaser could not be said to have been misled by the false representation as to the vendor's age and the suit to set aside the sale would not then be barred (b). A Court of Equity will deprive a fraudulent minor of the benefit of the plea of infancy, but he who invokes the aid of the Court must establish not only that a fraud was practised on him by the minor, but that he was deceived into action by the fraud (c). It is clear that if the purchaser knew that the vendor was a minor, he could not be said to have been deceived into action by the minor's misrepresentation as to his age.

If a person alleged to be a minor, but who is not in fact a minor, is sued as a minor by his guardian ad litem, and a decree is passed against him in the suit, he will be estopped from impeaching the validity of the decree as well as the sale on the decree if he was aware of the suit and allowed it to proceed against him (d).

Attorney's Costs—An attorney is entitled to recover from the infant's estate the costs of a proper suit or defence of a suit in which the estate was involved. He is also entitled to have a charge declared on the estate for the amount of his costs (c)

2. [S. 442.] (1) Where a suit is instituted by or on behalf of a minor without a next friend, the defendant may apply to have the plaint taken off the file, with costs to be paid by the pleader or other person by whom it was presented.

Where suit is instituted without next friend plaint to be taken off the file

(2) Notice of such application shall be given to such person, and the Court, after hearing his objections (if any), may make such order in the matter as it thinks fit.

Taking the plaint off the file.—This rule contemplates the case where a suit is instituted by a person who is alleged by the defendant to be a minor without a next friend. In such a case the defendant may apply under this rule to have the plaint taken off the file. To bring his case within the rule, the defendant must show that the plaintiff is a minor and that the suit was instituted without a next friend. Now the fact of minority—

- (i) may either be apparent on the face of the plaint, or
- (ii) it may be ascertained upon objection by the defendant and enquiry by the Court.

In case (i), the practice is to take the plaint off the file (f)

In case (ii), i. e., where the fact of minority is established after evidence has been taken on the point, it may be found—

- (a) that the plaintiff instituted the suit with the knowledge of the fact of minority and with the intention of deceiving the Court and evading the payment of costs in the event of failure, or
- (b) that the plaintiff had no such knowledge or intention

In case (a), the practice according to the Bombay decisions, is to make an order under this rule directing the plaint to be taken off the file (g). According to the Calcutta decisions, the Court should pass a decree dismissing the suit. The Calcutta High Court holds that the procedure prescribed by this rule, namely, taking the plaint off the file applies only to those cases where the fact of minority is apparent on the face of the plaint, that is to say, in case (i), and that it does not apply where the fact of minority is established on enquiry held by the Court upon that point (h). The difference between the practice of the two Courts is important in this way, that while an appeal lies from a decree dismissing a suit, no appeal lies from an order directing a plaint to be taken off the file.

In case (b), the practice is to stay proceedings and to allow sufficient time to enable the minor plaintiff to be represented by a next friend (i).

The Court should take notice of the irregularity and refuse to proceed even if the suit is ex parte (j). If the defendant appears and does not object, the Court should not reject the plaint but should allow the plaintiff time to get himself properly represented (k) When a next friend is appointed the objection that the suit was originally instituted without a next friend can no longer be urged (l) If the plaintiff attains majority before the Court has decided that he is a minor there is no necessity to appoint a next friend (m)

Costs—When a suit is instituted by a minor without a next friend the pleader or any other person presenting the plaint is liable for costs and the Court should not render the property of the minor liable for costs (n)

Decree for a minor in a suit instituted by him without a next friend—Where a suit is instituted by a minor without a next friend, and the defendant does not object to it he will be deemed to have waived his objection. The defendant can not in such a case after a decree has been passed against him, object to the execution of the decree on the ground that the suit was instituted by the minor without a next friend. The absence of a next friend does not make the suit a nullity. The institution of a suit by a minor without a next friend is merely an irregularity which can be waived by the conduct of the defendant (o)

3 [S 446, 1st para, S 456] (1) Where the defendant is a minor the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority, shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor

Guardian for the suit to be appointed by Court for minor defendant

(2) An order for the appointment of a guardian for the suit may be obtained upon application in the name and on behalf of the minor or by the plaintiff

(3) Such application shall be supported by an affidavit verifying the fact that the proposed guardian has no interest in the matters in controversy in the suit adverse to that of the minor and that he is a fit person to be so appointed

(4) No order shall be made on any application under this rule except upon notice to the minor and to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by an authority competent in that behalf, or where there is no such guardian, upon notice to the father or other natural guardian of the minor, or, where there is no father or other natural guardian, to the person in whose care the minor is, and after hearing any objection which may be urged on behalf of any person served with notice under this sub rule

Guardian ad litem—Where a guardian ad litem has once been appointed his appointment endures for the whole of the litigation including proceedings in execution and appeal (p). The Calcutta High Court has held that a guardian ad litem appointed in the original suit does not continue as such in execution proceedings without fresh appointment (q). But it is submitted that this is erroneous for execution proceedings are a continuation of the suit.

A guardian ad litem is not a party to a suit or appeal. Therefore a suit or an appeal is not time-barred, merely because the order appointing a guardian ad litem is not made until after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the suit or appeal (r).

"Proper" person to be appointed guardian ad litem—It is the duty of the Judge himself to decide who is the proper person to be appointed as guardian ad litem (s).

Plea of minority—A sues B. B alleges that he is a minor. In such a case the Court should frame a preliminary issue on the question of minority, and appoint a guardian for the purpose of the enquiry on the question of minority. If the defendant is found to be a minor, a guardian ad litem should be appointed for him, but if he is found to be a major the guardian appointed for the inquiry should cease to act and the defendant may conduct his own case (t). So also if a dispute arises as to whether a minor is the legal representative of a deceased party, the Court should appoint a guardian ad litem and decide the matter (u).

Non representation—The provisions of this rule as to the appointment of a guardian ad litem for a minor defendant are imperative. Hence if a minor is sued without a guardian ad litem, and a decree is passed against him, the decree is a nullity, and it can not be enforced against him (v). For the same reason it cannot operate as res judicata (w).

The Allahabad High Court has held that a minor against whom a decree has been passed without the appointment of a proper guardian ad litem may, if the facts of the case justify, in that very suit (1) appeal from the decree, or (2) apply for a review of judgment, or (3) apply for an order under O 32 r 5 (2), according as the circumstances of the case may permit, or he may bring a regular suit to set aside the decree and the sale (if any) in execution of the decree (x). But he cannot resist execution of the decree on the ground that the decree is a nullity, for a minor not represented by a proper guardian ad litem, as where the guardian ad litem is a person whose interest is adverse to that of the minor [r 4] "cannot be said to be a party" to the suit within the meaning of s 47 above (z).

The Allahabad High Court has held that where a decree in a suit against a minor is set aside in a subsequent suit by the minor on the sole ground that he was not represented by a proper guardian ad litem, the Court whose decree is set aside has inherent power to restore the suit and to proceed with the appointment of a fit and proper person as guardian ad litem for the minor defendant (a). But the Madras High Court has

Substantial representation—When a minor defendant is not represented at all as in the cases referred in the preceding paragraph, he is not a party to the suit and the decree as against him is a nullity That must be distinguished from another class of cases where the Court has recognised a guardian ad litem but has made no formal appointment or has made an appointment which is open to objection owing to some defect of procedure The rule in this latter class of cases is different, for the decree will bind the minor unless it is shewn that the defect of procedure has prejudiced him In this class of cases the leading case is that of Walia v Banke Behari (c) That was a suit brought against a minor, but no order was applied for and none was made for the appointment of a guardian ad litem In the plaint, however, which was admitted by the Court, the mother of the minor was described as his guardian Further, the mother appeared throughout the proceedings in the suit as the minor's guardian A decree was passed against the minor and in the decree and the execution proceedings the mother was described as the minor's guardian In a suit brought by the minor on attaining majority to set aside the decree passed against him on the ground that no guardian ad litem had been appointed as required by the present rule, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council, overruling the decision of the Calcutta High Court, that the Court in which the former suit was instituted had by its action, given sanction to the appearance of the mother as a guardian ad litem, and that the absence of a formal order of appointment was not fatal to the suit, unless it was shewn that the defect in procedure prejudiced the minor Their Lordships observed that there was nothing in the proceedings of that suit to suggest that the interests of the minor were not duly protected by the mother or that the defect in procedure had prejudiced the minor and they accordingly held that the decree was binding upon the minor The particular defects of procedure that have shall operate to render void the presumed representation of the minors in a suit, unless such omission has in fact prejudiced their defence, and such prejudice is not a matter of assumption or presumption but of proof."

Notice—Notice should be served both on the proposed guardian and on the minor and the wishes of the minor should be considered (l).

Service of summons—There is no special provision in the Code for service on minors. Hence where the defendant is a minor, he should be served with the summons in the way provided for service upon adults (l). It is, indeed, doubtful whether service on a guardian ad litem is sufficient service for the purposes of the Code (m). But all notices of applications and other processes in a suit should be served upon the guardian ad litem [See rule 5 below]. As to service in suits brought against wards of Courts of Wards see Bengal Court of Wards Act, 1879, s. 54, and Bombay Court of Wards Act, 1905, s. 34.

Fraud of next friend or guardian ad litem—A decree passed against a minor properly represented is binding upon him as much as a decree passed against an adult, but it is open to the minor to impeach the decree by a suit in cases where the next friend or guardian for the suit has been guilty of fraud or collusion in allowing the decree to be passed against him (n).

Probate proceedings.—Until a contest arises section 141 of the Code is not applicable to a probate proceeding so as to attract the applicability of this Order. But where a will of which probate is sought affects the interests of a minor it may be expedient as a rule of practice to appoint a guardian ad litem (o).

Execution proceedings—The provisions of this order do not directly apply to execution proceedings. The non representation of a minor by a guardian ad litem in execution proceedings is not in itself sufficient to set aside an execution sale (p).

4. [Ss. 445, 457; ss. 440, 443; s. 456, and R S C, O. 65, r. 13.]

Who may act as next friend or be appointed guardian for the suit

(1) Any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor or as his guardian for the suit.

Provided that the interest of such person is not adverse to that of the minor and that he is not, in the case of a next friend, a defendant, or, in the case of a guardian for the suit, a plaintiff.

(2) Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall act as the next friend of the minor or be appointed his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be permitted to act or be appointed, as the case may be.

(3) No person shall without his consent be appointed guardian for the suit.

O. 32, r 4

(4) Where there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit, the Court may appoint any of its officers to be such guardian, and may direct that the costs to be incurred by such officer in the performance of his duties as such guardian shall be borne either by the parties or by any one or more of the parties to the suit, or out of any fund in Court in which the minor is interested, and may give directions for the repayment or allowance of such costs as justice and the circumstances of the case may require.

Code of 1882.—Sub r (1) corresponds to ss 445 and 457 of the Code of 1882, sub r (2) to ss 440 and 443, 2nd paragraph, and sub r. (4) to s 456, 2nd paragraph, and R S O, O 63, r 13 Sub r (3) is new It is in accordance with a Bombay ruling in the undermentioned case (g)

Married woman as guardian ad litem—Under the Code of 1882, though a married woman could be appointed next friend of a minor plaintiff, she could not be appointed guardian ad litem of a minor defendant Under this Code she may be appointed guardian ad litem as well

Sub-rule (1): adverse interest.—A minor represented by a guardian ad litem whose interests are adverse is not represented at all (r) The decree is therefore a nullity so far as he is concerned. The Privy Council in Rashid un nissa v Muhammed (s), where a minor was represented by an uncle whose interests were adverse to that of the minor, said that "the latter was never a party to the suit in the proper sense of the term" Again when a Hindu father mortgaged family property for immoral purposes, but yet was treated as representing his minor sons in the suit filed by the mortgagee, it was held that the sons were not represented and that they could recover their shares (t) In a Madras case the decree was upheld apparently because the adverse interest was too remote to be relevant (u)

Sub-rule (2): guardian appointed by competent authority—A guardian of his minor son appointed by a Hindu father under his will is not a guardian appointed by "Competent authority" within the meaning of this rule (v)

Sub r (2) provides that where a minor has a guardian appointed by competent authority, no person other than such guardian should be appointed his guardian ad litem The Allahabad High Court has held that where the Court, in ignorance of the fact that the minor has a guardian appointed by competent authority, appoints another person guardian for the suit, such appointment is not an illegality, but a mere irregularity, and it does not of itself vitiate either the decree passed in the suit or a sale consequent upon such decree (w) But the Madras High Court has held that this is an illegality which vitiates the decree (x) The permission to appoint another person as next friend or as guardian ad litem need not be express (y) Failure to record reasons as required by

Sub-rule (3)* consent of guardian ad litem—This sub rule controls both sub rule (1) and sub rule (2) and places a material restriction on the power of the Court. No person competent under either of these sub rules can be appointed guardian ad litem without his consent (21). A guardian who has not consented to act as such = no guardian at all and the decree is invalid irrespective of any question of prejudice because the minor has not been represented in the suit (a). Das J seems to take a different view in Pande Saldeo v Ramayan (b), but that is erroneous as pointed out by Venkatasubba Rao J in Sriramulu v Lakshminarayana (c). The Allahabad High Court has said that in certain circumstances consent may be presumed when the proposed guardian remains silent and absent (d). But it is submitted that this is incorrect and the proper procedure in such case is, in default if any other person fit and willing to act, to appoint an officer of the Court (e). But under the Code of 1885 which did not contain any proviso similar to r 4 (3) when a guardian under the Guardian and Wards Act made no response consent was presumed (f). In an Allahabad case where a father and his minor son were sued, the Court appointed the mother guardian ad litem in spite of her refusal. The father filed a written statement for the son and defended the suit on his behalf. It is clear that the minor was not represented by his mother but the High Court held that there was substantial representation by the father and that there was no prejudice to the minor (g). The consent need not be expressed in writing. Some cases use the phrase 'express consent, but the word 'express' is not in the rule. Consent is a question of fact and the evidence of it may be indirect and circumstantial (h) or it may be proved by conduct (i).

Officer of Court as guardian ad litem—In cases under the previous Codes it was held that if an officer of Court was appointed guardian ad litem, he should not be paid for his trouble (j), also that if he had no funds to conduct adequately the defence of the minor, the Court could relieve him of his position as guardian (k). But under the present code the Court may provide for the costs to be incurred by him in order that he may obtain legal assistance, and this is so even when the guardian ad litem is himself a pleader (l). The appointment of an officer of the Court as guardian ad litem on a false affidavit that there is no other person fit and willing is vitiated by fraud and is of no legal effect. A decree so obtained is not binding on the minor (m). As to irregularities in the appointment of a Court guardian, see notes under rule 3 above.

5. [Ss 441, 444] (1) Every application to the Court on behalf of a minor, other than an application under rule 10, sub-rule (2), shall be made by his next friend or by his guardian for the suit.

(2) Every order made in a suit or on any application, before the Court in or by which a minor is in any way con-

6. [S. 461.] (1) A next friend or guardian for the suit shall not, without the leave of the Court, receive any money or other moveable property on behalf of a minor either—

Receipt by next friend or guardian for the suit of property under decree for minor

(b) under a decree or order in favour of the minor.

(2) Where the next friend or guardian for the suit has not been appointed or declared by competent authority to be guardian of the property of the minor, or, having been so appointed or declared is under any disability known to the Court to receive the money or other moveable property, the Court shall, if it grants him leave to receive the property, require such security and give such directions as will, in its opinion, sufficiently protect the property from waste and ensure its proper application.

Joint Mitakshara family—The Calcutta High Court had held that this rule did not apply when the next friend was the manager of a Mitakshara joint family of which the minor was a member and that qua manager he could receive monies due on a decree in favour of himself and the minor (a). But this conflicts with the Privy Council ruling in Ganesh Rao v Tularam (b) that a manager of a joint family if he is a next friend or guardian is subject to the control of the Court and that he cannot do in his capacity of manager acts that he is debarred from doing as next friend or guardian without the leave of the Court. Accordingly when payment under a decree in favour of a minor and of the manager of a joint Hindu family was certified to the Court by the manager alone who was the next friend of the minor, the Court refused to record it as the leave of the Court had not been obtained, and for the same reason the Court refused to recognize the payment as a valid discharge and granted an execution application for the recovery of the whole amount (p).

7. [S 462] (1) No next friend or guardian for the O suit shall, without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor with reference to the suit in which he acts as next friend or guardian.

Agreement or compromise by next friend or guardian for the suit

(2) Any such agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the Court so recorded shall be voidable against all parties other than the minor.

Alterations in the rule—The words “expressly recorded in the proceedings in sub r (1), and the words “so recorded” in sub r (2), are new. They gave effect to the practice established under the old section. See notes below, “Compromise decree when binding on a minor”

Scope of the rule—This rule contemplates the following steps to be taken in order before a compromise decree is passed in a suit to which a minor is a party, namely, (1) an application by the next friend or guardian ad litem for leave to compromise the suit, (2) the granting of leave by the Court if the Court thinks the case is a fit one for leave, and (3) the consent of the next friend or guardian ad litem to the proposed compromise after the Court has granted the leave (r). If the leave is granted, and the next friend or guardian ad litem assents to the compromise, the parties may apply to the Court under O 23, r 3, for a consent decree in terms of the compromise, and if the compromise is lawful, it is the duty of the Court under that rule to pass the decree applied for. If the next friend of a minor plaintiff agrees to compromise a suit on behalf of the minor subject to the leave of the Court, and then withdraws from the compromise before the leave of the Court is applied for, the Court will not enforce the compromise at the instance of the defendant, even though the terms of the compromise might appear beneficial to the minor. The reason is that such compromise is not binding unless it is sanctioned by the Court (s). The Court cannot force a compromise upon a minor against the opinion of the guardian ad litem or next friend (t). But if the guardian or next friend is acting improperly in refusing to consent to a beneficial arrangement, the Court may take steps to remove him and substitute some other person (i).

Compromise decree when binding on minor.—The provision contained in this rule making it necessary to obtain the leave of the Court is of great importance to protect the interest of minors (u), and it has been extended to a compromise by a natural guardian who has put herself in the place of a guardian ad litem by applying to the Court to sanction a compromise (v). To render a decree passed in pursuance of a compromise binding on a minor, the following conditions must be complied with —

- (a) The next friend or guardian ad litem must apply to the Court for leave to enter into the proposed compromise (w), stating specifically that the compromise is sought to be made on behalf of the minor (x), and also setting forth

r. 7,

- (b) On such an application being made to the Court, the Court must exercise a judicial discretion as to the propriety, in the interests of the minor, of the proposed compromise (2). And if the Court sees reason to grant leave it should record an order showing that an application has been made to it, that the terms of the proposed agreement or compromise have been considered by it, and that having regard to the interests of the minor, it has granted leave to make the agreement or compromise (a). "It is not sufficient that the terms of a compromise are before the Court. There ought to be evidence that the attention of the Court was directly called to the fact that a minor was a party to the compromise, and it ought to be shown by an order on petition, or in some way not open to doubt that the leave of the Court was obtained" (b). A compromise will be deemed to be beneficial to the interests of a minor, if it secures to the minor some demonstrable advantage, or averts some obvious mischief (c). A certificate of counsel for the minor that the compromise is for his benefit is according to ordinary practice sufficient (d).
- (c) The leave must be express, not implied. It must, in the language of this rule, be expressly recorded in the proceedings. From the mere fact that the Court has passed a decree in accordance with a compromise it cannot be inferred that any of the steps preliminary and necessary to the making of the decree have been taken by the Court. The Court by passing a decree in pursuance of a compromise does not ipso facto sanction the compromise (e). The provisions of this rule are complied with if the leave of the Court is expressly recorded, it is not necessary that the order granting leave should state that the Court had considered the terms of the compromise and regarded them to be beneficial to the minor (f).

But the non observance of the above conditions does not render the compromise decree void or affect the jurisdiction of the Court to record it (g). The decree is only voidable, and that too at the option of the minor. No other party to the suit can call the decree in question: the minor alone is entitled to call it in question, and this he may do either on attaining majority or before then through a next friend (h).

Procedure to set compromise aside decree—A compromise decree may be set aside either in a regular suit or upon an application for review to the Court that passed the decree (i). But it cannot be called in question by way of objection to any proceeding taken in execution of it (j).

It was doubtful whether under the Code of 1882 a compromise decree can be set aside by an appeal from the decree. Where an appeal was preferred from a compromise decree on the ground that the lower Court did not consider the question as to

Compromise under misapprehension of a material fact—Where a compromise is entered into under a misapprehension of a material fact it will be set aside even though it may have been sanctioned by the Court under this rule (m) See Indian Contract Act, 1872 s 20

Compromise of execution proceedings—Execution proceedings are a continuation of the suit and a next friend or guardian cannot after decree enter into a compromise or an adjustment of the decree without the sanction of the Court (n) See O. 21, r 2 And this is so even though the guardian ad litem had power as natural guardian to sell the minor's property (o) But the rule is confined to an agreement or compromise in the course of the suit A transfer by a guardian ad litem of a decree in favour of a minor made not with reference to the suit or execution proceeding does not require the sanction of the Court (p)

Agreement to be bound by oath under Indian Oaths Act, 1873, s. 9, not within this rule—An agreement by the next friend of a minor that an issue in the suit should be determined by the oath of the defendant, does not come within the purview of this rule, and the sanction of the Court is not necessary. In such a case the minor is bound by the agreement, provided there is no fraud or gross negligence on the part of the next friend (9)

Abandonment of Issue does not amount to a compromise—A next friend or guardian ad litem may abandon an issue in the course of the trial of the suit and the sanction of the Court is not requisite for that purpose, for the abandonment of an issue does not amount to a "compromise" within the meaning of this rule. The abandonment is binding on the minor provided there is no fraud or gross negligence on the part of the next friend or guardian ad litem (r)

Agreement to refer to arbitration—It has been held by the High Courts of Madras (s) and Bombay (t), and by the Chief Court of the Punjab (u), that an agreement by a next friend or guardian ad litem to refer any matter in controversy in a suit to arbitration is an "agreement" within the meaning of this rule and that the sanction of the Court is therefore necessary. According to the Allahabad High Court such an agreement is not within this rule, and the sanction of the Court is not necessary (v). See Schedule II, r 1.

The decisions cited above relate to cases where the agreement to refer was made during the pendency of a suit. We now proceed to consider cases where there is no suit pending, but an agreement to refer is made to which a minor is a party by his

- [illegible]

O. 32 r. 7. guardian Before dealing with these cases it may be premised that to attract the application of this rule it is necessary—

(1) that there should be a pending suit as indicated by the words “no next friend or guardian for the suit, and

(2) that there should be an agreement to refer

If either of these conditions is wanting, the present rule does not apply and no leave of the Court is necessary. A and B carry on business in partnership. A dies leaving a minor son and a widow. Disputes arise between the parties as to accounts and an agreement is made between the minor through his mother and B to refer the disputes to arbitration. The arbitrators make their award and the minor, by his mother, applies to file the award under para 20 of Sch. II. The application is registered as a suit terms of the award as provided by para 31 of Sch. II. Does the agreement to refer require the sanction of the Court under this rule? No, because it was not made during the pendency of a suit and the first of the two conditions mentioned above is wanting. (w) Does the decree on the award require the sanction of the Court? No, because the application to file the award being made by the minor as plaintiff, it cannot be said that there was an agreement on behalf of the minor not to object to the award and to allow a decree to be passed on the award, in this case the second of the two conditions mentioned above is wanting. (x) Suppose now that the application to file the award was made by B, in which case the application would be registered as a suit between B as plaintiff and the minor as defendant would the decree on the award require the sanction of the Court? Yes, if the minor's guardian agreed not to object to the award and to allow a decree to be passed on the award, in this case both the conditions mentioned above are present, namely, that there is an agreement on behalf of the minor and the agreement is made in the course of a suit started by the application to file the award. (y)

Withdrawal of suit by next friend—If the next friend of a minor plaintiff withdraws from the suit, and such withdrawal is in pursuance of an agreement or compromise entered into with the defendant, the withdrawal must be with the sanction of the Court under this rule, if the sanction of the Court is not obtained, the order of withdrawal may be set aside at the instance of the minor. (z) If an appeal is withdrawn on terms and there are parties concerned who are not ex jure, the leave of the Court must be obtained. (a) But if the withdrawal is not in pursuance of an agreement or compromise entered into with the defendant, the sanction of the Court is not necessary, and the withdrawal is binding on the minor plaintiff, provided there is no fraud or gross negligence on the part of the next friend. (b)

Where the minor is a member of a joint Hindu family.—In a suit brought by some of the members of a joint Hindu family one of whom was a minor, a compromise decree was passed after the compromise had been sanctioned by the Court. The minor had no separate interest, the adult members of the family had taken part in the compromise and assented to it, and the Court pronounced that it was for the benefit of the minor. In a suit brought on behalf of the minor to set aside the compromise decree on the ground that the proper materials which were essential to make the compromise and decree binding upon him were not placed before the Court previous to obtaining its sanction, it was held that the decree was under the circumstances binding on the minor (c).

When the father of a minor, a member of a joint Hindu family, of which the father is the managing member, is appointed his guardian ad litem, his powers as managing member, so far as they relate to the minor's interest, are controlled by the provisions of the present rule, and he cannot, without the leave of the Court, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of the minor with reference to the suit. Such an agreement is not binding on the minor even if it was a bona fide settlement of a disputed claim (d).

Minor in charge of Court of Wards—The sanction of the Civil Court required by this rule is not necessary, having regard to the provisions of ss 18 and 21 of the Court of Wards Act (Beng. Act 9 of 1879) for a compromise entered into under the authority and by the direction of the Court of Wards on behalf of a minor under its charge (e).

Joint bond by a minor and an adult—In compromise of a suit two defendants, of whom one is a minor, enter into a bond by which they jointly agree to pay a certain sum of money to the plaintiff at a future date. The leave of the Court is not obtained on behalf of the minor as required by this rule. The bond is not enforceable against the minor, but it is enforceable to the full amount against the adult promisor (f).

8 [S 447] (1) Unless otherwise ordered by the Court, a next friend shall not retire without first procuring a fit person to be put in his place and giving security for the costs already incurred.

Retirement of next friend

(2) The application for the appointment of a new next friend shall be supported by an affidavit showing the fitness of the person proposed, and also that he has no interest adverse to that of the minor.

Retirement of next friend—A suit is brought by A and B, both minors, by their mother as their next friend. The mother is also appointed guardian of the person and property of the minors under the Guardian and Wards Act, 1890. Subsequently, on the application of the mother, A who has then attained majority, is appointed guardian of the person and property of B in her place. This is not tantamount to A being appointed next friend of B for the suit. The mother, therefore, cannot retire without first procuring a fit person to be put in her place and giving security for the costs already incurred (g).

9. [S. 416] (1) Where the interest of the next friend of a minor is adverse to that of the minor or where he is so connected with a defendant whose interest is adverse to that of the minor as to make it unlikely that the minor's interest will be properly protected by him, or where he does not do his duty, during the pendency of the suit, ceases to reside within British India, or for any other sufficient cause, application may be made on behalf of the minor or by a defendant for his removal, and the Court, if satisfied of the sufficiency of the cause assigned, may order the next friend to be removed accordingly, and make such other order as to costs as it thinks fit.

(2) Where the next friend is not a guardian appointed or declared by an authority competent in this behalf, and an application is made by a guardian so appointed or declared, who desires to be himself appointed in the place of the next friend, the Court shall remove the next friend unless it considers, for reasons to be recorded by it, that the guardian ought not to be appointed the next friend of the minor, and shall thereupon appoint the applicant to be next friend in his place upon such terms as to the costs already incurred in the suit as it thinks fit.

Alterations in the rule.—The words 'and I make such other order as I think fit' in sub r. (1) are new. The words, 'and I shall thereupon appoint, et c.', at the end of sub r. (2) are also new.

Where the next friend does not do his duty.—Where a Court finds that a next friend does not do his duty in relation to a suit, it is its duty not to permit him to prejudice the interests of the minor, but to hurn the suit in order that a new one interested in the minor may apply on behalf of the minor for the removal of the next friend and for the appointment of a new next friend, or that the minor plaintiff himself may, on coming of age, elect to proceed with the suit or with law for himself. It is also if he is acting improperly in refusing to consent to a beneficial compromise (d)

Adverse Interest - In a suit brought against a minor by his next friend, a decree is passed against the minor. The interest of the minor requires an appeal, but certain events happen after the passing of the decree which render it to the interest of the next friend that the decree against the minor should stand, and hence no appeal is preferred by the next friend from the decree. In such a case leave will be granted to the minor on his attaining majority to appeal from the decree, though the period of limitation for the appeal may have expired (j). When the next friend likes to appear the suit should not be dismissed for default even though a reservation is made that such decision is without prejudice to the minor. The proper course is to stay further proceedings pending the appointment of an other next friend (k).

10 [Ss 448 449] (1) On the retirement removal or death of the next friend of a minor, further proceedings shall be stayed until the appointment of a next friend in his place

Stay of proceeding on removal etc of next friend

(2) Where the pleader of such minor omits within a reasonable time, to take steps to get a new next friend appointed any person interested in the minor or in the matter in issue may apply to the Court for the appointment of one, and the Court may appoint such person as it thinks fit

11 [Ss 458 459] (1) Where the guardian for the suit desires to retire or does not do his duty, or where other sufficient ground is made to appear, the Court may permit such guardian to retire or may remove him, and may make such order as to costs as it thinks fit

Retirement removal or death of guardian for the suit

(2) Where the guardian for the suit retires, dies or is removed by the Court during the pendency of the suit, the Court shall appoint a new guardian in his place

The words may permit such guardian to retire in sub r (1) are new The High Court of Patna has held that it is not necessary to give notice under rule 3 (4) before appointing a new guardian under this rule (1)

12 [Ss 450 453] (1) A minor plaintiff or a minor not a party to a suit on whose behalf, an application is pending shall, on attaining majority, elect whether he will proceed with the suit or application

Course to be followed by minor plaintiff or applicant on attaining majority

(2) Where he elects to proceed with the suit or application, he shall apply for an order discharging the next friend and for leave to proceed in his own name

(3) The title of the suit or application shall in such case be corrected so as to read thenceforth thus —

“A B, late a minor, by C D, his next friend, but now having attained majority”

(4) Where he elects to abandon the suit or application, he shall, if a sole plaintiff or sole applicant, apply for an order to dismiss the suit or application on repayment of the costs incurred by the defendant or opposite party or which may have been paid by his next friend rr 12 15 parte but no order discharging a next friend and permitting a minor plaintiff to proceed in his own name shall be made without notice to the next friend

When title to be corrected—The provisions of this rule which require the title of a suit to be corrected apply to a pending suit and not to a suit in which a final decree has been passed and in which it only remains to proceed in execution (m)

13 [S 454] (1) Where a minor co plaintiff on attaining majority desires to repudiate the suit he shall apply to have his name struck out as co plaintiff, and the Court, if it finds that he is not a necessary party, shall dismiss him from the suit on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit

Where minor co-plaintiff attains a majority desires to repudiate suit

(2) Notice of the application shall be served on the next friend, on any co plaintiff and on the defendant

(3) The costs of all parties of such application, and of all or any proceedings theretofore had in the suit, shall be paid by such persons as the Court directs

(4) Where the applicant is a necessary party to the suit the Court may direct him to be made a defendant

Sub r (4) is new

14. [S 455] (1) A minor on attaining majority may, if a sole plaintiff apply that a suit instituted in his name by a next friend be dismissed on the ground that it was unreasonable or improper

Unreasonable or improper suit

(2) Notice of the application shall be served on all the parties concerned, and the Court, upon being satisfied of such unreasonableness or impropriety, may grant the application and order the next friend to pay the cost of all parties in respect of the application and of anything done in the suit, or make such other order as it thinks fit

15 [S 456] The provisions contained in rules 1 to 14, so far as they are applicable, shall extend to persons adjudged to be of unsound mind and to persons who though not so adjudged are found by the Court on inquiry, by reason of unsoundness of mind or mental infirmity,

Application of rules to persons of unsound mind

to be incapable of protecting their interests when suing or being sued.

Persons of unsound mind—The present rule makes the provisions of rules 1 to 14 applicable to persons of unsound mind. The result is that where a person of unsound mind is a plaintiff, a suit on his behalf must be brought by a next friend, and where he is a defendant, the suit must be defended by a guardian ad litem. Where a manager has been appointed of the property of a lunatic under the Lunacy Act, no person other than such manager should act as the next friend of the lunatic in a suit in respect of the lunatic's property (n). See s. 4, Sub r (2) above.

Persons adjudged to be of unsound mind—A person may be adjudged to be of unsound mind under the Lunacy Act 4 of 1912.

Persons of unsound mind not adjudged to be so—The old section did not contain any provision as to persons of unsound mind not adjudged to be so. But it was held that the same procedure applied where a party to a suit was of unsound mind though not adjudged to be so. For the title of suits, see App A, Pleadings, Title of Suits.

Decree against a lunatic—A decree passed against a lunatic not properly represented in the suit cannot be challenged in execution proceedings. The reason is that a lunatic not properly represented is not a "party" to the suit within the meaning of S. 47 above (o).

16. [S. 464] Nothing in this Order shall apply to a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief suing or being sued in the name of his State or being sued by direction of the Governor-

Saving for Princes and Chiefs

General in Council or a Local Government in the name of an agent or in any other name, or shall be construed to affect or in any way derogate from the provisions of any local law for the time being in force relating to suits by or against minors or by or against lunatics or other persons of unsound mind.

A ruling chief sued in his personal capacity, if not domiciled in British India, is not subject to the Majority Act. If he has attained majority according to his personal law, no guardian ad litem need be appointed (p).

Unreasonable or improper suit

(2) Notice of the application shall be served on all the parties concerned, and the Court, upon being satisfied of such unreasonableness or impropriety, may grant the application and order the next friend to pay the cost of all parties in respect of the application and of anything done in the suit, or make such other order as it thinks fit

15 [S 456] The provisions contained in rules 1 to 14, so far as they are applicable, shall extend to persons adjudged to be of unsound mind and to persons who though not so adjudged are found by the Court on inquiry, by reason of unsoundness of mind or mental infirmity,

Application of rules to persons of unsound mind

"Other than his necessary wearing apparel and the subject-matter of the suit"—These words do not qualify that part of the Explanation which requires that the person should not be possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed by law, but only the conditions that the applicant is not entitled to property worth Rs 100 (g).

Prosecution of suit as pauper—A plaintiff may be allowed to continue as a pauper a suit instituted by him in the ordinary way (z).

Minor plaintiff—A minor pauper may sue through a next friend although the latter is not a pauper (a). In England when a minor applies to sue as a pauper, it must be proved that the minor as well as the next friend are paupers. But this rule of English practice does not apply in India, and it is enough if it is proved that the minor is a pauper; it is not necessary to prove that the next friend also is a pauper (b).

Pauper defendant—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that although the Civil Procedure Code provides only for suits to be brought by a pauper plaintiff, the Court has inherent power to allow a defendant to defend in forma pauperis (c).

Legal representative of pauper—The legal representative of a deceased person may be allowed to institute a suit in forma pauperis, if the deceased himself had been allowed to sue as a pauper if the proceedings had been instituted in his lifetime, provided the legal representative is also himself a pauper (d). Similarly, on the death of a pauper plaintiff, his legal representative may be allowed to continue the suit in forma pauperis, provided the legal representative is also himself a pauper (e). But in Suagammie Sanyal v Gopalram (f) it was said that it was immaterial that the legal representative has means in his private capacity and that he can continue the suit as a pauper if he has not come into possession of sufficient means out of the estate. This conflicts directly with In re Radakrishna Iyer (g) decided a few months earlier by the same Court, but they are both decisions of a single judge. In England an executor or administrator is not allowed to sue or defend as a pauper (h) unless he is also a beneficiary (i).

Official liquidator—The word "person" in this rule includes a company [see General Clauses Act 10 of 1897, s 3 (39)]. An official liquidator therefore of a company is competent to apply for leave to sue in forma pauperis on behalf of the company, if the company is a pauper within the meaning of this rule. The fact that the liquidator in his personal capacity is not a pauper does not affect the question (j).

Married woman—The mere fact that the applicant's husband has property is not sufficient reason for disallowing her application for leave to sue in forma pauperis (k).

O. 33, r. 1.

Explanation.—A person is a “pauper” when he is not possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed by law for the plaint in such suit, or, where no such fee is prescribed, when he is not entitled to property worth one hundred rupees other than his necessary wearing apparel and the subject-matter of the suit.

Scope and object of the order.—A plaintiff suing in a civil Court must pay the Court fee prescribed by law for the plaint and subsequent proceeding in the suit. These fees are prescribed by the Court Fees Act VII of 1870. But a person may be too poor to pay the Court fee, and the object of this Order is to enable such person to bring and prosecute suits without payment of Court fees (q). There are, however, certain fees from which even a pauper is not exempted, namely, fees for service of process, and such fees must be paid by him (r 8). If the pauper succeeds in the suit, the Government have a first charge on the subject matter of the suit for the amount of the Court fee which would have been paid by him if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper (r 10). If the pauper fails in the suit, the Court should order him to pay the Court fees due by him (r 11). An order directing a pauper plaintiff to pay the defendant in cash the costs occasioned by an amendment of the plaint and dismissing the suit in default of such payment was held to be wholly improper (r).

“Subject matter of the suit.”—In determining whether a person claiming to sue as a pauper is worth Rs 100, neither the value of his necessary wearing apparel nor the value of the property claimed by him in the suit should be taken into consideration. The ground for excluding the “subject matter of the suit” under this rule is that such property is presumably out of the pauper’s reach and cannot be made use of by him to carry on his litigation (s).

A applies for leave to sue as a pauper for the recovery of certain ornaments worth Rs 2,000 from B. Pending the investigation into pauperism, B deposits in Court a portion of the ornaments claimed by A of the value of Rs 100 as ornaments belonging to A. The ornaments deposited in Court, being entirely at A’s disposal, are no longer part of the “subject matter of the suit.” From the moment of the deposit A becomes “entitled to property worth Rs 100,” and hence he is not entitled to sue as a pauper for the rest of the ornaments (t). Macleod J however expressed the opinion that A could not be said in such a case to be entitled to property worth Rs 100, for otherwise every application for leave to sue as a pauper may be defeated by the respondent paying into Court Rs 100 out of the amount claimed (u), and has recently given effect to this view in Bai Balagauri v Motilal (v), the reason given being that the property does not cease to be the subject matter of the suit because of defendant’s admission or payment.

A who has mortgaged his property to B sues B for redemption. A’s equity of redemption is no part of the subject matter of the suit. Its value, therefore, should be taken into consideration in determining whether A is a pauper (w).

Sons sued as paupers to set aside an alienation of joint family property by the father, but when it was found that there was a share of the property that had not been alienated they were not allowed to continue the suit as paupers (x).

2. [S 403] Every application for permission to sue as a pauper shall contain the particulars required in regard to plants in suits a schedule of any moveable or immoveable property belonging to the applicant, with the estimated value thereof, shall be annexed thereto, and it shall be signed and verified in the manner prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings

Procedure—Rules 2 to 8 prescribe the procedure to be followed when a suit is proposed to be instituted in forma pauperis

Death of applicant—Where an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis has been made but the applicant dies pending the hearing of the application the application cannot be continued by the legal representative of the deceased applicant. The reason is that the right to apply for leave to sue as a pauper is a personal right and it does not survive to the representative of the deceased applicant. But the legal representative may present a fresh application for leave to sue in forma pauperis if he himself is a pauper (i)

3. [S 404] Notwithstanding anything contained in these rules, the application shall be presented to the Court by the applicant in person, unless he is exempted from appearing in Court, in which case the application may be presented by an authorized agent who can answer all material questions relating to the application, and who may be examined in the same manner as the party represented by him might have been examined had such party attended in person

Presented to the Court—Presentation need not be to the Court itself. Presentation to the proper officer of the Court is sufficient (m)

Purda-nashin woman—A purda nashin woman exempted from appearing in Court under s 132 above may present the application for leave to sue as a pauper by a duly authorized agent (n)

Pauper appeals—The provisions of this rule apply also to applications for leave to appeal as a pauper. See O 44 r 1

4. [S 406] (1) Where the application is in proper form and duly presented, the Court may, if it thinks fit, examine the applicant, or his agent when the applicant is allowed to appear by agent, regarding the merits of the claim and the property of the applicant

- (2) Where the application is presented by an agent, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order that the applicant be examined by a commission in the manner in which the examination of an absent witness may be taken

If presented by agent Court may order applicant to be examined by commission

Examination—This Order contemplates examination of two kinds namely (1) the examination of the applicant which may as indicated in this rule be regarding (a) the merits of the claim and (b) pauperism and (2) the examination of persons other than the applicant which should be confined to pauperism only as indicated by the provisions of rr 6 and 7 below. Persons other than the applicant cannot be examined on the merits of the applicant's claim (c)

5 [Ss 405, 407] The Court shall reject an application for permission to sue as a pauper—

Rejection of application

- (a) where it is not framed and presented in the manner prescribed by rules 2 and 3, or
- (b) where the applicant is not a pauper, or
- (c) where he has, within two months next before the presentation of the application, disposed of any property fraudulently or in order to be able to apply for permission to sue as a pauper, or
- (d) where his allegations do not show a cause of action, or
- (e) where he has entered into any agreement with reference to the subject-matter of the proposed suit under which any other person has obtained an interest in such subject matter

Alteration in the rule—The expression cause of action in cl (d) has been substituted for the words right to sue in such Court. See notes below under the head Clause (d) cause of action

Clause (c) fraudulent disposal of property—Thus if a person has property worth Rs 1000 and he disposes of the same in August 1915 to enable himself to sue as a pauper and applies for leave to sue as a pauper in September 1915 the application should be rejected under this rule

Clause (d) cause of action—The corresponding clause of the old rule ran thus "That his allegations do not show a right to sue in such Court". It was intended on the strength of the words sue in such Court that that clause dealt with the question of jurisdiction and not to the question whether or not a cause of action was disclosed in the application. But this contention was not upheld. It was held that the terms of that clause did not limit the Court's power to refuse leave to sue whether the right to sue arose within the jurisdiction but had a foreign element, namely that an applicant must make out that he has a good substantive claim.

Revision.—An order rejecting an application under this rule is not appealable (c) but it is open to revision in a proper case (d), though the Allahabad High Court has since doubted whether revision lies (e)

Letters Patent appeal.—No appeal is allowed by the Code from an order made under this rule. But the Madras High Court has held that an appeal lies under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order allowing or refusing to allow a plaintiff to sue as a pauper, on the ground that such an order is a “judgment” and that it is neither interlocutory nor made in the exercise of discretion (f)

6 [S 408] Where the Court sees no reason to reject the application on any of the grounds stated in rule 5, it shall fix a day (of which at least ten days’ clear notice shall be given to the opposite party and the Government pleader) for receiving such evidence as the applicant may adduce in proof of his pauperism, and for hearing any evidence which may be adduced in disproof thereof

Notice of day for receiving evidence of applicant's pauperism

Notice—As to form of notice, see App H form no 12

7. [S 409] (1) On the day so fixed or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, the Court shall examine the witnesses (if any) produced by either party, and may examine the applicant or his agent, and shall make a memorandum of the substance of their evidence.

Procedure at hearing

(2) The Court shall also hear any argument which the parties may desire to offer on the question whether, on the face of the application and of the evidence (if any) taken by the Court as herein provided, the applicant is or is not subject to any of the prohibitions specified in rule 5

(3) The Court shall then either allow or refuse to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper.

Sub-rule (2)—The Court has when issuing notice under rule 6 presumably decided ex parte that none of the prohibitions in rule 5 exist. This sub rule enables the other party to re-open this question. But except on the issue whether plaintiff is a pauper he can only do so by argument for the evidence under rule 6 is limited to the issue of pauperism. Whether the plaintiff has a cause of action can only be determined from the plaint itself and the statements of the plaintiff in his examination under rule 4. Therefore the Court has not power to determine on the evidence recorded under rule 6 that plaintiff has no cause of action whether because he is barred by limitation (g) or

O. 33, r 7. because he has no title (h) If there is no argument by the party, the Court can nevertheless consider the matter of its own motion (i)

Review—An order under this rule refusing leave to sue as a pauper is subject to review (j) The application for review is not liable to any Court fee (k)

Propriety of order allowing applicant to sue in forma pauperis—Where after due consideration of an application for leave to sue as a pauper, the Court of first instance has allowed the suit to be instituted in forma pauperis, and has passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff, it is not open to the defendant, in appeal from the decree to question the propriety of the order permitting the plaintiff to sue as a pauper S 103 does not apply to such an order (l)

Limitation where application granted—Where an application for leave to sue as a pauper is granted, the date on which the application is filed will be deemed to be the date on which the pauper suit is instituted for all purposes of limitation, and not the date on which the application is numbered and registered as a suit [Limitation Act, 1908, s 4] Therefore when the rate of Court fee was enhanced between the date of filing and the date of granting the application, the Court fees were in the calculation of costs assessed at the former rate (m)

Limitation where application refused—Where an application for leave to sue as a pauper is refused, and the applicant subsequently institutes a suit in respect of the same subject matter in the ordinary way (r 15), the suit will be deemed for the purposes of limitation to have been instituted on the date on which the plaint is presented, and not the date on which the rejected application was filed The reason is that upon an order of refusal under this rule, the proceedings instituted under r 2 come to an end (n)

Limitation where application is converted into a plaint on payment of court-fees—A person who has applied for leave to sue as a pauper may, at any time, before an order is made under this rule convert his application into a plaint, by paying into Court the necessary Court fees In such a case, if the application was made bona fide, the suit would be deemed to have been instituted for the purposes of limitation on the day on which the application was filed and not the day on which the Court fees were paid But if it is found that the application was made in bad faith, the suit would be deemed to have been instituted on the day on which the Court fees were paid and not on the day on which the application was filed (o)

Before an order is made under this rule rejecting the application A pays the necessary Court fees into Court and the application is thereupon converted into a plaint. The application not having been made in good faith the suit will be deemed to have been instituted on the day on which the Court fees were paid and not on the day on which the application was filed. The Court fees having been paid after the expiration of the period of limitation the suit is time barred.

9 [S 414.] The Court may, on the application of the defendant, or of the Government pleader, of which seven days' clear notice in writing has been given to the plaintiff, order the plaintiff to be dispaupered—

Dispaupering

- (a) if he is guilty of vexatious or improper conduct in the course of the suit,
- (b) if it appears that his means are such that he ought not to continue to sue as a pauper, or
- (c) if he has entered into any agreement with reference to the subject-matter of the suit under which any other person has obtained an interest in such subject-matter

Clause (a)—Non-disclosure by the plaintiff of a life policy worth Rs. 225 in a suit where the Court fees were over Rs. 500 was held not to justify his being dispaupered (p).

Clause (b)—Receipt of interim maintenance during the suit is not a ground for dispaupering the plaintiff if it is not enough to enable her to save the amount required for Court fees (q). Nor can she be dispaupered because she is living with a rich relation and appearing by eminent counsel (r).

D. 33, r. 10

10. [S. 411.] Where the plaintiff succeeds in the suit, the Court shall calculate the amount of Court-fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper; such amount shall be recoverable by the Government from any party ordered by the decree to pay the same, and shall be a first charge on the subject-matter of the suit.

Costs where pauper succeeds

See rr 12 and 13

Amount of Court-fees shall be a first charge.—The charge is to be enforced by an application for the attachment and sale of the subject matter of the suit. A separate suit for the sale of the subject matter to realize the Court fees is now barred see r. 13 below and s 47 (s). The application for execution by the Government must be made within three years from the date of the decree in the pauper suit (t).

Recovery of Court-fees by Government from party ordered to pay the same.—If the plaintiff is directed to pay the Court fees, the Government may realize the same by an application for execution against the person or property of the plaintiff, and if the defendant is directed to pay the Court fees, the Government may realize the same by an application for execution against the person or property of the defendant.

Mode of realization of Court-fees by Government.—The plaintiff in a suit in forma pauperis obtains a decree against the defendant for possession of certain property. It is declared by the decree that the amount of Court fees shall be a first charge on the property, and that the same shall also be recoverable by the Government from the defendant. In such a case if the defendant fails to pay the Court fees, the Government may at its option realize the Court fees either by attachment and sale of the property which was the subject matter of the suit, or it may realize the same by an application for execution against the person or property of the defendant (u). The former right is not lost merely because the property for the recovery of which the pauper suit was brought has passed from the hands of the judgment debtor into the hands of the pauper decree holder (v). The Government, however, have no lien upon the decree for the amount of the Court fees (w), hence if the amount of Court fees is not paid, the Government are not entitled to sell the decree obtained by the plaintiff for the purpose of recovering such amount (x).

Effect of first charge.—Since the amount of Court fees recoverable by Government is a first charge on the subject matter of the suit (y), it follows that a sale held in execution of such charge must prevail against a subsequent sale (z). For the same reason, the defendant against whom the decree is passed cannot set off against the subject matter of the suit any sum that may be due to him under a cross decree held by him against the plaintiff. A obtains a decree against B for Rs 1500 in a suit brought in forma pauperis A is directed by the decree to pay the Court fees but he fails to pay the same. Thereupon the Government apply to attach and sell the judgment debt of Rs 1,000 due to A from B. B claims to set off Rs 1,475 due to him under a decree held by him against A. B is not entitled to the set off claimed by him for the Government has a first charge on Rs 1,500 that being the subject matter of the suit (a).

Crown's prerogative of precedence in respect of Court-fees—If the plaintiff succeeds in the suit and the amount payable under the decree by the defendant is paid into Court the Government is entitled to payment of the Court fees out of the fund in the Court on a mere application for payment without attaching the fund in the first instance. The reason is that the Crown is entitled to precedence in respect of a Crown debt over all other creditors of the pauper decree holder. A obtains a decree against B for specific performance and costs in a suit brought in forma pauperis. It is directed by the decree that B should pay the Court fees to Government and the Court fees are also declared to be a first charge on the property directed to be conveyed by B to A. B fails to pay A's costs. A thereupon applies for attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B for payment of his costs. The property is sold and the sale proceeds amounting to Rs 1,000 are paid into Court. Thereafter A's solicitor, C, applies to the Court for payment to him out of the Rs 1,000 of the costs incurred by him on behalf of A. At the same time a claim is made by the Government Solicitor for payment of the Court fees out of the Rs 1,000 in priority to C's claim. The Government are entitled to precedence in respect of the Court fees and C is entitled only to the balance left after payment of the Court fees (b).

It is to be observed that in the Calcutta case cited above C was a creditor of A inasmuch as he was entitled to be paid his costs by A. But he was merely an ordinary creditor as distinguished from a secured creditor. It is also to be observed that Court fees form a Crown debt and the Crown was to that extent a creditor of A. It has to be borne in mind that it is only when claims of the Crown and claims of ordinary creditors or common persons (to use an old expression) concur or come into competition that the Crown is preferred. The Crown has no more right than a common person to seize A's property and apply it in or towards discharge of a debt due from A. It was so observed by Lord Macnaghten in a case in which the Privy Council held that where a money decree is obtained by a pauper in a suit by him against X and Y is directed by the decree to pay the Court fees the Government are not entitled to realize the Court fees by a sale of X's property previously mortgaged by him to X so as to defeat the right of Y (c). All that could be sold by the Government in such a case is the equity of redemption of X in the property (d).

Appeal—Questions arising between the Government and any party to the suit under this rule would be questions relating to the execution, discharge and satisfaction of a decree within the meaning of s. 47. And it is provided by r. 13 below that they should be deemed to be questions arising between the parties to the suit within the meaning of s. 47. It therefore follows that an order deciding any such question is appealable as a decree [see s. 2 cl. (2) and s. 96] (e). Under the Code of 1859 it was held by the High Courts of Bombay and Madras that the Government not being a party to the suit such questions could not be said to be questions arising between the parties to the suit within the meaning of s. 244 (now s. 47) and hence orders determining such questions were not appealable as decrees (f). On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that such orders were appealable (g). Rule 13 (which is new) sets this conflict at rest by providing that though the Government is not a party to the suit, the Government shall be deemed to be a party to the suit for the purposes of s. 47.

Costs where pauper partly succeeds and partly fails.—Rule 10 deals with the case of a pauper plaintiff who succeeds in the suit. Rule 11 deals with the case of a pauper plaintiff who fails in the suit. There is no separate provision for the case in which a pauper plaintiff has partly succeeded and partly failed. Presumably the Court is intended to deal with such a case by combining the provisions of the two rules. In such a case therefore the Court fees payable on the plaint should be apportioned between the plaintiff and the defendant. It is illegal to lay upon the defendant in such a case a larger proportion of the Court fee leviable from the plaintiff than would have been payable by the plaintiff if the claim had been limited originally to that portion which was successful (h). In a suit for Rs. 3,000 the plaintiff got a decree for Rs. 88 15 0 and was ordered to pay the defendant's costs amounting to Rs. 151. The Court held that as plaintiff was precluded by O. 21, r. 19, from executing his decree, the case fell under rule 11 (i). Again when a pauper appeal was allowed on a point that did not touch merits of the case, the Court ordered the Court fee to be paid by the appellant and respondent in equal moieties (j).

11. [S. 412.] Where the plaintiff fails in the suit or is dispaupered, or where the suit is withdrawn or dismissed,— Procedure where pauper fails

(a) because the summons for the defendant to appear and answer has not been served upon him in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the Court-fees or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, or

(b) because the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court shall order the plaintiff, or any person added as a co-plaintiff to the suit, to pay the Court-fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper.

Alterations in the rule :

1. The word "withdrawn" has been newly added. See notes below under the head "Withdrawn"
2. Besides the liability to pay the Court fees, the plaintiff was, under the old section, subject to a further penalty of fine or imprisonment if the Court found that the suit was frivolous or vexatious. This provision has been omitted in the present rule.

Scope of the rule.—In order under this rule directing the pauper plaintiff to pay the Court fees can only be made in the following four cases —

- (1) where the plaintiff fails in the suit,
- (2) where the plaintiff is dispaupered under s 9,
- (3) where the suit is withdrawn or
- (4) where the suit is dismissed under the circumstances specified in cl (a) or cl (b)

It follows from what has been stated above that where an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is returned under O 7, r 10, for want of jurisdiction to be presented to the proper Court, no order can be made under this rule directing the applicant to pay the Court fees. It cannot be said in such a case that the plaintiff has failed in the suit (1). The decision may also be put on the ground that the present rule does not apply until the application is granted and is numbered and registered under s 8 above. But a dismissal of the suit at the request of the plaintiff and the defendant, the suit being settled out of Court, amounts to a failure within the meaning of this rule (1).

"Withdrawn"—This word has been newly added. Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the Court could order the plaintiff to pay the Court fees if the suit was withdrawn (m). The insertion of the word withdrawn makes it clear that the Court has the power under this rule to order the plaintiff to pay the Court fees if the suit is withdrawn, whether the withdrawal is without the leave of the Court or with leave to bring a fresh suit under O 23 r 1.

Costs—This rule does not preclude the Court from awarding a successful defendant his costs in a pauper suit. The Court has full power under s 35 to give and apportion costs in any manner it thinks fit. Nothing in this rule limits or otherwise affects the power conferred upon the Court by s 35 to give and apportion costs (n).

Omission to make an order for payment of Court-fees—The Government has the right at any time to apply to the Court to make an order for the payment of the Court fees (r 12). If the order is refused the Government may by virtue of the provisions of r 13 (which is new) prefer an appeal from the order of refusal. Under the Code of 1882 it was held that the Government not being a party to the suit had no right of appeal and it could therefore proceed only by an application for revision (o).

12 [New] The Government shall have the right at any time to apply to the Court to make an order for the payment of Court-fees under rule 10 or rule 11

Government may apply for payment of Court fees

This rule is new. It enables the Government in cases of error and omission with regard to Court fees to have the error or omission rectified by a mere application to the Court. See r 13 below.

Shall be a bar to any subsequent application—The bar to a subsequent application being a bar to the jurisdiction of the Court the Court is competent and bound to take notice of it at any stage of the suit (p)

Right to sue—There is no substantial distinction between the words right to sue in this rule and the words cause of action in rule 5. An application to sue in forma pauperis for maintenance is not barred by the dismissal of a previous application for a different period (q). Nor does a rejection under rule 5 (a) operate to bar a second application (r).

Dismissal for default—The dismissal of a pauper application in default of appearance or for default in prosecution is no bar to a subsequent pauper application in respect of the same cause of action (s).

ORDER XXXIV.

Suits relating to Mortgages of Immoveable Property

1. [N^{ew}. Act 4 of 1882, S 85] Subject to the provisions of this Code, all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage.

Explanation—A puisne mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit, and a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage

Suits relating to mortgages—This order is new. It is a re enactment with some alteration of sections 80 90 92 94 96 97 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act 4 of 1882 relating to suits on mortgages. The Transfer of Property Act did not contain any provision for the passing of a final decree in cases where payment was made in accordance with the terms of the preliminary decree. This omission has now been remedied and provision has been made in rules 3 (1) 5 (1) and 8 (1) for the passing of final decrees in such cases. The object of removing the provisions as to mortgage suits from the Transfer of Property Act to the Code is to avoid the confusion that arose in regard to execution in mortgage suits owing to such suits having been dealt with in the Transfer of Property Act (1). The general effect of this order is that the provisions of the Code as to execution of decrees apply to execution of mortgage decrees (u) see notes to rule below. Final decree for sale. Limitation

Transfer of Property Act 4 of 1882, s 85—This rule is a reproduction with certain alterations of s 85 of the Transfer of Property Act which ran as follows

Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure s 437 [now O 31 s 1] all persons having an interest in the property comprised in a mortgage must be joined as parties to any suit under this chapter relating to such mortgage provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest

Comparing the present rule with s 85 of the Transfer of Property Act it will be seen that the words "in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption" have been substituted for "in the property comprised in the mortgage". An Explanation has been added and the provision relating to notice is omitted. The explanation was rendered necessary as it was generally thought that s 85 made it imperative on a puisne mortgagee to make a prior mortgagee a party to his action for foreclosure. The substitution of the words "in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption" have made it clear that an adverse claimant who is a stranger to the security or the equity of redemption need not be joined (1) see notes below. Persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption

Scope and object of the rule—The object of this rule is requiring all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption

(1) See for an instance Arshinji v. Mahender (1901) 25 Bom 104 and the cases there cited

(u) See Amlook Chand v. Sarai Chander (1911) 3 Cal 913 & 1911 L. C. 913.

(r) Ghose on mortgage 4th ed., p. 927.

O. 34, r. 1. to be joined as parties ~~in~~ to avoid multiplicity of suits (w). The rule applies only to suits relating to a mortgage, that is to say, to suits for foreclosure, sale and redemption, as indicated by the marginal note to the rule. The rule therefore does not apply to suits by a mortgagee for a personal decree against the mortgagor (as to which see r. 6 below).

"Persons having an interest either in the mortgage-security or in the right of redemption"—The corresponding words in the Transfer of Property Act, s. 85, were "persons having an interest in the property comprised in a mortgage." These words gave rise to a conflict of views. According to one view, which coincides with the English law and the law as enunciated in the present rule, those persons only could be joined as parties to a suit relating to a mortgage who were either interested in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption. A person who sets up a title paramount to that of the mortgagor and mortgagee should not be joined as a party to such suit, for he is neither interested in the mortgage security nor in the right of redemption (x). Thus if A lets his property on a lease to B, and B mortgages the leasehold to C, A, holding the property by title paramount, should not be joined as a party defendant to a suit by C to enforce the mortgage (y). Similarly, if A and B are co owners of certain property, and B mortgages his undivided share to C, A should not be joined as a party to a suit for sale by C, as A has no interest in the right of redemption (z). According to the other view which prevailed in Allahabad, all persons must be joined as parties if they had an interest in the property, though they might have no interest either in the mortgage security or in the equity of redemption. The word "property," according to the Allahabad High Court, meant the actual immoveable property mortgaged, and not merely an interest in such property, such as an interest in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption (a). The view held by the Allahabad High Court is no longer tenable. The present rule gives effect to the former view which, as stated above, is in accordance with the English law.

But though it was held by the Allahabad High Court that all persons interested in the mortgage property must be joined as parties to a suit on mortgage, that Court agreed with the other High Courts in holding that a person who claimed adversely to the mortgagor and the mortgagee is not a necessary party to such suit. Thus if A mortgages certain property to B, and B sues A for sale of the mortgaged property, and C claims the property as his own and denies A's right to mortgage it, C is not a necessary party to the suit, and the question of C's paramount title cannot be litigated in B's suit (b). And this is certainly the law under the present rule.

But it must be remembered that the question is not one of jurisdiction but at most one of misjoinder, and when it is alleged that the person claiming adversely or by title paramount is a benamidar of the mortgagee (c), or is in possession and likely to resist the claim of the successful plaintiff in the mortgage suit (d), it may be convenient to join him as a party.

Explanation: prior mortgagees—The Explanation to the rule is new. It is intended to supersede certain decisions under s 85 of the Transfer of Property Act to the effect that a prior mortgagee is a necessary party to a suit for sale or foreclosure by a puisne or subsequent mortgagee (e). The Explanation declares that a prior mortgagee is not a necessary party to such a suit. Thus if A mortgages his property to B, and subsequently to C, C may sue for sale without making B a party to the suit. In such a case if a decree for sale is passed, the property will be sold subject to B's mortgage (f). But this rule does not preclude C from joining B as a party, in fact, B would be a proper party if C offered to redeem B's mortgage (g). But if C merely joins B as a party and claims no relief against him, B's position is that of a paramount title outside the controversy and he will not be affected by the decree for sale which C obtains, for that sale will be subject to B's mortgage. This is what happened in the case of Radha Kishan v. Akurshid Hossain (h). The prior mortgage was of 1892 to K whose interest devolved on B who assigned it in September 1906 to the plaintiff. The puisne mortgage was of 1894 to C who sued for sale in August 1906 making B a party but claiming no relief against him. After C obtained his decree for sale, the plaintiff sued on his prior mortgage and was met by the plea of res judicata on the ground that his predecessor B might and ought to have enforced the security in the former suit. The defence failed as C had not in his suit sought to displace B's title or to postpone it to his own.

It follows from the first branch of the Explanation to the rule that where the same person holds two mortgages of different dates upon the same property, he may sue on the mortgage of the later date subject to his rights under the first mortgage (i).

The second branch of the Explanation declares that a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage. I mortgages his property first to B, and then to C. B is not a necessary party to a suit by A against C for redemption of the mortgage to C.

Parties to suits for redemption, foreclosure or sale—All persons interested in the equity of redemption (j), and therefore in the proper taking of the accounts (k), either (1) primarily, as the mortgagor, or (2) derivatively, by operation of law, as the Official Assignee or Receiver of the assets of the mortgagor in insolvency (l) or by voluntary alienation, as the transferee of the equity of redemption (m) should be made parties to a suit relating to a mortgage (n). In other words, persons mentioned in s 91 of the Transfer of Property Act as persons entitled to redeem the mortgaged property should be joined as parties (o). If not joined as plaintiffs, they should be joined as defendants (p). But a person not having any interest in the mortgage at the date of the suit need not be joined as a party (q).

If a mortgagee suing on his mortgage either for sale or foreclosure, thinks fit to exempt from his suit some portion of the mortgaged property and to sell or to foreclose the mortgage in respect of the remainder, there is nothing in law to prevent his doing so. If

34, r. 1. he exempts a portion of the mortgaged property from his suit he is not obliged to make parties to the suit persons interested in the portion so exempted (r) The same rule applies where a part of the property originally mortgaged has been absolutely released from the mortgage and has become excluded from the operation of the security (s) If the mortgagee by his laches loses his remedy against the owner of part of the equity of redemption and does not make him a party to the suit that part of the property is treated as released from the mortgage and the mortgagee must submit to a deduction from his claim (t)

Where there are two or more mortgagors that is two or more persons interested in the equity of redemption any one of them may sue for redemption but then the other mortgagors must be made party defendants (u) Where there are two or more encumbrances created on the same property the mortgagor seeking to redeem the first mortgage must join the subsequent mortgagees as parties Similarly a second mortgagee seeking to redeem a prior mortgage must join the mortgagor as a party (v) But the prior mortgage is not a necessary party to a suit by the mortgagor to redeem a subsequent mortgage see Explanation to the rule

All persons interested in the mortgage security either (1) primarily as the mortgagee or (2) derivatively (i) by operation of law, as the Official Assignee or Receiver of the assets of the mortgagee in insolvency, or (ii) by voluntary alienation as the transferee of the security or debt should be made parties to a suit relating to the mortgage (w) If not joined as plaintiffs they should be joined as defendants

A mortgages his property to B B sues A on the mortgage During the pendency of the suit A executes a second mortgage of his property to C C is not a necessary party to A's suit the mortgage to him having been executed subsequently to the institution of the suit (x)

Trustees, executors and administrators—The rule begins with the words subject to the provisions of this Code The reference is to O 31 r. 1, which provides for suits concerning property vested in a trustee, executor or administrator Having regard to the provisions of that rule a suit for redemption (y), or foreclosure (z) or sale may be brought by trustees without making the beneficiaries parties

Benamidar—A benamidar can maintain a suit on a mortgage Thus if a mortgage is executed ostensibly in favour of A but the real mortgagee is B A may sue the mortgagor on the mortgage It is not open to the mortgagor to contend that A being merely the benamidar he cannot maintain the suit (a)

Sub-mortgagee—A mortgagee may create such estates as he pleases He may convey by way of sub mortgage to whom and in as many parcels as he pleases (b) It has been held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court that when a mortgagee has sub mortgaged his interest in the property mortgaged to him the sub mortgagee is entitled to sell the interest in the property of his sub mortgagor without impleading the mortgagor and foreclosing his equity of redemption in other words he is entitled to sell the

 'Sub mortgagor'

A person cannot be both plaintiff and defendant—In a foreclosure action by a first mortgagee where the plaintiff also joined himself as a defendant as one of the puisne mortgagees, his name was struck out as a co defendant (f)

Consequences of non-joinder—Under the corresponding section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act [see the section set out on page 841 above] it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the non joinder of a person who ought to have been made a party to a suit on a mortgage was a defect fatal to the suit and that the suit should there fore be dismissed but that the Court if it sees fit to do so may add him as a party under s 32 of the Code of 1882 [O 1, 10 (2)] Those decisions proceeded on what the Court said was the imperative character of the word must in section 85 of that Act (g)
 In a recent case under the present rule the same Court held that the result of non joinder of a subsequent mortgagee in a suit on a prior mortgage though intentional would not be the dismissal of the whole suit but only so much of it as relate to the property affected by the subsequent mortgage (h) The High Courts of Bombay (i) and Calcutta (j) took the same view as the Allahabad High Court

The word must which occurred in s 85 of the Transfer of Property Act having been dropped and the section having been transferred into the Code, the question as to the effect of non joinder is it is submitted governed by the provisions of the Code O 1 r 9, provides that no suit shall be defeated by reason of non joinder of parties and O 34 r 1, is subject to O 1 r 9 (k) Under O 1 r 10 (2) the Court has the power to add parties at any stage of the suit By s 99 of the Code it is enacted that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties [which includes non joinder (l)], unless it affects the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court
 The result ■ that no suit on a mortgage should be dismissed by reason of non joinder of parties unless the parties are necessary parties and the plaintiff refuses to add them as parties If the parties are merely proper parties (as distinguished from necessary parties (m), the Court may though the plaintiff refuses to add them as parties proceed under O 1 r 9 to deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it This was in effect held by the High Court of Bombay in Shahasahab v Sadashiv (n), a case under the present rule In that case a suit was brought by a mortgagee against the widow and daughters of the deceased mortgagor for sale of the mortgaged properties The deceased was a Mahomedan and besides the widow and daughters he left a brother as one of his heirs It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the brother having an interest in the right of redemp tion he ought to have been joined as a defendant and that the plaintiff having omitted to join him as a defendant the suit should be dismissed in its entirety At the date as taken by the defendants the period of

O. 34, r. 1. Limitation as against the brother had expired. It was held overruling the contention that the brother was not a necessary party and that a decree could be passed against the widow and the daughters to the extent of their interest in the properties. So in a mortgage suit a second mortgagee is a proper party but not a necessary party, and the suit should not be dismissed because he has not been joined (o).

Where a person who ought to have been joined as a party under this rule is not joined as a party, and a decree is passed in the suit, the decree cannot affect his rights (p) [see notes below, "Mahomedan co heirs"]. Let us take the case which is a common one, of a second or subsequent mortgagee who ought to be, but who is not joined as a party to a suit by the prior mortgagee. The second mortgagee not being a party to the suit, the proceedings in the suit are not binding on him so as to affect his rights under the second mortgage (q). As second mortgagee he could have sued the mortgagor for sale of the property subject to the first mortgage, or he could have redeemed the first mortgage and then sued the mortgagor for sale on both the mortgages. The point to be noted is that the second mortgagee does not lose either of these rights, merely because a decree has been passed in the prior mortgagee's suit, and the mortgaged property has been sold in execution of the decree. The sale has not the effect of displacing the second mortgagee and leaving him with nothing but a claim against the balance (if any) of the sale proceeds of the property after satisfying the first mortgagee (r). The omission to implead the second mortgagee does not in any way prejudice his rights (s). That his right to sue for sale (subject, of course, to the first mortgage) is not lost, has been held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (t). That his right to redeem the first mortgage and to have the property sold to satisfy his own claim is not lost has been held in the undermentioned (u) and numerous other cases cited elsewhere in the notes to this rule. The next question to consider is upon what terms he is entitled to redeem the first mortgage. In Umesh Chander v. Zakur Fatima (1), it was held by the Judicial Committee that a second mortgagee desiring to redeem is bound to pay the whole amount due under the first mortgage, and not merely the price realized at the sale held in execution of the first mortgagee's decree. When the decree in Umesh Chander's case was made, the Transfer of Property Act had not been passed and the procedure prescribed by that Act for suits for sales under that Act did not exist, that case was decided on the law as it then stood (w). By s. 89, however, of the Transfer of Property Act, it is provided that where a suit is brought by a mortgagee for sale and an order absolute for sale is made, 'the defendant's (mortgagor's) right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished,' in other words, an order absolute for sale under s. 89 substitutes the rights under the decree for those under the mortgage. The result is that where in a case governed by the Transfer of Property Act the first mortgagee obtains a decree for sale without making the second mortgagee a party to his suit, and the mortgaged property is sold in execution of the decree, and the second mortgagee afterwards sues for a sale decree under his mortgage, he (the second mortgagee) is entitled to a decree for sale on payment of the amount due under the decree, and he is not bound to pay the entire amount of the first mortgage. It was so held by the Judicial Committee in Matru Mal v Durga Kunwar (x) a case decided in 1919. In several cases governed by the Transfer of Property Act and decided prior to Matru Mal s case the Indian Courts seem to have overlooked the provisions of s 89 of the said Act and they held as was done by the Judicial Committee in Umesh Chunder s case that the second mortgagee can only redeem upon payment of the entire amount due under the first mortgage (y). It was also held that he was not bound to pay for any improvements which the purchaser might have made in the meantime (z). It was further held that where the property was purchased by a third party and the purchase money paid by him did not fully satisfy the amount of the first mortgage the amount payable by the second mortgagee should be apportioned between the purchaser and the first mortgagee (that is to say the purchaser should be paid the amount of the purchase money paid by him at the sale and the balance should be paid to the first mortgagee). Thus if the amount due under the first mortgage was Rs 10,000 and the property was sold in execution of the first mortgagee s decree for Rs 1,000 and the second mortgagee desired to redeem the purchaser the amount payable by the second mortgagee namely Rs 10,000 should be apportioned between the purchaser and the first mortgagee the former receiving Rs 1,000 and the balance going to the first mortgagee (a). The decision in Matru Mal s case (b) was based upon the words "the defendant s (mortgagor s) right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished" which occurred at the end of s 89 of the Transfer of Property Act (c). But these words have been omitted in the corresponding r 5 of this Order. The result would seem to be that the second mortgagee who is not made a party to the first mortgagee s suit can only redeem under the present law on payment of the entire amount due under the first mortgage as held in Umesh Chunder s case (d) and in the case of Sukhi v Ghila & Safdar Khan (e), the Privy Council decided that this is so and that the law remains as it was before the Transfer of Property Act. A Calcutta case (f) gave terse expression to the same conclusion by saying that the puisne mortgagee could not both approbate and reprobate the prior mortgagee s decree.

Where a person has come into possession subsequently to the date of the first mortgage either as putnidar or as usufructuary mortgagee he should be joined as a party to a suit by the first mortgagee and thus given an opportunity of redeeming the mortgage. If he is not joined as a party the purchaser under the mortgage decree is not entitled to obtain possession without paying off his charge (g).

If the mortgagee obtains a decree for sale on his mortgage without making an assignee of the mortgagor a party and sells the property the auction purchaser as assignee of the mortgagee can institute a fresh suit on the mortgage against the assignee of the mortgagor (h).

If the mortgagee obtains a decree for sale and purchases the property without having made an assignee of the mortgagor a party and that assignee remains in possession for 12 years after the date of the mortgage the mortgagee cannot dis-

Mahomedan co-heirs—A Mahomedan mortgages his property to A. He then dies leaving as his heirs a widow, two daughters and a brother. After his death, A sues the widow and the daughters for sale of the mortgaged property. The brother is not joined as a party to the suit. According to the Bombay High Court the brother is not a necessary party to the suit (j). But there is a conflict of opinion whether the Court can in such a case pass a decree for the sale of the whole property. In U'rchand v. Khandu (l), the Court held that it can. In a later Bombay case (l), however, Pratt, J., expressed the opinion that a decree can be passed for the sale only of the right, title and interest of the widow and the daughters. See Mulla's Principles of Mahomedan Law, 8th ed., art 36, p. 21.

Joint Hindu family—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether where a suit is brought on a mortgage by or against the manager of a joint Hindu family in his representative capacity, the other members of the family are necessary parties to the suit having regard to the provisions of the present rule. It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (m), Madras (n) and Patna (o), following a decision of the Privy Council (p), that where a suit is brought on a mortgage by or against the manager of a joint Hindu family in his representative capacity, the other members of the family are not necessary parties to the suit, and that the suit will not fail by reason of the non joinder of those members. It does not make any difference that the manager is a father or that he is a collateral relation as an uncle or a brother.

According to the Bombay decisions, it would seem that the other co-partners are necessary parties to a suit brought on a mortgage by or against the manager (q). But if they are not joined as parties and a decree is passed for the sale of the joint family property against the manager in his representative character, and the property is sold in execution of the decree, the sale, it has been held, passes the interest of the other co-partners also in the property, the mere fact that they were not parties to the mortgage suit is no ground for setting aside the sale, unless it be shown by them that the debt contracted by the manager was one for which they are not liable (r).

According to the Calcutta High Court, the other co-partners are necessary parties to a suit on a mortgage of joint family property, and if a decree is passed in such a suit without their being joined as parties, the decree is not binding on them, and they are entitled to bring a suit for a declaration that they not being parties to the suit their interests are not bound by the decree in the suit (s).

In another case before the Privy Council governed by the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, where a foreclosure decree was passed against the manager of a joint Hindu family, and the other members brought a suit to set aside the decree on the ground that they being interested in the equity of redemption ought to have been joined as parties to the suit under s 85 of the Transfer of Property Act but that they were not so joined their Lordships held that the decree was in the circumstances of the case binding upon them though they were not parties to the suit Their Lordships said

There seems to be no doubt upon the Indian decisions (from which their Lordships see no reason to dissent) that there are occasions including foreclosure suits when the managers of a joint Hindu family so effectively represent all other members of the family, that the family as a whole is bound. It is quite clear from the facts of the case and the findings of the Courts upon them that this is a case where this principle ought to be applied. There is not the slightest ground for suggesting that the manager of the joint family did not act in every way in the interests of the family itself and no question arises under s 85 of the Transfer of Property Act [O 34 r 1] because the mortgagee had no notice of the plaintiff's interests (i) Note that the words provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest which occurred in s 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, do not occur in the present rule

The recent Privy Council case of Ganpat Lal v. Bindbasini Prasad (u) is an authority for the proposition that in a suit on a mortgage against the manager of a joint Hindu family all the other members of the family are represented by the manager. The mortgage was by the manager and the mortgagee obtained a decree for sale joining as parties the manager and the other members of the family. The mortgagee purchased the property himself. But one of the members of the family who was a minor was wrongly described in the suit as an adult. He sued to redeem on the ground that not having been represented in the suit by a guardian ad litem he was not a party to the mortgagee's suit. This claim would have been unanswerable if he had not been represented by the manager in the suit. But the Privy Council held that as he had not sued to set aside the sale and did not impeach the mortgage or the decree the suit was not maintainable. In other words he was represented by the manager and it did not matter whether he was a party or not. The only ground which he could take was that he was not liable for the mortgage debt contracted by the manager and that he had not done

Where parties are not governed by the Hindu law and the only interest which a son has under the customary law is a reversionary interest in the property and a right to protect that interest by interfering to prevent unnecessary alienations the son has no such interest in the property as is contemplated by the present rule and he is not therefore a necessary party to a suit on a mortgage against his father (v)

- (d) that, if such payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall be debarred from all rights to redeem the property.

- 2 In cl (c) the words "if so required" have been added before the words "re transfer the property," as according to mofussil practice a re transfer is not ordinarily required

Form of preliminary decree for foreclosure —See appendix D, form No 3

Right to foreclosure or sale—The mortgagee has, at any time after the mortgage money has become payable to him, a right to obtain from the Court a decree that the mortgagor should be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the property, or a decree that the property be sold. A suit to obtain a decree that the mortgagor should be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the mortgaged property, is called a suit for foreclosure. A suit to obtain a decree that the property be sold is called a suit for sale [Transfer of Property Act, s 67]. Rules 2 and 3 relate to decrees in suits for foreclosure. Rules 4 and 5 relate to decrees in suits for sale.

A suit for foreclosure can only be brought where the mortgage is an English mortgage or a mortgage by conditional sale. A suit for sale can only be brought where the mortgage is an English mortgage or a simple mortgage. A mortgagee by conditional sale cannot institute a suit for sale. A simple mortgagee cannot institute a suit for foreclosure. A usufructuary mortgagee cannot institute a suit either for foreclosure or sale [Transfer of Property Act, s 67].

Right to redemption.—The mortgagor has, at any time after the mortgage money has become payable by him, a right on payment or tender of the mortgage money, to require the mortgagee to deliver up to him all documents in the mortgagee's possession relating to the mortgaged property, and to re transfer the property to him. This right is called a right to redeem; so long as there is a mortgage there is a right of redemption (u), and a suit to enforce it is called a suit for redemption [Transfer of Property Act, s 60] O. 34, Rules 7 and 8 provide for decrees in suits for redemption

Account against mortgagor—Whether the suit be one for foreclosure, sale or redemption, the preliminary decree in each case must direct an account to be taken of what is due to the mortgagee for principal, interest and costs. Where the same property is mortgaged to several persons in succession, and the subsequent mortgagees are joined as parties to the suit, they are entitled, if they appear and prove their mortgages, to ask for a decree for an account on each of their mortgages and a declaration of their right to participate in the surplus sale proceeds in order of priority. An account is then taken of what is due on each mortgage, the sums so found due to each mortgagee are included in one report, and the sale proceeds are subsequently divided between the plaintiff and the puisne mortgagees in accordance with their claims as found by the report (x). Where the mortgagee is in possession, an account is to be taken of the income derived by him from the property, and also an account of what is due to the mortgagee for principal and interest. In taking the account it lies upon the mortgagee to prove what is due to him in respect of principal and interest. It follows from this that if the mortgage bond is not put in evidence, as where it is not stamped and the mortgagee refuses to pay the penalty, he can only be credited in the account with the sum which the mortgagor admits was the amount of the principal (y).

Principal—The amount of principal and the rate of interest payable thereon are almost invariably stated in the instrument of mortgage. Such statement amounts to an admission on the part of the mortgagor that he has received the amount mentioned in the instrument. But an admission is not conclusive proof of the matter admitted (z), it is therefore open to the mortgagor to show that a smaller consideration or no consideration at all passed under the instrument of mortgage (a). But the burden of proof in that case lies on the mortgagor (b). But though an admission is not conclusive proof of the matter admitted, it may operate as an estoppel, so as to preclude the mortgagor from asserting that a smaller consideration or no consideration passed under the instrument of mortgage (c). This happens when the mortgagee transfers his interest in the mortgage to a third party who has no notice that the full amount acknowledged to have been received on the face of the mortgage deed has not been received. In such a case the mortgagor cannot redeem on tender or payment of the amount actually received, and the transferee is not bound to re-convey the property except on payment to him of the amount stated in the mortgage deed to have been received by the mortgagor (d).

Interest—The question of interest to be awarded by a decree in suits for the enforcement of a mortgage has already been considered in the notes to s 34 under the head Interest in suits for enforcement of mortgage, on p 106 above. There are, however, a few matters of detail which have not been dealt with in those notes, and it is to these that we now propose to address ourselves. According to this rule as well as rules 4 and 7 there has to be added to the principal sum interest on the mortgage up to the date fixed by the Court for payment. But what if the mortgagor contends that the mortgage bond does not provide for the payment of any interest after the due date, in other words, that there is no provision for the payment of post diem interest?

O. 34, r. 2. Where there is an express provision for the payment of interest up to the date of payment—and this is the usual case—there is no difficulty. The Court should in that case award interest at the contract rate up to the date of payment unless the stipulation for the payment of interest is penal within the meaning of s. 74 of the Contract Act, in which case the Court may award interest at such rate as it thinks just (see notes to s. 34, p. 106 above). Where there is no express provision for the payment of interest up to the date of payment, the Court should determine the intention of the parties by an examination of the terms of the deed. If on such examination it comes to the conclusion that there was an intention to pay interest up to the date of payment and not only up to the due date, the position is the same as if the bond contained an express provision to pay interest up to the date of payment (e). One of the rules of construction adopted in this connection is that where a mortgage bond contains a stipulation for the periodical payment of interest, and there is nothing in the bond to suggest that the liability should cease on the due date the Court will presume that there was an intention to pay interest up to the date of payment (f). If the Court comes to the conclusion that there was no intention to pay interest after the due date the mortgagee may recover interest by way of damages under Act 32 of 1839, and the rate allowed will prima facie be the same as that provided by the bond although there is no rule of law making that rate necessarily the measure of damages (g). Is the interest that may be awarded as damages to be treated on the same footing as interest for the payment of which there is an express or implied stipulation or is it to be treated on a different footing? If the former, and that is the view held by the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras, it is to be treated as part of the mortgage money so as to be recoverable out of the mortgaged property in the same way as the principal and the costs of the suit (h). If the latter and this is the view taken by the High Court of Allahabad, the interest awarded as damages is not recoverable out of the mortgaged property, but that portion of the decree which awards such interest is to be treated as a decree for the payment of money, and executed as such (i).

It may perhaps be thought as it was thought in some cases (j), that a claim for interest by way of damages being a claim for compensation for breach of contract, the claim will be barred unless it is made in a suit brought within six years of the due date for payment of the mortgage money, that being the period prescribed by art. 116 of Limitation Act for a suit for damages for breach of a contract in writing registered. In the undermentioned case (k) however, the Judicial Committee observed that such a claim was a recurring one within the meaning of s. 23 of the Limitation Act. The result therefore is that as long as the principal is not barred, six years' interest can be recovered. Thus if the due date for payment of mortgage money under a registered deed of mortgage be 1st January 1900, and the mortgagee brings a suit for foreclosure or sale on 1st January 1908 he will be entitled, according to the observations of the Judicial Committee, to interest for a period of six years next preceding the date of the suit, and it is only the claim for interest for the years 1900 and 1901 that would be barred. According to the earlier cases cited above the mortgagee would not be entitled to any interest at all the date of the breach of contract being 1st January 1900 and the suit having been brought more than six years after that date. It must however, be remembered that this rule of limitation applies only to interest by way of damages recoverable in cases where there is no intention to pay interest after the due date. In other cases the mortgagee is entitled to have the interest from the date of his security up to the date fixed by the Court for payment added to the mortgage debt though it may be for a period exceeding six years (l).

Interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment—There is no provision made in this rule for interest after the date fixed in the decree for payment as there is in rule 4 which relates to a decree for sale. The reason is to be sought in the difference between a foreclosure and sale. In the former case interest stops because the mortgagee gets the property in lieu of his debt whereas a sale must be subject to some substantial delay and in many cases is subject to long delays (m). See notes to s 34 p 106 above.

Costs—Whether the suit be one for foreclosure sale or redemption the mortgagee is entitled to all costs properly incurred (n) by him including costs subsequent to decree (r 10). This right resting substantially upon contract can only be lost or curtailed by such inequitable conduct on the part of the mortgagee as may amount to a violation or culpable neglect of his duty under the contract (o). Thus costs incurred by the mortgagee after a proper tender has been made have been disallowed (p). And where in a suit for redemption the mortgagee though he had been fully paid contended that a large amount was still due to him it was held that he must pay the costs of the whole suit (q).

Account against mortgagee in possession—Where it is provided by the terms of a usufructuary mortgage that the mortgagee should enjoy the profit in lieu of interest or that the profits should be taken as an equivalent of the interest and of specific portions of the principal no accounting is necessary on the part of the mortgagee for no questions of account can arise in such a case (r). In other cases the mortgagee in possession is bound to render an account of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property (s). As to annual rents against a mortgagee in possession see the undermentioned cases (t).

Sub-mortgagee—A sub mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or sale to the same extent as the mortgagee himself (u). Where the sub mortgagee is a party to the suit the preliminary decree must direct an account to be taken of what is due to the mortgagee and what is due to the sub mortgagee. As to the form of decree in a suit by a sub mortgagee against the mortgagee and mortgagor see Appendix D form No 9. As to the form of decree in a suit for redemption by the mortgagor against the mortgagee and sub mortgagee see the undermentioned case (v). See notes to r 1 above. Sub mortgagee on p 144 above.

Final decree for foreclosure—For form, see appendix D form No 10 Where the mortgagor fails to pay the amount due by him on the date fixed by the preliminary decree, the mortgagee may apply under sub r (2) for a final decree declaring that the mortgagor is debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property Until such decree is passed, the mortgagor may apply under the proviso for an extension of the time for payment, and according to the Calcutta and Allahabad decisions he may, at any time before the decree is passed, pay the money into Court even without an extension and so avert foreclosure (¶) It may be worth while to add that there cannot be two decrees for foreclosure passed in respect of one and the same mortgage A sues B for foreclosure of a mortgage comprising two properties A preliminary decree for foreclosure is passed as regards one of them, but the suit is dismissed as regards the other A appeals from the portion of the decree dismissing his suit If A applies for and obtains a final decree for foreclosure in respect of the property ordered to be foreclosed, it is not open to him thereafter even if he succeeds in his appeal, to obtain another final decree for foreclosure of the other property To obtain a final decree for foreclosure of both the properties, A must wait until the disposal of the appeal (z)

Effect of appeal on time fixed for payment.—A preliminary decree is passed in a foreclosure suit fixing a period of six months from the date of the decree for payment by the mortgagor of the amount due The mortgagor prefers an appeal from the decree but the decree is confirmed in appeal The decree of the appellate Court is silent as to the time allowed for redemption This does not amount to an extension of the time for payment so as to enable the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage within a period of six months from the date of the appellate decree The mortgagee is entitled notwithstanding the appeal, to a final decree for foreclosure after the expiration of six months from the date of the original decree though six months may not have expired from the date of the appellate decree The appellate decree simply confirming the original decree cannot be read as giving the mortgagor six months from the date of the decree on appeal (a) nor does the summary dismissal of an appeal extend the time for payment (b) This is in accordance with the general principle that where time is prescribed by the decree of the lower Court for the performance of a condition precedent, and the appellate Court simply confirms the decree of the lower Court or summarily dismisses the appeal it cannot be regarded as enlarging the time fixed by the original decree for the performance of the condition (c) The result is the same where the appeal is withdrawn, and no decree is passed in appeal The withdrawal does not give the mortgagor a fresh period for redemption (d) To avoid the difficulty arising in such cases, the mortgagor should take care to have a fresh day fixed for payment by the appellate Court, offering at the same time to pay interest up to that date (e), or he should apply under the proviso for an extension of the time for payment

Power to enlarge time—The Court may under the proviso postpone the day fixed for payment upon good cause shown and upon such terms as it thinks fit. The mere fact that a final decree for foreclosure has not yet been passed does not entitle the mortgagor to an extension of time (f)

It is not necessary that the application for extension of time should be made before the expiry of the time originally fixed for payment. It may be made even after the expiry of that time but it should be made before the final decree is passed (g). It follows from this that if the mortgagor deposits the redemption money into Court before the final decree is passed though after the date fixed for payment, and the deposit is accepted by the Court it becomes an effectual deposit. It makes no difference whether the acceptance of such a deposit is or is not preceded by a formal order extending the time. If the Court accepts a deposit after due time has elapsed it must be assumed in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the Court is satisfied that there has been good cause for the delay (h). See notes to s 148 Act prescribed or allowed by this Code, p 301 above.

Note that the application for a final decree for foreclosure has to be made by the plaintiff that is the mortgagee (i)

Discharge of debt on foreclosure—The effect of a final decree for foreclosure is to vest the mortgaged property absolutely in the mortgagee and to extinguish the mortgage debt. The ownership becoming vested in the mortgagee the mortgagor is debarred from all right to redeem the property (j). And the debt being extinguished the mortgagee can no longer proceed against the mortgagor personally.

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule refusing to extend the time for payment of mortgage money [O 43 r 1, cl (o)]

4. [New Act 4 of 1882, s 8:] (1) In a suit for sale, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a decree to the effect mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of rule 2 and also directing that, in default of the defendant paying as therein mentioned, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is declared due to the plaintiff as aforesaid, together with subsequent interest and subsequent costs, and that the balance (if any) be paid to the defendant or other persons entitled to receive the same.

either in the mortgage-money or in the right of redemption, or pass a like decree (in lieu of a decree for foreclosure) on such terms as it thinks fit including the deposit in Court of a reasonable sum, fixed by the Court, to meet the expenses of sale and to secure the performance of the terms.

Transfer of Property Act, s 88—This rule corresponds with s 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, excepting the words "together with subsequent interest and subsequent costs" in sub r (1), which are new. See notes below under the head "Preliminary decree for sale"

Preliminary decree for sale—A suit for sale of mortgaged property can only be brought where the mortgage is an English mortgage or a simple mortgage, or where the property is subject to a charge within the meaning of s 100 of the Transfer of Property Act (see r 15 below). The preliminary decree to be passed in a suit for sale corresponds to the preliminary decree in a suit for foreclosure in all respects except that instead of a direction providing for foreclosure, the decree contains a direction providing for sale of the mortgaged property. The notes therefore to r 2 relating to the taking of accounts and the determination of principal, interest and costs apply equally to this rule. But there is this difference as regards interest, that while there is no provision made for interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment in the case of a decree for foreclosure, the present rule expressly provides for such interest. This subject has already been dealt with in the notes to s 34, "Interest on suits for enforcement of mortgage," p 106, and in the notes to r 2 above, "Interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment," p 853.

Form of decree—As to the form of a preliminary decree for sale, see Appendix D, form No 4. On referring to the form it will be observed that it does contain any declaration of personal liability of the defendant for principal, interests or costs. Such a declaration, in fact, ought not to be included in the decree for sale. If the sale proceeds are not sufficient to pay the amount due to the mortgagee, the mortgagee may apply for a decree against the mortgagor personally under r 6 below (1). See Appendix D, form No 11.

Subsequent incumbrancers—For the contents of a decree for sale in a suit by the first mortgagee (1) see Appendix D, form No 7. For the Contents of a decree for sale in a suit by the second mortgagee, see Appendix D, form No 8.

Rights of second mortgagee in a suit for sale by first mortgagee—M mortgages certain property first to A, and then to B. A sues M for a sale of the mortgaged property, making B a party defendant. In such a suit the only right of B, the second mortgagee, is to redeem A's mortgage or to receive his mortgage money or part of it out of the surplus sale proceeds after satisfaction of A's mortgage. But he cannot, having regard to the provisions of the Code, claim the right to treat the suit brought by A, the first mortgagee, as one for his benefit. It follows therefore, that B could not insist upon a sale of the property if A's claim is satisfied by M before sale. And it also follows that if a decree for sale is passed in A's suit, B cannot claim to be entitled, to a decree for sale of another property of M included in his mortgage. In either case B must bring a separate suit for sale on his mortgage (m).

Award—An arbitrator is not bound by this rule. A decree in terms of an award may order the sale of the property mortgaged although no preliminary decree under this rule or final decree under rule 5 has been passed (a)

Consent decree—So also if the decree is a consent decree (o). In Kashi Chandra v Priyanath (p) Mookerjee J. directed that before execution an order absolute should be obtained under O 34, r 5, but the consent decree in this case was in the form of a preliminary decree.

Power to decree sale in a foreclosure suit—This power will generally be exercised where there are several mortgages of the same property. In such a case it is clear that the rights of the several mortgagees can be better adjusted by means of a sale. See Conveyancing Act, 1881 [44 and 45 Vict., c 41, s 25]

5. [New. Act 4 of 1882, S. 89] (1) Where on or before the day fixed the defendant pays into Court the amount declared due as aforesaid together with such subsequent costs as are mentioned in rule 10, the Court shall pass a decree—

Final decree in suit for sale

(a) ordering the plaintiff to deliver up the documents which under the terms of the preliminary decree he is bound to deliver up, and, if so required,—

(b) ordering him to re-transfer the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree, and also, if necessary,—

(c) ordering him to put the defendant in possession of the property.

(2) Where such payment is not so made, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the plaintiff, pass a decree that the mortgaged property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned in rule 4.

Transfer of Property Act, s. 89—This rule corresponds with s 89 of the Transfer of Property Act except in the following particulars—

1. The provision contained in sub r (1) for the passing of a decree in the case where payment is made in accordance with the terms of the preliminary decree is new.
2. By sub rule (2) it is provided that the application which follows a preliminary decree for sale is not for an order for sale as it was in s 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, but for a decree for sale. See notes below, "Final decree for sale. Limitation."

Final decree for sale: Limitation—Where no payment is made by the mortgagor of the amount due on or before the day fixed the mortgagee may apply for a final decree for sale. The procedure prescribed by the Transfer of Property Act in suits for foreclosure, redemption and sale was in the first place to pass a decree, and then an order absolute. This phraseology gave rise to conflicting decisions. In some cases it was held that an application for an order absolute for sale under s 89 of the Transfer of Property Act was an application to execute the decree, and that the period of limitation was therefore three years from the date of the decree as provided by art 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877 [Limitation Act 1908 art 182]. In other cases it was held that such an application was one to obtain a further decree, that the only article of the Limitation Act that could possibly apply to it was the general article 178 [now art 181] and that article applied only to applications under the Code of Civil Procedure and that there being no other article there was no period of limitation for an application for an order absolute under the Transfer of Property Act. [It is interesting to note that the former view was taken by the Privy Council in cases under the Transfer of Property Act decided in 1914 (r)]. To put an end to this conflict of decisions it is now provided that the application which follows a preliminary decree for sale is to obtain a decree for sale [see sub rule (2)] so as to bring it within the purview of art 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908 [old art 178], and not on to execute the decree (s). And with the same end in view the provisions as to mortgage suits have been removed from the Transfer of Property Act to the Civil Procedure Code so that it is no longer possible to contend that these applications are not under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (t). The result is that an application for a final decree for foreclosure sale, or redemption is now governed by the residuary article 181 of the Limitation Act 1908 and the period of limitation is three years from the date on which the right to apply accrues (u). All under the present Code it is clear that the suit is pending till the stage of final decree is reached and if a party dies after the passing of the preliminary and before the final decree and no legal representative is joined the suit abates (v). Where an appeal is preferred from the preliminary decree, the right to make such an application accrues not on the expiry of the time limited by the preliminary decree but on the date of the decree of the Court of appeal (w). Where a decree was passed before the new Code came into force and the application for a final decree was made after the new Code came into force it was held that the right to apply never having accrued to the decree holder until the new Code conferred it upon him the period of limitation under art 181 did not begin to run opinion that a puisne mortgagee could not sell the property without paying off a prior mortgagee and time was spent in ascertaining the balance due to him, it was held that, for that time, limitation was suspended (k)

Enlargement of time—This rule does not contain any provision such as is to be found in rr 11 and 8 enabling the Court to extend the time for payment. This being so, when the money is not paid by the mortgagor by the day fixed in the decree, he cannot obtain an extension of the time for payment (i). But though the Court cannot extend the time for payment, the mortgagor is entitled to have the sale stopped under O 21, r 69, by payment of the amount due and costs at any time before sale (j), and, if the property is sold, to recover it back by making the deposit required under O 21, r 80 (k). The reason is that the provisions of the Code relating to the execution of decrees apply to sales under mortgage decrees. This was the view taken by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Allahabad in the cases just cited. On the other hand, it was held by the Calcutta High Court that the sections of the Code relating to execution did not apply to sales under mortgage decrees (l). To negative the view taken by the Calcutta High Court, the sections of the Transfer of Property Act relating to decrees in mortgage suits have been transferred to this Code. But O 21, r. 83, is expressly excepted from application to sales in execution of mortgage decrees (m).

Sufficient part thereof—It is not necessary to sell all the properties mortgaged at once. Ordinarily the right of selling in a particular order rests with the decree holder, but in view of equities arising in favour of various parties the Court may direct the order in which they should be sold (n).

Effect of sale under mortgage decree—By a sale of property in execution of a decree for the payment of money, the interest of the judgment debtor alone passes to the purchaser (o). By a sale of mortgaged property in execution of a decree for sale of such property, the interest both of the mortgagor and mortgagee passes to the purchaser (p). See notes to r 1 above under the head "Consequences of non joinder, p 845".

Injunction restraining mortgagor from receiving income of mortgaged property—After a final decree for sale is passed, it is not competent to the Court to restrain the mortgagor from receiving the income of the mortgaged property, merely because the property, when sold may not realize a sufficient sum of money to satisfy the mortgage claim (q).

Appeal—Under the present Code a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree passed under r 4 of this Order may appeal from it, if he does not appeal from it he is precluded from disputing its correctness in an appeal which may be preferred from the final decree passed under this rule [s 97] (r). Even under the old Code the correctness of the decree under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act [now O 34 r 4] could not be questioned in an application for an order absolute under section 89 [now O 34 r 5] or in an appeal

Costs ordinarily recoverable from mortgaged property—In a mortgage decree for sale costs are part of the amount due upon the mortgage and are recoverable from the mortgaged property, and not personally from the mortgagor unless the decree itself so directs (z)

6. [New. Act 4 of 1882, s. 90] Where the net proceeds of any such sale are found to be insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiff, if the balance is legally recoverable from the defendant otherwise than out of the property sold, the Court may pass a decree for such amount.

Recovery of balance due on mortgage

Decree against mortgagor personally—Where after the sale of the mortgaged property, there is still a balance due to the mortgagee and that amount is legally recoverable from the mortgagor, the mortgagee can ask for and obtain a decree under this rule for realization of the balance from other properties of the mortgagor (y) A decree under this rule is a decree to be passed in the original suit and not in a fresh suit (z) The object of the rule is to obviate the necessity of the mortgagee having to bring a fresh suit to recover the balance (a) Such a suit, in fact, could not be brought except where the mortgagee had reserved his right to do so with the leave of the Court under O. 2, r. 2 (b) In several cases decided under the corresponding s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, it was held by the Indian Courts that a personal decree for the balance should not be passed until after the mortgaged property had been sold and the proceeds found insufficient to pay the mortgage debt, in other words, that a Court could not while passing a decree for sale under s. 88 of that Act (now r. 5) pass a personal decree for the balance and that a personal decree could only be passed when the proceeds were found to be insufficient to satisfy the mortgagee's claim (c) In a recent case, however, the Judicial Committee held that a decree for sale under s. 88 (now s. 4) could validly provide that if the proceeds of sale were not sufficient to pay the mortgage debt, the mortgagor should pay the balance personally though the personal decree could not be executed until after the sale had failed to satisfy the debt (d). There is no reason why the same interpretation should not be put upon the present rule. The addition of the words 'found to be' in the present rule do not affect that interpretation (e). This case seems to have been overlooked by the Bombay High Court in Janardhan v. Krishnaji (f). In any event the decree holder cannot execute the personal decree until he has exhausted his remedy against the property mortgaged, though if he does so without objection by the mortgagor the latter will be estopped (g). When the decree only gives the mortgagee a remedy against the mortgaged property, the personal remedy having become time barred, the mortgagee can only recover against the property mortgaged (h). See App A, Form No 43, and App D, Form No 4.

A personal decree cannot be passed under this rule unless all the properties directed to be sold under rr 4 and 5 have been sold. The reason is that the remedy of the mortgagee in the first instance is against the properties mortgaged, and such properties should in the first instance be exhausted before a personal liability can be imposed upon the mortgagor. But this does not mean that if a portion of the properties is destroyed or has ceased to be available for sale through no fault of the mortgagee, there can be no decree for personal liability against the mortgagor (j). It has similarly been held that the omission to include in the plaint a portion of the mortgaged property does not debar the mortgagee from obtaining a personal decree under this rule provided the omission was not intended to prejudice, and has not prejudiced the mortgagor (k). In the case of a mortgage by the father of a joint Hindu family not binding on the sons, the Madras High Court made a decree for sale of the father's share with a personal decree for the deficit against the father and the rest of the family property (l).

Where net proceeds of "any such sale" are found insufficient.—The expression "any such sale" refers to a sale under a decree absolute passed under r 5 above. It therefore follows that a personal decree under this rule can only follow the mortgage decree under which the sale is held. Therefore if a sale has taken place under a decree on a prior mortgage, that would not entitle a subsequent mortgagee who has also obtained a decree for sale, to apply for and obtain a decree under this rule. The reason is that the sale was not held under his decree (m). Similarly, where a person holding two mortgages over the same property brings two suits on those mortgages and obtains two decrees, and the mortgaged property is sold under one of those decrees, the fact that the sale proceeds, after discharging that decree, are not sufficient to pay the shall (unless the mortgage is simple or usufructuary) be debarred from all right to redeem or (unless the mortgage is by conditional sale) that the mortgaged property be sold

Preliminary decree for redemption—This rule excepting cl (d) corresponds with r 2 above which relates to a preliminary decree for foreclosure. The notes to that rule on p 850 above apply mutatis mutandis to this rule. For the form of preliminary decree for redemption see Appendix D form No 5

Sub-rule (c) "pays into Court the amount due on a day within six months"—If no day is fixed in the decree for payment the period of limitation for execution of the decree is governed by art 182 of the Limitation Act 1908 that is three years from the date of the decree (a)

Sub-rule (d)—This sub-rule seems inconsistent with rule 8 (2) which makes the bar to the right of redemption and the order of sale both depend upon an order made on the defendant's application in the final decree (b). A preliminary decree in a redemption suit ought to direct no more than this—that in default of payment the plaintiff will have a right to apply either for foreclosure or sale. See notes to r 11 under the heading Right to foreclosure or sale and Right to redemption p 850 above

8. [New Act 4 of 1882, s 93] (1) Where, on or before the day fixed, the plaintiff pays into Court the amount declared due as aforesaid, together with such subsequent costs as are mentioned in rule 10, the Court shall pass a decree—

Final decree in redemption suit

(a) ordering the defendant to deliver up the documents which under the terms of the preliminary decree he is bound to deliver up, and, if so required,—

(b) ordering him to re-transfer the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree, and also, if necessary,—

(c) ordering him to put the plaintiff in possession of the property

(2) Where such payment is not so made, and the mortgage is not simple or usufructuary, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the defendant, pass a decree that the plaintiff and all persons claiming through or under him be debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property and also, if necessary ordering the plaintiff to put the defendant in possession of the property

(3) On the passing of a decree under sub-rule (2) the debt secured by the mortgage shall be deemed to be discharged

(4) Where such payment is not so made, and the mortgage is not by conditional sale, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the defendant, pass a decree that the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is found due to the defendant, and that the balance (if any) be paid to the plaintiff or other persons entitled to receive the same

Provided that the Court may, upon good cause shown and upon such terms (if any) as it thinks fit from time to time, postpone the day fixed for payment

Lower to enlarge the Sub-rule (1) - decree for mortgagor—Sub-rule (1) of this rule corresponds with sub rule (1) of rules 3 and 5. See notes to rules 3 and 5. Where the amount due in a decree for redemption is paid by the mortgagor into Court the mortgagor does not lose his right to a decree under sub rule (1) because he has attached and withdrawn from Court a portion of the sum so paid in execution of that portion of the decree which awarded him costs against the mortgagee (c). The mortgagee is not entitled under O 21 r 1 (c) to notice of payment into Court (d).

Sub-rule (2) decree for foreclosure.—The mere fact that the preliminary decree for redemption does not contain a direction for foreclosure or sale in default of payment on the day fixed does not disentitle the mortgagee to a decree for foreclosure or sale as the case may be. The omission of the Court to draw up the proper decree under r 2 does not deprive the mortgagee of the relief provided by this rule (e). The decree for foreclosure or sale under this rule should be passed by the Court which passed the preliminary decree for redemption notwithstanding that the latter decree has been varied by the appellate Court (f).

Application for sale by mortgagor—There is nothing to preclude a mortgagor in a suit for redemption of a mortgage in which he fails to pay the mortgage amount according to the decree from himself applying for a decree for sale. Sub rule (4) while enabling the mortgagee to apply for such a decree does not take away the right of the mortgagor to ask for such a decree. If it were otherwise a mortgagee may not apply for sale in which case the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee would continue until the mortgagee chose to apply for sale (g).

Application for sale by the mortgagee—The period of limitation for the mortgagee's application for sale is under article 15. It has been held that an application by the mortgagor for enlargement of time is a step in aid of execution by the mortgagee (k)

Power to enlarge time.—The proper Court to which the application for enlargement of time should be made is the Court of first instance even though the decree for redemption was passed by the Court of Appeal (i) See notes to r 3 under the same head on p 856 above See also notes to s 148

The proviso as to enlargement of time applies even if the suit is originally one for sale, provided the decree provides not only for sale, but for redemption of a prior mortgage A mortgages his property first to B, and then to C C sues A and B for a sale of the property A decree is passed providing for redemption of B's mortgage by C, and for sale The decree is a decree for redemption as between B and C, and the Court may allow further time to C for redemption upon good cause shown (j) But if B obtains a decree for sale on his first mortgage without impleading C, and sells the property in execution of the decree, and C thereafter brings a suit upon his mortgage impleading the purchaser under B's decree, and gets a decree for sale conditional on his paying off the purchaser within a certain time the proviso for enlargement will not apply The condition that C should pay off the purchaser does not make his decree a decree for redemption as the first mortgage had merged in the sale (k) Nevertheless when in a partition suit an alienation of part of the property was held binding for a certain amount only and the alienee was ordered to give possession on payment being made of that amount in a certain time, this was held to be in effect a decree for redemption and subject to the power of enlargement of time (l)

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule refusing to extend the time for the payment of mortgage money (O 43 r 1, cl (o)) But no appeal lies from an order extending the time for payment (m)

9. [New.] Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, if it appears, upon taking the account referred to in rule 7, that nothing is due to the defendant or that he has been overpaid, the Court shall pass a decree

Decree where nothing is found due or where mortgage has been overpaid directing the defendant, if so required, to retransfer the property and to pay to the plaintiff the amount which may be found due to him, and the plaintiff shall, if necessary, be put in possession of the mortgaged property.

This rule is new. It provides for cases where nothing is found due to the mortgagee and for cases where the mortgagee has been overpaid as may well happen where he is in possession. There was no such provision in the Transfer of Property Act, but the practice followed under that Act was the same as that prescribed by this rule (n)

the Court shall, unless the conduct of the mortgagee has been such as to disentitle him to costs, add to the mortgage-money such costs of suit as have been properly incurred by him since the decree for foreclosure or sale or redemption up to the time of actual payment

Costs subsequent to decree—This rule provides for costs incurred by the mortgagee subsequent to the decree. See the first part of rr 3 A and 8. If costs of an appeal from a preliminary decree have by mistake been omitted in the final decree the court of execution cannot include them (o). Subsequent interest not mentioned in the final decree must be taken as refused (p).

11. [New] Where property is mortgaged for successive debts to successive mortgagees, any mesne mortgagee may institute a suit to redeem the interests of the prior mortgagees and to foreclose the rights of those that are posterior to himself and of the mortgagor

Right of mesne mortgagee to redeem and foreclose

This rule is new. It has been inserted in compliance with the suggestion of the Judicial Committee in the undermentioned case (q).

12. [New] Act 4 of 1882, s 96. Where any property the sale of which is directed under this Order is subject to a prior mortgage, the Court may, with the consent of the prior mortgagee, direct that the property be sold free from the same, giving to such prior mortgagee the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold.

Sale of property subject to prior mortgage

Sale of property free from prior mortgage—A puisne mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit [see the Explanation to s 1]. In such a case as also where the prior mortgagee is joined as a party and his mortgage is admitted (r) the prior mortgagee may consent to the property being sold free from his mortgage in which case he acquires the right to have his claim satisfied first out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property [see s 13 below].

Where the prior mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage—I holds two mortgages on the same property the first a usufructuary and the second a simple mortgage. Can I sue for sale of the mortgaged property on the simple mortgage free from the usufructuary mortgage and claim to be paid out of the sale proceeds the amount due upon the usufructuary mortgage under this and the next rule? Yes according to the Malabar rulings (s). No according to the Allahabad rulings unless the two mortgages are in favour of different persons (t).

It has been held by the High Court of Patna that where a person holds two mortgages on the same property, the first a usufructuary and the second a simple mortgage he is entitled to sue for the sale of the mortgaged property on the simple mortgage & by virtue of his prior usufructuary mortgage and further he is entitled to have the prior mortgage notified at the sale in execution of the decree obtained on the subsequent mortgage & the information of bidders at the sale though he did not mention the prior mortgage in his plaint. The omission to mention the prior mortgage in the plaint does not preclude him from keeping alive that mortgage by notifying it at the sale (u)

13. [New Act 4 of 1882, s 97] (1) Such Application all proceeds shall be brought into Court and applied as follows —

first, in payment of all expenses incident to the sale or properly incurred in any attempted sale, secondly, in payment of whatever is due to the prior mortgagee on account of the prior mortgage, and of costs, properly incurred in connection therewith, thirdly, in payment of all interest due on account of the mortgage in consequence whereof the sale was directed and of the costs of the suit in which the decree directing the sale was made, fourthly, in payment of the principal money due on account of that mortgage, and

lastly, the residue (if any) shall be paid to the person proving himself to be interested in the property sold, or if there are more such persons than one, then to such persons according to their respective interests therein or upon their joint receipt

(2) Nothing in this rule or in rule 12 shall be deemed to affect the powers conferred by section 57 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Application of proceeds — Compare s 73 proviso (c) which relates to subsequent and not prior incumbrances. See notes to s 73 "Clauses (a) (b) and (c)" on p 216 above

Whatever is due to the prior mortgagee — This includes interest on the mortgage up to the date of the confirmation of the sale (v)

"Persons interested in the property sold" — It is provided by the last clause of sub-r (1) that the residue of the sale proceeds should be paid to persons interested in the property sold. This expression includes subsequent incumbrancers (w)

O. 34, r.14. The provisions of that section were sweeping they precluded a mortgagee from bringing the mortgaged property to sale in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not. It may here be stated that the present rule is a rule of procedure, and not a rule of substantive law, it has, therefore, a retrospective operation (c)

Sale made in contravention of this rule is voidable, not void—It was at one time thought that a sale made in contravention of this rule was absolutely void (d) and that the purchaser at such sale was not therefore entitled to recover possession from the mortgagor (e), and that if he did acquire possession, he was bound to account for the rents and profits realized from the mortgaged property during the term of his possession (f). But this view is no longer tenable, and it has been held in recent cases that a sale in contravention of this rule is not void, but voidable at the instance of the mortgagor or any other person interested in the equity of redemption (g). The sale, in other words, is valid until it is set aside. The procedure to set aside the sale is by way of application under s. 47, a separate suit is barred under that section. The application must be made before confirmation of the sale unless the applicant proves that owing to fraud or other reasons he was kept in ignorance of the sale proceedings preliminary to sale. The sale cannot be set aside after it is confirmed by the Court (h). Nor is it open to the mortgagor after confirmation of the sale to redeem the mortgage, whether the property has been purchased by a third person (i) or by the mortgagee himself (j).

"Decree"—An order directing a person who has stood surety on behalf of a judgment debtor for the performance of a decree to pay the amount specified in the surety bond is not a "decree" within the meaning of this rule. It is therefore competent to the decree holder to have the property secured by the bond for the performance of the decree sold in execution under s. 145 without instituting a regular suit for sale (k).

"Decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage"—This rule does not apply unless the decree obtained by the mortgagee is "for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage". The "mortgage" referred to in this rule must be a mortgage existing prior to the date of the decree, and not one created by the decree [ills (1) and (2)]. Further, it must be a subsisting mortgage, and not one which by reason of the efflux of time or any other like circumstance has ceased to be enforceable at law [ill (3)]. Again the rule is not applicable when a usufructuary mortgagee has leased to the mortgagor and sues for rent (l), unless the lease was part of the mortgage transaction (m). Nor does the rule prevent a mortgagee purchasing with leave of the Court the equity of redemption at a Court sale in execution of his money decree on a claim independent of the mortgage (n).

Further, the rule does not prevent a mortgagee who has two distinct mortgages, one on property A and another on property B from selling B, in execution of a money decree on a claim arising out of the mortgage on A and selling A in execution of a money decree on a claim arising out of the mortgage on B (c)

Illustrations

(1) I mortgages certain property to B which was then in the possession of X, and agrees to deliver possession thereof to B after recovering possession thereof from X. A recovers possession of the property from X, but does not deliver possession thereof to B. B sues I for possession and a decree is made in B's favour for possession and for costs. In execution of the decree for costs, B applies for attachment and sale of the mortgaged property. Is B entitled to the order applied for? Yes for the claim in respect of costs is not a claim arising under the mortgage within the meaning of this rule. It arises under the decree passed for costs (p)

(2) In a suit for money a decree is passed by consent whereby the defendant is directed to pay to the plaintiff Rs 35 000. It is further declared by the decree that the plaintiff should have a first charge on certain immoveable property belonging to the defendant. Is the plaintiff entitled to have the property sold in execution of the decree without instituting a regular suit for sale on the charge? Yes, because there being no mortgage or charge prior to the decree, the decree cannot be said to have been obtained for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage within the meaning of this rule. The immoveable property must have been made security for the payment of the money before the decree was obtained, otherwise the provisions of this rule do not apply (q)

(3) I mortgages two properties X and Y to B. Subsequently by reason of the wrongful act of A, B is deprived of part of his security, namely, property Y. B thereupon sues A under s 68 of the Transfer of Property Act, and obtains a personal decree for the mortgage debt against A. In execution of the decree B applies for sale of property X. At this date B's remedy on the mortgage had become barred by limitation. The mortgage not being a subsisting mortgage [and I not having to redeem it] B is entitled to have property X sold in execution without bringing a regular suit for sale on the mortgage (r)

(4) I executes a usufructuary mortgage in favour of B to secure a debt of Rs 8 000 whereby he mortgages a fixed rate holding and his right to receive offerings at a temple. By a subsequent agreement between him and B, I binds himself to pay annually Rs 700 to B in lieu of the offerings. Subsequently B sues I on that agreement and obtains a decree against I for Rs 3 200 being the arrears of the annual payments. This is a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage within the meaning of this rule and B is not entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale in execution of the decree. B has a right to receive the money vested on his position as mortgagee (s)

Charge—This rule applies to charges as well as mortgages (i), see rule 15 below. When a creditor who has a charge on properties obtains a money decree with a declaration of charge, he is not entitled to sell the property in execution but must file a suit to enforce the charge (u). In Kashi Chandra v Priya Nath (i) it was said that the rule did not apply if the decree directs the sale of the property, but this could only happen if the decree were a consent decree or a decree passed in a suit for enforcement of the charge.

Security bond—A security bond given during the pendency of an appeal creating a charge on the sureties' property can be enforced by summary procedure and this rule does not apply when no person is named as mortgagor, for the Court is not a juridical person (w). See note under O 41, r 5 post, "Security for the performance of the decree" and s 145.

Consent-decree—This rule does not apply to consent decrees for the mortgagor can waive the benefit of the rule (x).

Transferee of money-decree from mortgagor—It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay and Madras that the transferee of a money decree obtained by a mortgagor against his mortgagor is bound by the restriction imposed upon the mortgagee by this rule, and that he cannot therefore bring the mortgaged property to sale in execution of the decree (y). The contrary has been held by the High Court of Allahabad (z).

15. [New. Cf. Act 4 of 1882, s. 100] All the provisions contained in this Order as to the sale or redemption of mortgaged property shall, so far as may be, apply to property subject to a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

(Charges)

Charge—Where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property [Transfer of Property Act, s 100]. A charge for rent created by s 63 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (a) or by s 8 of the Madras Estates Land Act I of 1908 (b) is not a charge within the meaning of s 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. See notes to r 14: charge on p 874 above. See Ghose on Mortgage, 11th ed., pp 103, 104 83* 846.

Sale—The right of a party having a charge is a rule and not foreclosure (c).

ORDER XXXV.

Interpleader

Plaint in interpleader suits

1. [S 471] In every suit of interpleader the plaintiff shall, in addition to the other statements necessary for plaintiffs, state—

- (a) that the plaintiff claims no interest in the subject matter in dispute other than for charges or costs,
- (b) the claims made by the defendants severally, and
- (c) that there is no collusion between the plaintiff and any of the defendants

Interpleader suits—See s. 89 and notes thereto

Payment of thing claimed to the Court

2. [S 472] Where the thing claimed is capable of being paid into Court or placed in the custody of the Court the plaintiff may be required to so pay or place it before he can be entitled to any order in the suit

“May be required to so pay or place it”—These words have been substituted for the words ‘must so pay or place it’ in view of the addition of the words ‘immovable property’ in s. 86. The procedure by payment or deposit is plainly not applicable to immovable property.

Procedure where defendant is suing plaintiff

3. [S 47] Where any of the defendants in an interpleader suit is actually suing the plaintiff in respect of the subject matter of such suit the Court in which the suit against the plaintiff is pending shall, on being informed by the Court in which the interpleader suit has been instituted, stay the proceedings as against him, and his costs in the suit so stayed may be provided for in such suit but if, and in so far as, they are not provided for in that suit they may be added to his costs incurred in the interpleader suit

Alteration in the rule—The words ‘on being informed by the Court in which the interpleader suit has been instituted’ have been substituted for the words ‘on being duly informed by the Court which passed the decree in the interpleader suit in favour of the stakeholder, that such decree has been passed’. Under the old section proceedings in other litigation relating to the same subject matter could only be stayed on the passing of a decree in the interpleader suit. Under the present rule they can be stayed on the very institution of the interpleader suit.

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule [O 43, r 1 cl. (p)].

rr 4, 5

Procedure at first hearing

4. [S 473, R S C, O 57, r 7] (1) At the first hearing the Court may—

- (a) declare that the plaintiff is discharged from all liability to the defendants in respect of the thing claimed, award him his costs, and dismiss him from the suit, or
- (b) if it thinks that justice or convenience so require, retain all parties until the final disposal of the suit

(2) Where the Court finds that the admissions of the parties or other evidence enable it to do so, it may adjudicate the title to the thing claimed

(3) Where the admissions of the parties do not enable the Court so to adjudicate, it may direct—

- (a) that an issue or issues between the parties be framed and tried, and
- (b) that any claimant be made a plaintiff in lieu of or in addition to the original plaintiff, and shall proceed to try the suit in the ordinary manner

Non-appearance of claimant-defendants—Where the claimant does not appear at the first hearing the Court may, if the suit is properly instituted declare under sub r (1) that the plaintiff is discharged from all liability to the defendants in respect of the money claimed award him his costs and dismiss him from the suit (d)

Sub-rule 3—This sub rule has been taken from O 57, r 7, of the English Rules

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule (O 43 r 1 cl (p))

5. [S 474] Nothing in this Order shall be deemed to enable agents to sue their principals, or tenants to sue their landlords, for the purpose of compelling them to interplead with any persons other than persons making claim through such principals or landlords

Agents and tenants may not institute interpleader suits

Illustrations

(a) A deposits a box of jewels with B as his agent. C alleges that the jewels were wrongfully obtained from him by A and claims them from B. B cannot institute an interpleader suit against A and C.

(b) A deposits a box of jewels with B as his agent. He then writes to C for the purpose of making the jewels a security for a debt due from himself to C. A later war is alleged that C's debt is satisfied and C alleges the contrary. B then claims the jewels from A. B may institute an interpleader suit against A and C.

Interpleader suit by agents—In ill (a), C does not claim through A (principal) but adversely to him, hence no interpleader suit can be brought. In ill (b) C claims through A, hence B may institute an interpleader suit against A and C.

Interpleader suit by tenants—A lets certain lands to B. C alleges that the lands never belonged to A and claims the rent from B. B cannot institute an interpleader suit against A and C, the reason is that C claims adversely to A (landlord). But if C claims the rent alleging that the lands were sold to him by A after the same were let to B, B may institute an interpleader suit against A and C, the reason is that in this case C claims through A, that is as purchaser from A. The result is that an interpleader suit by a tenant can only be maintained if the defendant other than the landlord claims through the landlord. (c) The following is a peculiar case. A grants a perpetual lease of certain villages to his wife B. B sub lets the villages to C, alleging that the lease granted by him to B was executed by him benami in the name of B, gives notice to C claiming the rents of the villages. B denies that the transaction was benami and she also claims the rents from C. C can maintain an interpleader suit against A and B. The reason given is that A must be deemed to claim through B. (f) See Indian Evidence Act s 116.

Interpleader suit by a Railway Company—A Railway Company is not an 'agent' of the consignor within the meaning of this rule so as to preclude it from filing an interpleader suit against the consignor and a third party claiming adversely to the consignor (g).

6. [S 475] Where the suit is properly instituted the Court may provide for the costs of the original plaintiff by giving him a charge on the thing claimed or in some other effectual way.

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule [O 43 r 1 cl (p)]

ORDER XXXVI

- (b) some property, moveable or immoveable, specified in the agreement, shall be delivered by one of the parties to the other of them, or
- (c) one or more of the parties shall do, or refrain from doing, some other particular act specified in the agreement

(2) Every case stated under this rule shall be divided into consecutively numbered paragraphs, and shall concisely state such facts and specify such documents as may be necessary to enable the Court to decide the questions raised thereby

2. [S 528] Where the agreement is for the delivery of any property, or for the doing, or the refraining from doing, any particular act the estimated value of the property to be delivered, or to which the act specified has reference, shall be stated in the agreement

Where value of subject matter must be stated

3. [S 529] (1) The agreement, if framed in accordance with the rules hereinbefore contained may be filed in the Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit, the amount or value of the subject matter of which is the same as the amount or value of the subject matter of the agreement

Agreement to be filed and registered as suit

(2) The agreement, when so filed, shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs, and the other or the others of them as defendant or defendants, and notice shall be given to all the parties to the agreement, other than the party or parties by whom it was presented

4. [S 530] Where the agreement has been filed, the parties to it shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court and shall be bound by the statements contained therein

Parties to be subject to jurisdiction

5. [S 531] (1) The case shall be set down for hearing as a suit instituted in the ordinary manner, and the provisions of this Code shall apply to such suit so far as the same are applicable

Hearing and disposal of case

(2) Where the Court is satisfied, after examination of O. 36, the parties, or after taking such evidence as it thinks fit,—

- (a) that the agreement was duly executed by them,
- (b) that they have a bona fide interest in the question stated therein, and
- (c) that the same is fit to be decided,

it shall proceed to pronounce judgment thereon, in the same way as in an ordinary suit, and upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow

Birth after case set down—In the case of the subsequent birth of an infant the former order to set down should be discharged and the special case amended by making the infant a party (h) so also when an infant born a few days before was accidentally omitted to be made a party (r)

ORDER XXXVII

Summary Procedure on Negotiable Instruments.

Application of order

1. [S. 538] This Order shall apply only to—

rr 1

- (a) the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay,
- (b) the Chief Court of Lower Burma,
- (c) the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, and
- (d) any other Court to which sections 532 to 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, have been already applied.

Courts of Small Causes in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay—The corresponding Chapter of the Code of 1882 applied also to Presidency Small Cause Courts Cl (c) of s 538 of the Code which expressly mentioned those Courts, has been omitted in this rule, the reason given being that its appropriate place would now be in rules under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. See O 51 r. 1

2. [S 532] (1) All suits upon bills of exchange, hundis or promissory notes may, in case the plaintiff desires to proceed hereunder, be instituted by presenting a plaint in the form prescribed, but the summons shall be

Institution of summary suits upon bills of exchange, etc

O. 37, r. 2 in Form No. 4 in Appendix B or in such other form as may be from time to time prescribed.

(2) In any case in which the plaint and summons are in such forms, respectively, the defendant shall not appear or defend the suit unless he obtains leave from a judge as hereinafter provided so to appear and defend; and, in default of his obtaining such leave or of his appearance and defence in pursuance thereof, the allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted, and the plaintiff shall be entitled to a decree for any sum not exceeding the sum mentioned in the summons, together with interest at the rate specified (if any) to the date of the decree, and such sum for costs as may be prescribed, unless the plaintiff claims more than such fixed sum, in which case the costs shall be ascertained in the ordinary way, and such decree may be executed forthwith.

Old section—This rule corresponds with s 532 of the Code of 1892 except in the following particulars —

1. The explanation to s 532 has been omitted and in lieu thereof the words "the allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted" have been added into sub-r (2). See notes below under the head "The allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted"
2. The fourth paragraph of s 532, which provided that the Court should not require the defendant to pay the amount claimed into Court or to give security therefor unless the Court thought that the defendant had not a prima facie case or that the defence was not made in good faith, has been omitted. See r 3, sub r. (2), below

Points of difference between summary suit and ordinary suit on negotiable instruments :

- (1) A plaintiff proposing to sue upon a negotiable instrument may either bring a summary suit or he may bring a suit in the ordinary manner. The advantage of a summary suit is that the defendant is not, as in a suit brought in the ordinary manner, entitled as of right to defend the suit. The defendant in a summary suit must apply for leave to defend within 10 days of the date of the summons. The Limitation Act, 1908, s 4, sub s. 1, provides that a summary suit must be brought within one year from the date on which the debt becomes due and payable [Limitation Act, 1908, s 4, sub s. 1]. The period of limitation for a suit brought in the ordinary manner on a negotiable instrument is 3 years. Article 5 of the Limitation Act, 1908, as it originally stood, referred to suits under the summary procedure.

as not including suits under O 37 (y) That article was accordingly amended by Act 30 of 1925 by adding to the entry in the first column the words "where the provision of such summary procedure does not exclude the ordinary procedure in such suits and under O 37 of the said Code" At the same time the period of limitation was extended from six months to one year

(3) A summary suit can only be brought in the Courts mentioned in r 1

A negotiable instrument means a promissory note, bill of exchange, or cheque, expressed to be payable to a specified person or his order, or to the order of a specified person or to the bearer thereof, or to a specified person or the bearer thereof (Negotiable Instruments Act 26 of 1881, s 13)

A bill of exchange is an instrument in writing containing an unconditional order, signed by the maker, directing a certain person to pay a certain sum of money only to, or to the order of, a certain person or to the bearer of the instrument (Negotiable Instruments Act, s 5)

A promissory note is an instrument in writing (not being a bank note or a currency note) containing an unconditional undertaking, signed by the maker, to pay a certain sum of money only to, or to the order of, a certain person, or to the bearer of the instrument (Negotiable Instruments Act, s 4)

Illustrations

(a) A executes an instrument whereby he promises to pay Rs 5 000 to B on demand By the same instrument it is provided that B should not be entitled to call for payment of the said sum unless A failed to deliver certain goods to B within six months The instrument is not a promissory note, for the undertaking to pay Rs 5 000 is conditional upon A's failure to deliver the goods Simon v Hakim Mahomed (1896) 19 Mad 368

(b) A executes an instrument whereby he promises to pay Rs 5,000 to B on demand At the same time a separate agreement is made between the parties whereby B agrees not to demand payment of the sum of Rs 5,000 unless A failed to deliver certain goods to him within six months The instrument is a promissory note Simon v Hakim Mahomed (1896) 10 Mad 368

Limitation for suit—See notes above, "Points of difference between summary suit and ordinary suit on negotiable instruments"

Limitation for application for leave to defend—The period of limitation for an application for leave to appear and defend is 10 days from the date when the summons is served, Limitation Act, sch I, art 159 The Court has no power to extend the time (1), unless the Court has by a rule framed in that behalf made sec 5 of the Limitation Act applicable to such applications as has been done by the High Court of Bombay. See App IV below [Rule made by the High Court of Bombay]

Form of summons in a summary suit—The summons in such a suit requires the defendant to obtain leave from the Court within 10 days from the service thereof to appear and defend the suit and within such time to cause an appearance to be entered on his behalf, see Appendix B, Form No. 4

"Unless he obtains leave."—See 3 r below.

"Together with interest at the rate specified (if any)"—In one case the High Court of Calcutta held that in a suit under this Order the plaintiff is not entitled to recover any interest unless the interest is specified in the promissory note itself (l) [See Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, ss. 79-80.] In a later case the same High Court held that if no rate of interest is specified in the note the holder is entitled to the statutory rate of six per cent till the date of the decree (m). The rule is silent as to interest after date of decree, but it would be extraordinary if the Legislature intended that mercantile instruments should be exempted from the discretionary power and the Court may therefore allow interest at the statutory rate after decree until realisation (n1) A plea of an oral agreement to pay interest will not be entertained (m2)

rr. 2, 3.

The allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted.—These words have been substituted for the explanation to the old section. The explanation was inserted to negative the effect of a Calcutta decision (n). But the Explanation was characterized as "wholly unintelligible and meaningless" by Amir Ali, J, in the undermentioned case (o), and it has accordingly been replaced by the words cited in the head note. The effect of those words is to enable the plaintiff to succeed on his own allegations, though the allegations may be of such a nature that if the defendant appeared and denied them they would have to be proved by the plaintiff

3. [S. 533.] (1) The Court shall, upon application by the defendant, give leave to appear and to defend the suit, upon affidavits which disclose such facts as would make it incumbent on the holder to prove consideration, or such other facts as the Court may deem sufficient to support the application.

(2) Leave to defend may be given unconditionally or subject to such terms as to payment into Court, giving security, framing and recording issues or otherwise as the Court thinks fit.

Alterations in the rule.—Under the old section it was obligatory upon the Court to grant leave to the defendant to appear and defend, if he paid into Court the amount claimed by the plaintiff and mentioned in the summons. It is no longer so under the present rule. The words "upon the defendant paying into Court the sum mentioned in the summons or," which occurred in s. 533 after the word "suit" in the third line have been omitted.

Limitation—The application for leave to appear and defend must be made within 10 days from the date of service of the summons on the defendant. The date shown in the Sheriff's return as the date of service is the only date to which reference could be made to determine the question of limitation arising on an application under this section (p).

Sub-rule (2).—As a rule leave to defend should be given unconditionally if the defendant shows a prima facie case or raises a triable issue. Leave should be made conditional if the Court doubts the bona fides of the defendant or thinks the defence is only put in to gain time (q)

Appeal—No appeal is allowed under the Code from an order under this rule. It has been recently held by the High Court of Calcutta that an order under this rule directing a defendant to give security as a term on which leave to defend should be given is not a judgment within the meaning of cl. 13 of the Letters Patent and not therefore appealable as such (r).

4. [S 534] After decree the Court may, under special circumstances, set aside the decree, and if necessary stay or set aside execution and may give leave to the defendant to appear to the summons and to defend the suit, if it seems reasonable to the Court so to do, and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

5. [S 535] In any proceeding under this Order the Court may order the bill, hundi or note on which the suit is founded to be forthwith deposited with an officer of the Court, and may further order that all proceedings shall be stayed until the plaintiff gives security for the costs, thereof.

6. [S 536] The holder of every dishonoured bill of exchange or promissory note shall have the same remedies for the recovery of the expenses incurred in noting the same for non acceptance or non payment, or otherwise by reason of such dishonour, as he has under this Order for the recovery of the amount of such bill or note.

7. [S 537] Save as provided by this order, the procedure in suits hereunder shall be the same as the procedure in suits instituted in the ordinary manner.

ORDER XXXVIII

Arrest and Attachment before Judgment

Arrest before judgment

1. [Ss 477, 478] Where at any stage of a suit, other than a suit of the nature referred to in section 16, clauses (a) to (d), the Court is satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise,—

Where defendant may be ordered upon to furnish security for appearance

O 38, r 1

(a) that the defendant, with intent to delay the plaintiff, or to avoid any process of the Court or to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him,—

(i) has absconded or left the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(ii) is about to abscond or leave the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court or

(iii) has disposed of or removed from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court his property or any part thereof or

(b) that the defendant is about to leave British India under circumstances affording reasonable probability that the plaintiff will or may thereby be obstructed or delayed in the execution of any decree that may be passed against the defendant in the suit, the Court may issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not furnish security for his appearance

Provided that the defendant shall not be arrested if he pays to the officer entrusted with the execution of the warrant any sum specified in the warrant as sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, and such sum shall be held in deposit by the Court until the suit is disposed of or until the further order of the Court

The proviso to the rule is new

Scope of the Order—Order 31 deals with the arrest of a judgment debtor and the attachment of his property in execution of a decree passed against him. The present Order lays down rules for the arrest of a defendant and the attachment of his property before judgment. The object of these rules is to secure the plaintiff a satisfactory trial on the part of the defendant to defeat the execution of any decree that may be passed against him

Reasonable probability—Where the defendant is about to leave British India it is not necessary to prove any intention on his part to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him. It is enough if the circumstances under which he is about to leave British India afford a reasonable probability that any decree that may be passed against him in the suit will thereby be obstructed or delayed in execution (a)

The suit must be bona fide—In every case where an application is made under this rule the Court must be satisfied that the suit is bona fide. Where the plaintiff is indisputably entitled to a part of the relief claimed in the plaint, the mere circumstance of the rest of the plaintiff's claim being of a disputable character does not render the suit mala fide (t)

Consequences of obtaining arrest on insufficient grounds—See s 9a

Form For form of warrant of arrest before judgment, see App F, form no 1

2. [S 479] (1) Where the defendant fails to show such cause the Court shall order him either to deposit in Court money or other property sufficient to answer the claim against him, or to furnish security for his appearance at any time when called upon while the suit is pending and until satisfaction of any decree that may be passed against him in the suit, or make such order as it thinks fit in regard to the sum which may have been paid by the defendant under the proviso to the last preceding rule

(2) Every surety for the appearance of a defendant shall bind himself, in default of such appearance, to pay any sum of money which the defendant may be ordered to pay in the suit.

Deposit in Court—Where money is deposited by the defendant in Court under this rule, it is a payment into Court to the general credit of the action and charged with a lien in favour of the plaintiff on the latter obtaining a decree in his favour. Where after payment into Court other judgment creditors of the defendant attach the money or the defendant becomes an insolvent, the plaintiff on obtaining his decree is entitled to priority over the claims of the attaching creditors and the Official Receiver. The reason is that the amount so paid cannot be taken to have been ordered and levied as security for the defendant's appearance (u)

Payment by surety—Money paid by a surety after decree is liable to rateable distribution (t). See notes to 73 above

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule [O 43, r 1, cl (q)]

Form—For form of security, see App F form no 2

3. [S. 480.] (1) A surety for the appearance of a defendant may at any time apply to the Court in which he became such surety to be discharged from his obligation

(2) On such application being made, the Court shall summon the defendant to appear or, if it thinks fit, may issue a warrant for his arrest in the first instance.

(3) On the appearance of the defendant in pursuance of the summons or warrant, or on his voluntary surrender,

O 38, the Court shall direct the surety to be discharged from his rr 3-5 obligation, and shall call upon the defendant to find fresh security

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule [O 43 r 1 cl (q)]

Form—For form of summons to defendant see App F form no 3

4. [S 481] Where the defendant fails to comply with any order under rule 2 or rule 3, the Court may commit him to the civil prison until the decision of the suit or, where a decree is passed against the defendant, until the decree has been satisfied

Procedre where defendant fails to furnish security or find fresh security

Provided that no person shall be detained in prison under this rule in any case for a longer period than six months nor for a longer period than six weeks when the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit does not exceed fifty rupees

Provided also that no person shall be detained in prison under this rule after he has complied with such order

Appeal—An order for arrest is appealable (w) under section 104 (1) though it is not specified under O 43 r 1

Form—For form of order for committal see App F form no 4

Attachment before Judgment

5. [Ss 483 484] (1) Where, at any stage of a suit, the Court is satisfied by affidavit or other wise, that the defendant, with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him—

Where defendant may be called upon to furnish security for production of property

(a) is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property, or

(b) is about to remove the whole or any part of his property from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court.

the Court may direct the defendant, within a time to be fixed by it either to furnish security, in such sum as may be specified in the order, to produce and place at the disposal of the Court, when required, the said property or the value of the same, or such portion thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree, or to appear and show cause why he should not O. 3 furnish security

(2) The plaintiff shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, specify the property required to be attached and the estimated value thereof

(3) The Court may also in the order direct the conditional attachment of the whole or any portion of the property so specified

Alterations in the rule—The words 'or has quitted the jurisdiction of the Court leaving therein property belonging to him' which occurred in the old section after cl (b) of sub r (1) have been omitted

Object of the rule—The main object of an attachment before judgment is to enable the plaintiff to realize the amount of the decree supposing a decree is eventually passed from the defendant's property (x)

The Court is satisfied—Vague allegations are insufficient (y) The power to attach is not to be exercised lightly and without clear proof of the mischief aimed at (z)

'Is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property'—The expression 'property' includes property of every description whether moveable or immoveable (a) The expression 'his property' refers to the property of the defendant It does not refer to property which is the joint property of the plaintiff and the defendant Thus where A sued B for partnership accounts and applied for an attachment before judgment of the partnership property on the allegation that B was about to dispose of the same it was held that the case was not one for an attachment before judgment but for the appointment of a receiver under O 40 below (b) A man is not debarred from dealing with his property because a suit is filed against him and an attempt to sell a small portion of a large estate does not warrant the inference that the defendant intends to obstruct or delay execution (c)

Effect of vesting order on attachment before judgment—See notes to s 10 below under the same head

Money paid into Court—There is nothing in the language of this rule to give the plaintiff a charge on the money furnished by the defendant as security Hence if the defendant becomes an insolvent the money vests in the Official Assignee The reason is that the money must be taken to have been ordered and levied as security to do what is specified in the rule namely, to produce and place at the disposal of the Court when required the property referred to therein or the value thereof (d)

Surety for defendant—Where the defendant dies pending the suit and the cause of action survives against his legal representatives and the legal representatives are brought on the record the death of the defendant does not operate as a discharge of the surety (e)

O. 38, Mortgage suit—An attachment before judgment may be granted in a suit on a mortgage (f)
r 5, 6

Principle of s 64 applies to attachment before judgment—S 64 of the Code provides that when property is attached in execution of a decree, any private transfer of the property contrary to the attachment shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. The same principle applies to the case of attachment before judgment, provided that a decree is ultimately passed for the plaintiff at whose instance the attachment was made. Thus clearly appears from r 9 below which provides that an attachment before judgment shall be removed when the suit is dismissed (g).

Provincial Small Cause Court—See r 13 below

Divorce proceedings—An order for attachment before judgment will not be made in divorce proceedings governed by the Indian Divorce Act 4 of 1869 (h)

Form—For form of attachment before judgment with order to call for surety, see App F, form no 5. For form of security for production of property, see App F form no 6.

6. [s 485] (1) Where the defendant fails to show cause why he should not furnish security, or fails to furnish the security required, within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may order that the property specified, or such portion thereof as appears sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit, be attached

Attachment where cause not shown or security not furnished

(2) Where the defendant shows such cause or furnishes the required security and the property specified or any portion of it has been attached, the Court shall order the attachment to be withdrawn, or make such other order as it thinks fit.

"Property specified"—That is the property specified by the plaintiff as required by r 5 sub r (2). Such property may be within or beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. The words in s 483 of the Code of 1882 were 'property within the jurisdiction of the Court'. It was accordingly held by the High Courts of Madras and Bombay that the only property that could be attached before judgment was property within the jurisdiction of the Court (i). On the other hand it was held by the High Court of Calcutta and recently also by the Madras High Court that s 483 was to be read with s 648 [now s 136] and that the two sections read together enable the Court to attach before judgment property situate beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction (j). The omission of the words 'within the jurisdiction of the Court' clearly shows that the Court may attach property before judgment, even though it may be situate beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction.

Form—For form of attachment before judgment, see App F form no 7

Mode of making attachment

Mode of attachment.—See Q 21

Investigation of claim to property attached before judgment

Investigation of claim—The claim is investigated as under O 21, r 58, and the property is either released from attachment or the claim disallowed. The party against whom such summary order is passed may institute a suit under O 21, r 63. Limitation is under article 120 but if the claim is preferred in execution proceedings article 11 applies (1).

Removal of attachment when security furnished on suit dismissed

Removal of attachment where suit dismissed—The latter part of the rule which requires that the attachment shall be removed when the suit is dismissed is no more than directory. Hence even if no order is made withdrawing the attachment the attachment falls to the ground on dismissal of the suit. A sues B and obtains an attachment before judgment. The suit is dismissed but the Court omits to make an order withdrawing the attachment. A then appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal B sells the property that was attached before judgment to C. Thereafter the suit is decreed on appeal. A then applies for execution of the decree by the sale of the property on the footing that the attachment before judgment subsisted and that it was not therefore necessary to reattach it. A is not entitled to have the property sold. The attachment before judgment came to an end on the dismissal of A's suit though no order was made withdrawing the attachment (m). Thus the reversal of the dismissal of the suit does not revive the attachment and in this respect the rule differs from that in regard to attachment after judgment. For in the case of attachment in execution a decree in a suit under O 21, r 63, settling aside a release from attachment operates to revive the attachment and a private transfer made after release from attachment under O 21, r 60, will be void under s 64 if the right to attach is subsequently established by suit (n). See notes to O 21, r 60, "Effect of order of release," on pp 668 669 above.

10. [S 489] Attachment before judgment shall not affect the rights, existing prior to the attachment, of persons not parties to the suit, nor bar any person holding a decree against the defendant from applying for the sale of the property under attachment in execution of such decree

Attachment before judgment not to affect rights of strangers nor bar decree holder from applying for sale

Effect of vesting order on attachment before judgment—Attachment before judgment does not confer any priority as against the Official Assignee, though the plaintiff at whose instance the attachment was made may ultimately obtain a decree in the suit. A sues B, and attaches B's property before judgment. A decree is then passed for A. Between the date of the attachment and the date of the decree B's property vests in the Official Assignee under a vesting order. The Official Assignee applies to the Court for removal of the attachment on the ground that the property has vested in him. A contends that the attachment being prior to the date of the vesting order, his claim has a priority over that of the Official Assignee. A's contention will not be upheld and the attachment will be removed (o). See notes to s 64 under the head "Effect of vesting order on attachment," p 188 above.

Attachment before judgment not to affect rights of persons not parties to the suit—A and B are members of a joint Hindu family. C sues A, and obtains an attachment before judgment of A's interest in the joint family property. C then obtains a decree against A. A dies after the decree. On A's death, his interest in the property passes by survivorship to B, and C is not entitled to have A's share sold in execution of the decree (p). But according to the Madras High Court attachment before judgment followed by a decree does operate to defeat the right of survivorship (q).

Attachment before judgment not to bar rights of other decree-holders—A institutes a suit against B, and obtains an attachment before judgment of B's property. Subsequently C, another creditor of B, obtains a decree against B. C is entitled to have the property attached and sold in execution of this decree. The attachment before judgment does not confer any right upon A to have his decree satisfied in priority to that of C (r).

11. [S 490] Where property is under attachment by virtue of the provisions of this Order and a decree is subsequently passed in favour of the plaintiff, it shall not be necessary upon an application for execution of such decree to apply for a re-attachment of the property.

Scope of the rule—The effect of this rule is merely to take away the necessity for a re attachment of the property. But it does not exempt the plaintiff when a decree follows the attachment from making the usual application for execution under O 21 r 11 (2) (s). This is now made clear by the substitution of the words "it shall not be necessary upon an application for execution of such decree to apply for re attachment of the property" for the words "it shall not be necessary to re attach the property in execution of such decree". Nor does the rule give the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached before judgment any right to preferential treatment over other decree holders who may have applied for a rateable distribution under s 73 (f). Again if the execution application is dismissed O 21 r 37 applies and the attachment ceases (u).

Objection that property attached before judgment is not saleable—An omission on the part of the defendant to take objection that the property sought to be attached before judgment is not saleable within the meaning of s 60, at the time when the application is made for attachment before judgment, does not preclude the defendant from raising that objection when an application is made for execution of the decree passed in the suit (v).

ORDER XXXIX

Temporary Injunctions and Interlocutory Orders Temporary Injunctions

1. [S 402] Where in any suit it is proved by affidavit or otherwise—

Cases in which temporary inj. action may be granted

(a) that any property in dispute in a suit is in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated by any party to the suit, or wrongfully sold in execution of a decree, or

(b) that the defendant threatens, or intends, to remove or dispose of his property with a view to defraud his creditors, the Court may by order grant a temporary injunction to restrain such act, or make such other order for the purpose of staying and preventing the wasting, damaging, alienation, sale, removal or disposition of the property as the Court thinks fit, until the disposal of the suit or until further orders

Temporary and perpetual injunctions—Injunctions are of two kinds, temporary and perpetual. Temporary injunctions are regulated by rr 1 and 2 of this Order. Perpetual injunctions are regulated by ss 55-57 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877. A party against whom a perpetual injunction is granted is thereby restrained for ever from doing the act complained of. A perpetual injunction can only be granted by final decree made at the hearing and upon the merits of the suit. A temporary or interim injunction, on the other hand, may be granted on an interlocutory application at any stage of the suit. The injunction is called temporary for it endures only until the suit is disposed of or until the further order of the Court (w). Thus if a neighbour commences to build on a plot of land belonging to him a house which, if completed, would obstruct the access of light and air enjoyed by A over the said plot to the windows of his house in respect of which he claims an easement, he (1) may sue his neighbour for a perpetual injunction restraining him from building so as to disturb the easement claimed by him (A) and may at any time after the institution of the suit apply to the Court under r 2 below for a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from building until the suit is disposed of. Interference with A's easement is an "injury" within the meaning of r 2 below.

Principles governing temporary injunction—"The granting of a temporary injunction under the powers conferred by this [rule] is a matter of discretion. True it is a matter of judicial discretion. But if the Court which grants the injunction rightly appreciates the facts and applies to those facts the true principles, then that is a sound exercise of judicial discretion" (x). One of those principles is that the Court in granting a temporary injunction must first see that there is a bona fide contention between the parties and then, on which side, in the event of success, will lie the balance of inconvenience if the injunction does not issue (y). Or, as stated in the judgment of Cotton, L.J., in Preston v Luck (z) to entitle a plaintiff to an interlocutory injunction the Court should be satisfied that there is a serious question to be tried at the hearing and that on the facts before it there is a probability that the plaintiff is entitled to relief. The real point upon an application for a temporary injunction, is not how the question ought to be decided at the hearing of the case, but whether there is a substantial question to be investigated and whether matters should not be preserved in statu quo until that question can be finally disposed of (a). Another principle is that where a perpetual injunction is sued for and the plaintiff applies for a temporary injunction, the Court should grant a temporary injunction if the effect of not granting such an injunction will Duration of temporary injunction—A temporary injunction may be granted until the suit is disposed of or until the further order of the Court. When a temporary injunction is granted "until the further order of the Court," and the injunction is not dissolved pending the suit, it comes to an end when the suit is disposed of. After the decree is passed, the Court that passed the decree has no power to grant a further temporary injunction (c). But if an appeal is preferred from the decree, the Appellate Court, it would seem, may grant a temporary injunction under this rule (d). In an appeal from an order refusing a temporary injunction, the Appellate Court granted a temporary injunction "pending final decision of the suit," and this was held to terminate with the decree of the lower Court (e).

A sues B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge for a declaration of his title to certain property, and obtains a temporary injunction restraining B from selling the property, which B was about to sell, "until the suit is disposed of". A fails to prove his title to the property, and the suit is dismissed. A appeals from the decree to the High Court [The suit being dismissed, the injunction is dissolved, and B can therefore sell the property]. A then applies to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a further injunction restraining B from selling the property, until the appeal to the High Court has been heard. The Subordinate Judge has no power to grant the injunction. Gossain Money v. Guru Pershad (1895) 11 Cal 146. In the above case, the Court said "If any Court has a right to grant an injunction now, we presume it would be the Court of Appeal."

"Property in dispute in a suit" - Note that the property in respect of which an injunction may be granted in the circumstances mentioned in cl (a) of this rule must be property in dispute in the suit and no other (g), for you cannot get an injunction to restrain a man who is alleged to be a debtor from parting with his property (h). Where a plaintiff who is out of possession claims possession, the Court will not grant an injunction against the defendant in possession under a claim of right unless the threatened injury will be irreparable and an injunction may be granted as to the

An application for an injunction restraining a party to the suit from interfering with the applicant's right to worship in, and to free access to, a temple which was the subject matter of the suit, pending the disposal of the suit, does not fall either under cl (a) or cl (b) of this rule (I)

Disposal of property in fraud of Creditors—The threat or intent to remove or dispose of property with a view to defraud creditors must be proved by definite evidence (m).

"Property in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree"—Certain property attached in execution of a decree obtained by A against B is notified for sale at the instance of A C, alleging that the property belongs to him and not to B, sues A and B for a declaration of his title to the property, and applies for an injunction under this rule to restrain A from bringing the property to sale until the suit is disposed of Has the Court power to grant the injunction under this rule? Yes for the case is one in which the property in dispute in the suit is "in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of the decree" It is immaterial that the Court in which the suit is brought is different from the Court executing the decree, or as long as it has jurisdiction to entertain the suit, that it is a Court of lower grade than the Court executing the decree Thus if the Court executing the decree is the Court of a District Judge, and the Court in which the suit is brought is the Court of a Subordinate Judge, the latter Court though a Court of inferior grade, has power under this rule to stay the sale and execution proceedings pending before the District Court (n)

Injunction against a person not a party to the suit—No injunction can be granted under this rule against a person who is not a party to the suit (o)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order refusing, as well as from one granting, a temporary injunction (p) An appeal also lies from an order purporting to be made under this rule, though not warranted by it (q) See O 43, r 1, cl (c)

Revision—No appeal lies to the High Court from an order made by the lower Appellate Court under this rule [s 104, sub s (2)] In two recent cases where a temporary injunction was refused by the lower Appellate Court, the High Court of Calcutta, without deciding whether it had power to revise the order, made an order granting an injunction in the exercise of powers conferred upon High Courts by s 15 of the Charter Act (r)

High Courts, it has been held that the powers of these Courts to grant an injunction are not confined to the terms of rules 1 and 2 of this Order. A carrying on business at D, sues B in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of D to recover from B a sum of Rs. 1,100 as balance due to him in respect of certain goods sent by him from D to B in Calcutta for sale as commission agent. B then sues A in the High Court of Calcutta to recover from A a sum of Rs. 2,300 as balance due to him in respect of the same transactions and applies to the High Court of Calcutta for a temporary injunction to restrain A from proceeding with the suit in the Court at D until the disposal of the suit in the High Court. It is clear that this case is not covered either by r. 1 or r. 2 of this Order. Has the High Court power to grant the injunction? It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the powers of High Courts to grant a temporary injunction are not confined to the terms of rr. 1 and 2, and that these Courts have inherent power under their general equity jurisdiction to grant such an injunction independently of the provisions of the Code, and, further, that such power can be exercised by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court (f). The same view has been recently taken by the High Court of Bombay, but the injunction granted in that case was rather peculiar in form, namely, that A should be restrained from proceeding with the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at D in such a way as to delay or embarrass the trial of the suit in the High Court (u). The Calcutta decisions, however, are not uniform as to whether this power can be exercised if A did not reside within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court it being held by Sale, J., that the power can be exercised even if A did not reside within the limits of the jurisdiction (v), while by Fletcher J., (u) and Stephen J., (u) that it cannot be exercised unless A resided within those limits. The point arose in a Bombay case but it was there held that as A had been served and had appeared in the suit without protest, he must be deemed to have submitted to the jurisdiction of the Bombay Court and the Court had therefore power to grant the injunction (y), so also in a Patna case (z).

It has also been held by the High Court of Bombay that it has inherent power to restrain by injunction a defendant in a suit filed in the High Court from proceeding in the Small Causes Court at Bombay with a suit filed by the defendant referring to the same matter to which the High Court suit relates (a).

The next question to consider is, whether the power of a Chartered High Court to restrain a party from proceeding with a suit pending in another Court is confined to suits pending in a Court subordinate thereto, or whether it extends to suits pending in any Court in British India. In one of the cases cited above (b), the High Court of Calcutta made an order restraining a party from proceeding with a suit pending in the Court of the subordinate Judge of Bareilly, a Court subordinate to the High Court of Allahabad. In a recent Bombay case, Macleod, J., expressed the opinion that though the High Court has power to restrain a party from proceeding with a suit pending in a Court subordinate to it it has no such power in respect of a suit pending in a Court not subordinate to it (c). In support of the above view, the learned Judge relied on the provisions of s. 56, cl. (b), of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 by which it is enacted that an injunction cannot be granted to stay proceedings in a Court not subordinate to that from which the injunction is sought.

A further question that arises in this connection is whether a British Indian Court has power to restrain a party from proceeding with a suit pending in a Court of a Native State. It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that it has not (d). The contrary, however, was assumed by the High Court of Bombay in the undermentioned case (e). The Calcutta High Court will grant such an injunction if applied for promptly and before time and trouble has been expended in the foreign suit (f). In England an injunction is granted to stay an action commenced in a foreign jurisdiction only if the applicant proves a substantial case of vexation resulting from the identity of proceedings, remedies and benefits or from the existence of some motive other than a bona fide desire to determine disputes (g).

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order of a High Court refusing to restrain a defendant from prosecuting his suit in another Court. Such an order is not appealable under the Code. Nor is it a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Charter (h).

Power of High Court "to stay proceedings" pending in a subordinate Court—We have dealt in the preceding paragraph with the power of a Chartered High Court to restrain a party to a suit pending before it from proceeding with a suit pending in another Court. The question we have now to consider is whether a Chartered High Court has power in a suit pending before it to issue a prohibition to a subordinate Court in the mufassal from proceeding with a suit pending before the latter Court, and if so, whether that power can be exercised by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court. It has been held by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court that a Chartered High Court has power to make an order directing a Subordinate Court not to proceed further with a suit pending in the latter Court but that such an order appertains to the Appellate and not to the Original Side of the High Court and that it can therefore only be made by those Judges to whom the Appellate Side work is assigned by Rules made under s. 13 of the Charter Act, that is by a Division Court consisting of two Judges, and that it cannot be made by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court (i). In the case cited above an order was made by Macleod, J., in a suit pending before him, staying a suit pending in the Ratnagiri Court. It was assumed by a majority of the Full Bench that such an order was a prohibition to the Ratnagiri Court and not merely to the parties, from proceeding with the suit in that Court, and it was held that Macleod J., had no jurisdiction to make the order. On the other hand, Macleod, J., who was one of the Judges constituting the Full Bench, declined to read his order as a direct prohibition to the Ratnagiri Court, and held that a single Judge sitting on the Original Side was competent to restrain the parties in a suit before him from proceeding with a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mufassal, and so in effect stay the proceedings within the meaning of a 56, cl. (b) referred to above. As to transfer of suits from Presidency Small Cause Courts to High Court, see notes to cl. 13 of the Letters Patent.

This rule does not apply to probate proceedings—An injunction cannot be granted under this rule in a probate proceeding. The reason is that the only question in controversy in such a proceeding is that of representation of the estate of the deceased, there is no question of title in such a proceeding, and it cannot therefore be said that there is any property in dispute in such a proceeding as contemplated by this rule.

If the Court is satisfied that the estate of the deceased is in danger of being wasted or wrongfully alienated, it may appoint an administrator pendente lite, and it may also make an order under π 7 below, but it cannot grant an injunction under this rule (j)

Form—For form of temporary injunction, see App F, form no 8

2. [S 493] (1) In any suit for restraining the defendant from committing a breach of contract or other injury of any kind, whether compensation is claimed in the suit or not, the plaintiff may, at any time after the commencement of the suit, and either before or after judgment, apply to the Court for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from committing the breach of contract or injury complained of, or any breach of contract or injury of a like kind arising out of the same contract or relating to the same property or right

(2) The Court may by order grant such injunction, on such terms as to the duration of the injunction, keeping an account, giving security, or otherwise, as the Court thinks fit

(3) In case of disobedience, or of breach of any such terms, the Court granting an injunction may order the property of the person guilty of such disobedience or breach to be attached, and may also order such person to be detained in the civil prison for a term not exceeding six months, unless in the meantime the Court directs his release

(4) No attachment under this rule shall remain in force for more than one year, at the end of which time, if the disobedience or breach continues, the property attached may be sold, and out of the proceeds the Court may award such compensation as it thinks fit, and shall pay the balance, if any, to the party entitled thereto

- 2 The word unless in the meantime the Court directs his release in sub π (3) are also new See in this connection the undermentioned case (1)

Scope of the rule—Rule 1 enables the Court to grant temporary injunctions in the cases specified in cls (a) and (b) thereof. The present rule enables the Court to grant temporary injunctions to restrain a defendant from committing the breach of a contract or other injury of any kind. The words of any kind are new. They

O. 39, r. 2 have been added to supersede an Allahabad decision where it was held that the words "other injury" in the old section did not include acts of trespass upon property (l) Such acts are now within this rule. In a Bombay case a lessee sought to execute a decree to evict his sub lessee. But at the date of the decree the term of the head lease had expired and the head lessor sued to restrain the lessee from taking possession. Macleod C J held that neither rule 1 nor rule 2 applied (m). A Court hearing an election petition under rules framed under the Madras District Municipalities Act cannot grant a temporary injunction restraining the candidate from taking his seat (n).

Principles governing temporary injunction to restrain breach of contract—Temporary injunctions to restrain the breach of a contract are regulated by the present rule. Perpetual injunctions to restrain the breach of a contract are regulated by the Specific Relief Act, 1877, s 56, cl (f), and s 57. Section 56, c) (f), of the Specific Relief Act, provides that a perpetual injunction cannot be granted to prevent the breach of a contract the performance of which would not be specifically enforced. Now the performance of a contract is not specifically enforced where damages would afford adequate relief. Hence no injunction can be granted where damages afford adequate relief. "The very first of principle of injunction law is that you do not obtain injunctions for actionable wrongs [or for breach of contracts] for which damages are the proper remedy" (o). In the Bombay case of Nusserwanji v Gordon (p), it was observed by Sir Charles Sargent that the issue of a temporary injunction is governed by the same principles as the granting of a permanent injunction at the trial of a case. Referring to these observations, Sir Arnold White in a Madras case said "Now, having regard to the fact that the law with regard to the granting of a perpetual injunction is to be found in the Specific Relief Act and is laid down with great precision, and that the law with regard to the granting of a temporary injunction is to be found in the Code of Civil Procedure and is declared to be a matter for discretion, if it were necessary to consider the point, I am not sure I should be prepared to go quite so far as Sir Charles Sargent" (q). However that may be, the following two rules seem to govern all cases on the subject now under consideration.—

1 If a suit is brought for specific performance of a contract and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing a breach of the contract, and the plaintiff applies for a temporary injunction to prevent the breach of the contract until the suit is disposed of, the Court will decline to grant a temporary injunction if the plaintiff and the affidavits filed by the parties show on the face of them that the case is not one for a perpetual injunction or for specific performance. The refusal of the application for a temporary injunction in (1) Elilajay v Bapu Sayu (r), (2) Haji Abdul v. Haji. Abdul (s), (3) Nusserwanji v Gordon (t), (4) Asur v. Ratanbai (u), and (5) In the matter of Ganpat Narain (v), may be referred to this rule. In the first case, the suit was by an association of artisans consisting of 57 members for an injunction against one of them to restrain him from committing the breach of a contract which provided that all the members of the association should bring the business of working and carving in wood into one shop and should divide the profits among them and that no member should take any order on his own account. The plaintiffs applied for a temporary injunction against the defendant to prevent the breach of the contract until the disposal of the suit, but the injunction was refused, for the agreement being on the face of it illegal (as the association, though it consisted of 57 members, was not registered as a Company), no specific performance or injunction could be granted. In the second case, the suit was for a perpetual injunction to prevent the breach of an agreement for a charter party. The Court refused to grant a temporary injunction to restrain the breach on the ground that a perpetual injunction could not be granted to restrain the breach of such an agreement, though a perpetual injunction might be granted to prevent the breach of an actually completed charter party. In the third case, an application for a temporary injunction was made by the agents of a company as plaintiffs to restrain the company from employing a firm of solicitors in contravention of an agreement between the company and the agents where by the plaintiff's firm were appointed agents of the company for 25 years and the agents were empowered to employ solicitors for the company during that period. The Court refused the application on the ground that since a perpetual injunction could not be granted to restrain the company from employing persons other than the plaintiff's firm as agents of the company a temporary injunction should not be granted to restrain the company from employing solicitors other than those of the plaintiff's choice. In the fourth case, the Court refused to grant a temporary injunction to restrain a Hindu widow from adopting a son in breach of an agreement entered into by her not to adopt a son. The order of refusal was based on the ground that the Court could not grant a perpetual injunction to prevent the breach of such a contract. In the last of the cases cited above the parties were Hindus and the suit was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for specific performance of a contract whereby the defendant agreed to give his minor daughter in marriage to the plaintiff. The plaintiff applied for an interim injunction to restrain the defendant from giving away the girl in marriage to another person to whom the defendant was about to marry the girl but the application was refused on the ground that the contract was not one of which specific performance could be enforced or the breach of which could be restrained by a perpetual injunction.

2 The converse of rule (1) is not always true that is the Court will not grant a temporary injunction before the hearing in every case where a perpetual injunction might still be granted at the hearing, for to justify a temporary injunction not only must the case be such that an injunction is the appropriate relief but there must be the further ingredient that unless the defendant is restrained forthwith by a temporary injunction irreparable injury or inconvenience may result to the plaintiff before the suit is decided upon its merits (u). But if a case is a proper one for specific performance and irreparable injury is likely to be caused to the plaintiff unless the breach of the contract is forthwith restrained the Court will grant a temporary injunction to restrain the breach of the contract. Thus where A sued B for specific performance of a contract whereby in consideration of A having advanced money to B to working certain mica mines B agreed to deliver all the mica produced from the mines to A and not to deliver any portion thereof to any other person and also for an injunction to restrain the breach thereof and applied for a temporary injunction to restrain B from delivering any portion of the mica to another firm to whom B had arranged in breach of his contract to convey a portion the Court held that the case was a fit one for a temporary injunction and the injunction was granted (x). But if the existence of the contract itself is denied no temporary injunction can be granted (y).

Sub-rule (3)—The powers conferred by this sub rule can only be exercised if the Court is set in motion by a party who deems himself aggrieved, hence where a District Court committed a defendant to jail of its own motion for disobeying an injunction of the Court, it was held that the order of committal was ultra vires. Note, however, that a High Court has inherent power to commit a defaulting party for contempt, hence a High Court can commit a defendant to jail of its own motion for disobeying an injunction issued by such Court (x). See s 151 above.

Under sub r. (3) the Court can in its discretion order either arrest or attachment of property, it is not bound in the first instance to make an order of attachment and then order imprisonment. There is no foundation for the proposition that the Court can only make an order of imprisonment after an order of attachment.

If the application to commit was made while the suit was pending, the fact that the order on the application was made after the suit was dismissed does not affect the powers of the Court to take action for disobedience to the injunction (a).

A Court to which the business of the Court granting the injunction is transferred can exercise powers of punishment under this sub rule (b).

Temporary mandatory injunction—The Courts in England have the power to grant mandatory injunctions on interlocutory applications (c). And so have Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction (d). The same power is possessed by Courts in the mofussal (e).

Appeal—An appeal lies under O 43, r 1 (r), from an order declining to order arrest or attachment of property for disobedience of an interlocutory injunction granted under this rule, and the Appellate Court may on appeal pass the order which the lower Court should have passed (f).

3. [S. 494] The Court shall in all cases, except where it appears that the object of granting the injunction would be defeated by the delay, before granting an injunction, direct notice of the application for the same to be given to the opposite party.

Before granting injunction Court to direct notice to opposite party

4. [S. 496.] Any order for an injunction may be discharged, or varied, or set aside by the Court, on application made thereto by any party dissatisfied with such order.

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule [O. 43, r 1, cl (r)]

5. [S. 495] An injunction directed to a corporation is binding not only on the corporation itself, but also on all members and officers of the corporation whose personal action it seeks to restrain.

Interlocutory Orders

6. The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, order the sale, by any person named in such order, and in such manner and on such terms as it thinks fit, of any moveable property, being the subject matter of such suit, or attached before judgment in such suit, which is subject to speedy and natural decay, or which for any other just and sufficient cause it may be desirable to have sold at once

Power to order interim sale

The words "or which for any other just and sufficient cause it may be desirable to have sold at once" have been added so as to empower the Court to order a sale of securities where the state of the market requires such a course

7. [S 499, S C R, O 50, r 3] (1)
The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, and on such terms as it thinks fit—

Detention preservation inspection etc of subject matter of suit

- (a) make an order for the detention, preservation or inspection of any property which is the subject-matter of such suit, or as to which any question may arise therein,
- (b) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid authorize any person to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any other party to such suit, and
- (c) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid authorize any samples to be taken, or any observation to be made or experiment to be tried, which may seem necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence

(2) The provisions as to execution of process shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to persons authorized to enter under this rule

The words "or as to which any question may arise therein" in sub r 1 cl (a) are new

Inspection of property which is the subject-matter of the suit—In a suit by A against B for damages for injury alleged to have been caused to A's house by the erection of B's house the Court may make an order on B's application for inspection of A's house to determine the alleged injury A's house being in such a case "the subject matter of the suit" (g)

40, r. 1 Receiver in proceedings other than a suit—Sec 503 of the Code of 1882 contained the words "subject matter of a suit" The result was that under that section a receiver could only be appointed in a suit Those words have been omitted in the present rule so that a receiver may now be appointed even in proceedings other than a suit (l) A Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in proceedings under the Succession Certificate Act (l), but may appoint a receiver in a testamentary suit (m), or proceedings under the Guardian and Wards Act (n) If no suit or litigious proceeding is pending with reference to the property, the Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of it A receiver therefore cannot be appointed after the suit is compromised (o)

Courts empowered under this order—Under the Code of 1882 (s 503), a receiver could only be appointed by High Courts and District Courts, and not by Courts subordinate to District Courts This bar has been now removed by the omission of s 505 A receiver may now be appointed by Subordinate Judges also

A receiver is an officer of the Court—The object and purpose of the appointment of a receiver may generally be stated to be the preservation of the subject matter of the litigation pending a judicial determination of the rights of the parties thereto (p) The receiver is appointed for the benefit of all concerned, he is the representative of the Court and of all parties interested in the litigation, wherein he is appointed (q) The appointment [of a receiver] is the act of the Court and made in the interests of justice [A receiver] is an officer or representative of the Court, and subject to its orders His possession is the possession of the Court by its receiver, and the tenants in possession when he is appointed to receive rents and profits of immovable property, become virtually tenants pro hac vice of the Court, their landlord His possession is the possession of all the parties to the proceedings according to their titles The moneys in his hands are in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to them (r)

Legal consequences arising from the fact that a receiver is an officer of the Court:—

(1) Attachment—Property in the hands of a receiver cannot be attached without the leave of the Court first obtained Thus if a receiver is appointed of certain property in a suit between A and B, and C obtains a decree against A or B, C cannot in execution of his decree attach the property in the hands of the receiver without the leave of the Court, such an attachment is an interference with the Court's possession through its officer the receiver (s) But if a receiver is appointed of certain property in a suit between A and B, and the property was mortgaged by A to C before the receiver was appointed, and C obtains a decree for sale of the mortgaged property, C may bring the property to sale, though it may be in the hands of the receiver without the leave of the Court The reason is that no attachment is necessary before sale in the case of a mortgage decree, and no attachment being necessary, there cannot be any interference with the possession of the receiver (t)

(2) Suit by or against receiver Leave of Court—A receiver cannot sue or be sued except with the leave of the Court by which he was appointed receiver (u). A party feeling aggrieved by the conduct of a receiver may seek redress against him in the very suit in which he was appointed receiver, or he may bring a separate suit against the receiver in which case he must obtain the leave of the Court (v). The application in the suit is for an examination pro interesse suo (w). The Court will dispose of the matter summarily in simple cases (x) and if the applicant has shown diligence (x1). But if questions of title are involved, the Court will authorize a suit to be brought against the receiver (x2). No appeal lies against an order granting leave to sue a receiver (y). There is no statutory provision which requires a party to take the leave of the Court to sue a receiver. The rule has come down to us as a part of the rules of equity, binding upon all Courts of Justice in this country. It is a rule based upon public policy which requires that when the Court has assumed possession of a property in the interest of the litigants before it, the authority of the Court is not to be obstructed by suits designed to disturb the possession of the Court. The institution of such suits is in the eye of the law a contempt of the authority of the Court, and therefore the party contemplating such a suit is required to take the leave of the Court so as to absolve himself from that charge. The grant of such leave is made not in exercise of any power conferred by statute, but in exercise of the inherent power which every Court possesses to prevent acts which constitute or are akin to an abuse of its authority (z). In Pramatha Nath v Khetra Nath (a), Boilly, J., held that the leave of the Court to sue a receiver was a condition precedent to the right to sue, and that if the leave was not obtained before suit, it could not be granted subsequent to the institution of the suit and the suit should be dismissed. This decision was dissented from in subsequent Calcutta cases where it was held that the leave may be granted even after the institution of the suit (b). In a recent Bombay case (c), Pratt, J., after an exhaustive review of the case law on the subject, came to the same conclusion, the learned judge held that failure to obtain leave prior to the institution of the suit was cured by subsequent leave. As regards suits by a receiver, it has been recently held by the High Court of Calcutta that if the suit is instituted without the leave of the Court, the Court may grant leave after the institution of the suit to continue the suit (d). So also by the Madras High Court (e).

It may here be noted that a receiver is not a necessary party to a suit for a declaration of title and possession of property of which he is appointed receiver (f), nor can he be made a party to a proceeding under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code merely in his capacity of receiver (g). There is no right of action against a Tahsildar or manager appointed by a receiver (h).

(3) Debts incurred by receiver in business—If a receiver is appointed of the estate of a deceased person with authority to continue the business carried on by the deceased, and in the course of such business debts are properly incurred by the receiver or the persons to whom the debts have become due may proceed not only against the receiver

0 40, r 1. personally but also against the estate of the deceased, for the recovery of their debts, and they are entitled to payment of their debts in priority to other creditors of the estate. The right to proceed against the estate is founded on the just and equitable principle that as the acts of a receiver acting within his authority are the acts of the Court, the estate cannot be permitted to enjoy the benefits of those acts without being held liable for the obligations arising out of them (i)

(4) Loss occasioned by receiver's default—If any loss is occasioned to the property by the wilful default or gross negligence of the receiver, the loss is to be borne not by the party on whose application the receiver was appointed (for a receiver is not an agent of such party), but by the estate in the first instance. The party damaged by the loss may then proceed against the receiver (j). See r 4 below

(5) Agreement controlling receiver's powers—A receiver being an officer of the Court, it is contempt of Court on the part of any of the parties to enter into an agreement with him restricting and controlling his powers. The Court alone has the power to determine the powers of a receiver (k)

(6) Remuneration—A receiver being an officer of the Court, the Court alone has to determine his fees or remuneration (r 2 below). Hence a promise by a party to pay the remuneration of a receiver without leave of the Court is against law, and is not binding on the promisor (l)

(7) Criminal Procedure Code, s 145—Where a receiver is appointed by a Court of property the subject of a suit, a Magistrate has no jurisdiction under sec 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to interfere with him in respect of his possession of the property without the sanction of the Court, his possession being the possession of the Court (m). It may here be noted that a Civil Court has no power under this rule to appoint a receiver in suppression of a receiver appointed by a Magistrate under sec 146, cl (2), of the Criminal Procedure Code (n). See sub rule (2)

(8) Prosecution of receiver—A receiver appointed by the High Court, who has under its orders taken possession of property, cannot be prosecuted for criminal breach of trust in respect thereof without first obtaining the leave of the Court (o)

—Just and convenient—These words have been taken from the Judicature Act, 1873, s 25, sub s (8). The words in that Act are "just or convenient," but they have been construed to mean just and convenient (p). The words "just and convenient" do not mean that the Court is to appoint a receiver simply because the Court thinks it convenient, they mean that the Court should appoint a receiver for the protection of rights or for the prevention of injury according to legal principles (q). Hence the Court should not appoint a receiver of property in the possession of the defendant who claims it by a legal title, unless the plaintiff can show prima facie that he has a strong case and a good title to the property (r). On the other hand, where property is shown to be in medio, i.e., in the enjoyment of no one, the Court can hardly do wrong in appointing a receiver, for it is the common interest of all parties to prevent a scramble (s). The mere circumstance that the appointment of a receiver will do no harm to any one is no ground for appointing a receiver (i), and a receiver cannot be appointed merely for the purpose of ascertaining the income of an estate in order to fix the amount of maintenance to be paid out of it (x). See notes "alterations in the rules, No 1, p 897 above, and notes below "Cases in which a receiver may be appointed". See also Specific Relief Act I of 1877, s 44.

Which Court may appoint a receiver—The power to appoint a receiver rests only with the Court in which the suit is brought in which it is sought to appoint a receiver. Hence a District Judge has no power to appoint a receiver of property which is the subject of a suit in another Court, even though such Court may be subordinate to his own (z).

Whether a receiver can be appointed when an executor is in possession—In England the rule is that the Court will not appoint a receiver against an executor unless gross misconduct is shown, and the same rule, it is submitted, applies to the case of an executor of the will of a person subject to the provisions of the Indian Succession Act. This rule, however, does not apply in the case of an executor of the will of a Mahomedan. The reason is that while in the case of persons governed by the Succession Act, a testator can dispose of the whole of his property by his will, a Mahomedan testator cannot dispose of more than one third of his property by his will (w).

Where a receiver is appointed of the estate of a deceased person, and the estate is being administered by the Court, the Court may authorise the receiver to pay out of the estate in his hands pressing claims against the estate (x).

Company—The Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of a company (y). If it is necessary to protect the assets, recourse must be had to the provisions of the Companies Acts.

Temporary injunctions and appointment of receiver—The distinction between a case in which a temporary injunction may be granted and a case in which a receiver may be appointed is that while in either case it must be shown that the property should be preserved from waste or alienation, in the former case it is sufficient if it be shown that the plaintiff in the suit has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged, while in the latter case a good prima facie title to the property over which the receiver is sought to be appointed has to be made out (z).

Cases in which a receiver may be appointed—A and B constitute members of a trading joint family. A sues B for partition of the joint family property, and applies for the appointment of a receiver alleging that B has misappropriated large sums of money and thrown the accounts into confusion. Here it is just and convenient that a receiver should be appointed, for the object is the preservation of the property which is the subject of the suit (a). But in a partition suit where the joint family property consists of land, a receiver will not be appointed unless the plaintiff shows that he has an excellent chance of succeeding and that the property is in danger of being wasted (b). Nor is it sufficient, in a suit for the possession of land and mesne profits, that the defendant is a man of no substance from whom it would be impossible to recover mesne profits (c). A receiver should not be appointed in super-session of a

Partners in suits.—In considering the question of the appointment of a receiver in partnership suits, a distinction has to be drawn between cases in which the contest is between partners and cases in which the contest is between partners on the one hand and non partners on the other.

In the first class of cases that is, where one partner seeks to have a receiver appointed against his co partners, it is necessary to distinguish cases in which the partnership has already been dissolved from those in which the partnership is still subsisting. If the partnership is already dissolved, the Court usually appoints a receiver, almost as a matter of course (l). The jurisdiction of the Court to appoint a receiver is not ousted by an arbitration clause providing for a reference to arbitration of all matters in dispute between the parties (m). But if the partnership is still subsisting, no receiver will be appointed unless some special grounds for the appointment can be shown. There must be fraud or gross misconduct of some kind (n), or wilful denial of the complaining partner's rights (o), or persistence under cover of right in conduct endangering the assets (p).

In the second class of cases, that is, where the contest is between partners on the one hand and non partners on the other, e.g. legal representatives of a late partner, a receiver will not be granted against a member of the firm at the instance of the legal representatives, unless some special grounds for the interference of the Court can be established. But it is a matter of course to appoint a receiver where such appointment is sought by a partner against the legal representatives of his late co partner, or where all the partners are dead and an action is pending between their representatives (g)

Decree for maintenance.—Where a decree is passed for maintenance and a charge is created on a specified property to secure payment of the allowance, it is desirable, in order to avoid difficulty in executing the decree and to make a fresh suit unnecessary in case of default of payment, to appoint a receiver by the decree itself with directions, in case of default of payment to take possession of the property and sell the same, and out of the sale proceeds to pay the allowance (r).

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 145—The fact that there exists in respect of any immoveable property an order of a Magistrate passed under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is no bar to the exercise by a Civil Court of the power conferred on it by this rule to appoint a receiver in respect of the same property (a). It is, however, different where a receiver is appointed by a Magistrate under s. 146, cl. (2), of that Code. See n. 906, case (7).

Receiver and administrator pendente lite—A receiver may be appointed under this rule in a testamentary suit governed by the Probate Act, 1881 (t). The Chancery Division of the High Court of England may appoint a receiver of the estate of the deceased, though proceedings have been commenced by the defendant in the Probate Court and though the defendant is prepared to apply at once in that Court for an administrator pendente lite (u).

Remove any person—This refers to a person other than the receiver (v) The Court should inquire into any claims made by persons not parties to the suit before appointing a receiver (u) A usufructuary mortgagee who has obtained a decree for sale is not entitled to possession as against the receiver on an agreement made with the mortgagor (x)

Where security not furnished by receiver—Where the order whereby a person is appointed receiver requires him to give security so that the order is conditional upon his giving the security, he cannot be receiver until the security is given (y). It is otherwise where the order is not conditional but absolute in its terms, in such a case the order takes effect immediately it is made (z).

Receiver of future earnings of judgment-debtor.—The Court has no jurisdiction to enforce satisfaction of a judgment debt by appointing a receiver of the future earnings of the judgment debtor "Unless a man has assigned or charged his future earnings or has made a sum payable out of them, they cannot be prospectively impounded by any of his creditors by any ordinary process of execution, whether legal or equitable" (a). Similarly, a receiver cannot be appointed of future allowances of maintenance payable to a judgment debtor (b). See notes to s. 51 above.

Receiver in execution proceedings—See notes to § 52 See also notes to O 21, § 46, "Procedure where garnishee denies debt," p 649 above

Receiver after decree—A receiver may be appointed even after a decree has been passed (c) See cl (a) of the rule

O. 40, r. 1. "All such powers as to bringing and defending suits as the owner himself has—These words are wide enough to empower the Court to authorise a receiver to sue in his own name, hence where a receiver is authorised in that behalf, he may sue in his own name (d). And it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where a receiver is appointed with full powers under sub r (1), cl (d), that is, with such powers as to bringing suits as the owner himself has, the receiver is entitled to sue in his own name though not expressly authorized to do so (e). As regards suits for possession, it is to be noted that though ordinarily a suit to recover possession of property can only be brought by him in whom there is a present title to it, yet if a receiver is appointed under this rule with such powers as to bringing suits as the owner himself has, he is entitled to sue for possession (f). But a receiver takes such title as the owner himself had in the property, and he cannot therefore sue for possession in a case in which the owner himself could not have done so (g). A receiver empowered to collect outstandings and do all things necessary for the realization and preservation of the assets of a firm has no power to mortgage the property of the firm (h). But a receiver of mortgaged properties on whom has been conferred 'the same powers of realization, management and protection as the owners themselves have,' has a discretionary power of sale (i).

"Realization of property"—After the dismissal of a suit in which a receiver has been appointed, the Court has no power to give the receiver any fresh power, as for instance, liberty to sell (j).

"All such powers as to the execution of documents which the owner himself has"—This includes a power to the receiver to execute a conveyance including the share of a minor defendant (k).

Suit by or against receiver—leave of Court.—See notes under the same head, p 905 above.

Contempt proceedings.—Where a receiver is appointed of property the subject of a suit, and the property is forcibly taken possession of by any person, not only the parties interested in the property, but also the receiver may proceed against such person for contempt. There is nothing to prevent the receiver from himself applying for a rule for contempt (l).

Appointment of new receiver in place of old receiver.—Where a receiver appointed under this rule institutes civil proceedings, and is then replaced by another receiver, it is necessary that the new receiver should be made a party to the proceedings (m).

Continuance of office.—A Court appointing a receiver may by its order provide that the office should continue permanently after the decree when such continuance is necessary, or for so long as it may be so (n).

A sues B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. The suit is dismissed on a preliminary ground. A appeals to the High Court, and pending the appeal B is appointed receiver of the property in dispute in the suit. The High Court acts aside the decree of the lower Court, and the case is remanded to the lower Court for trial on the merits.

After the appeal is over, T forcibly enters into possession of the property in the possession of R as receiver. R applies to the High Court that T may be committed for contempt. It is contended for T that the appeal being over, R must be decreed to have been discharged from the office of receiver when the appellate decree was passed. This contention will not prevail, for though the appeal may be over, R must be regarded as receiver of the property until he is finally discharged by the Court. Hence R is entitled to make the application to commit T for contempt (o).

A receiver in a partition suit is not discharged merely by the passing of a preliminary decree for partition (p).

Receiver's liability to account.—The Court appointing a receiver in a suit has authority, incidental to its jurisdiction, to order him to account, although the suit may no longer be pending (q). Although the dismissal of a suit may in some cases mean the discharge of the receiver, still the Court has jurisdiction over the receiver who is an officer of the Court. The Court has jurisdiction to require accounts from a receiver, to allow parties to examine accounts and to deal with all matters connected with the management of the receiver (r). See r 3 (b) below.

Suit by subsequent against former receiver.—A suit cannot be maintained by a present receiver of an estate against the former receiver for the recovery of money alleged to be due by the former receiver to the estate (s).

Receiver's lien.—A receiver, though discharged, is entitled to a lien on the estate for all his just claims and allowances. Hence the Court will not compel a receiver, who has been discharged, to make over the property in his possession, until his lien has been satisfied or provided for by a sufficient indemnity (t).

Joint receivers.—As a general rule appointment of more than one receiver whether by the same or a different Court except in case of joint receivers, is not allowable (u).

Appeal.—An appeal lies not only from an order granting an application to appoint a receiver, but from an order rejecting such application (v) [O 43, s 1 cl (a)]. But no appeal lies from directions given by a Court in passing receiver's accounts. Such directions do not come within any of the four clauses of sub r (1) (w). No appeal, however, lies to the Privy Council from an order refusing to appoint a receiver (x). An order refusing to remove a receiver is not appealable (y).

It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (z), Bombay (a), and Allahabad (b) that an order that a receiver be appointed without appointing anybody by name as receiver and adjourning the application to a later date for so appointing one is not an order within the meaning of this rule and it is not therefore appealable under O 43 r 1, cl (a). The contrary has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (c).

and by the Patna High Court (d) No appeal lies from an order merely expressing an intention of appointing a receiver and calling upon parties to suggest names (e)

A receiver is appointed of B's property in a suit by A against B. C claims to be in possession of the property under an agreement between him and B, and he objects to the appointment of the receiver, but the objection is dismissed. The order comes within this rule, though C is not a party to the suit and is therefore appealable (f). An order appointing a receiver pending an application for the appointment of a common manager under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 also falls under this rule and is therefore appealable under O. 43, r. 1, cl. (s) (g).

Letters Patent appeal—An order directing a receiver in a suit to advance money to a guardian ad litem to enable him to conduct the defence on behalf of a minor defendant is not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and no appeal lies therefrom (h)

Revision—Where a Court appoints a receiver in a case in which it has no jurisdiction to do so, as where a receiver is appointed in a proceeding under the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, the Court acts without jurisdiction, and the High Court may interfere in revision (s)

A receiver cannot delegate his powers to others—Where a receiver is appointed to collect the rents of an estate, it is his duty to collect the rents himself, or where the rents are collected by a clerk on his behalf, to receive the rents and to keep proper accounts thereof. If the rents received by the clerk are misappropriated, the receiver is bound to make good the loss. He is not justified in delegating or entrusting to another a duty entrusted to him by the Court (f).

Summary jurisdiction.—Where the matter complained of rests on an agreement which has not been carried out, the Court may interfere to prevent its receiver giving effect to the proposed agreement, and this it may do on the mere application of a party to the suit (i). But where the matter has passed out of the stage of agreement as where a lease has already been granted by the receiver, no summary order could be passed to set aside the lease but the party aggrieved must proceed by suit against the receiver (h).

Form—For form of appointment of receiver, see App F, no 10.

2. [S 503, cl (d)] The Court may by general or special order fix the amount to be paid as remuneration for the services of the receiver.

Remuneration

Remuneration—See notes under the same head on p 906 above. See also text to r 1, 'Receiver's lien, p 911 above. It has been held that the Court has inherent jurisdiction to order a plaintiff to refund to a party whom he has wrongly impleaded in a suit, the commission and charges incurred by a receiver of the property of that party when the suit as against him is dismissed and the receivership cancelled (n).

- (b) submit his accounts at such periods and in such form as the Court directs ;
- (c) pay the amount due from him as the Court directs , and
- (d) be responsible for any loss occasioned to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence

Submit his accounts—The accounts should be supported by vouchers which will be admitted as evidence of payment unless reasonable ground for impeaching them is shown (n) Objections to the system of management adopted by the receiver cannot be heard as exceptions to the receiver's accounts, but may be the subject of a scheme to be submitted for the orders of the Court (o) See notes 'Receiver's liability to account', on p 911 above and notes to r 4 below

- (b) fails to pay the amount due from him as the Court directs, or
- (c) occasions loss to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence,

Loss to property occasioned by wilful default of receiver—Property includes the income of property (q) See notes to r 1 Loss occasioned by receiver's default i 906 above

Appeals from Original Decrees.

1. [S. 541.] (1) Every appeal shall be preferred in the form of a memorandum signed by the appellant or his pleader and presented to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf. The memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and (unless the appellate Court dispenses therewith) of the judgment on which it is founded.

Form of appeal What to accompany memorandum

(2) The memorandum shall set forth, concisely and under distinct heads, the grounds of objection to the decree appealed from without any argument or narrative; and such grounds shall be numbered consecutively.

Contents of memorandum

Appeal from original decree—See s. 96 and notes thereto

Defective vakalatnams—A memorandum of appeal cannot be said to be properly presented, if it is presented by a vakil whose name does not appear in the vakalatnama, though by an oversight. In such case the appeal should be dismissed though the objection to its validity is taken at a very late stage of the proceedings (w) A power of attorney expressly authorising presentation of the appeal is sufficient (x)

Signed—If the memorandum of appeal is signed, it matters not that the grounds of appeal are set forth in an unsigned annexure (y)

Memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of decree and of judgment—O 41, s 1, makes it an inflexible rule that in the case of appeals from decrees the memorandum of appeal shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree. The Court cannot dispense with it, for the rule is imperative (z). A copy merely of the judgment is not sufficient even if the decree has not yet been drawn up (a), nor will a copy of a translation suffice (b). If a copy of the decree is filed after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the appeal, the appeal is time barred, the reason is that there is no valid appeal until a copy of the decree is filed. The same rule applies where an appeal is preferred from an order, in such a case the memorandum should be accompanied by a copy of the order (c) see O 43, r 2. On the same principle, if the memorandum is not accompanied by a copy of the judgment, the appeal must be dismissed as time barred unless the appellate Court dispenses with such copy (d). When the judgment incorporated by reference an interlocutory order, the omission to annex copy of that order was excused (e).

Grounds of objection—The grounds of objection must be such as arise from the pleadings and evidence, and are necessary for the decision of the case (f). The appellant must not be allowed in appeal to make out a new case (g), or a case inconsistent with the case set up by him in the lower Court (h). Nor could an appellate Court make an entirely new case for a plaintiff which he never made for himself at any period of the trial (i).

In drawing up the grounds of appeal it should be remembered that no subsequent event or devolution of interest can affect the decision of a question as it stood at the time the decree appealed against was pronounced. To give effect to these some supplementary proceedings, and not an appeal, is the right procedure (j).

Grounds of objection which may be taken for the first time in appeal—There are certain points which though not taken in the lower Court may yet be taken for the first time before the appellate Court. Thus an objection to the jurisdiction of the lower Court to entertain the suit may be taken for the first time in appeal (k). Similarly a point of law arising out of admitted facts and which does not take the opponent by surprise (l) or an objection on the score of a defect fatal to the suit may be taken for the first time in appeal, e.g., that a person interested in the mortgaged property was not joined as a party to the suit as required by s 34, r 1 (m), or that a notice required to be given by a zamindar to a putnidar under s 6 of Regulation 18 of 1819 was defective in some essential particulars (n). But the defect in each case must appear on the face of the proceedings otherwise the objection will not be entertained (o). Similarly to the grounds of objection set forth in the memorandum of appeal or taken by leave of the Court under this rule

Provided that the Court shall not rest its decision on any other ground unless the party who may be affected thereby has had a sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground

Leave of Court - Limitation—The appellant cannot, except by leave of the Court, urge or be heard in support of any ground of objection not set forth in the memorandum of appeal. Thus if the plea that the suit is barred by limitation is not taken in the memorandum of appeal, the appellant cannot urge that plea in appeal without the leave of the Court. The appellate Court may grant leave, but it is not bound to do so. Notice to the respondent does not dispense with the necessity for leave of the Court (v1). But the leave should not be refused if the point of limitation arises on the face of the plaint (v2). And further under the latter part of this rule, the appellate Court can of its own motion take cognizance of the question as to whether the suit is barred by limitation, though the plea of limitation has not been taken in the memorandum of appeal, and rest its decision on that ground, provided the opposite party is given an opportunity of being heard on the point. In either case, however, the bar of limitation must be patent on the face of the proceedings (x). If it is not, and the plea involves a fresh finding of fact, the plea should not be allowed (x2). The same rules apply where the plea that the suit is barred by limitation is raised for the first time in second appeal (y).

The case put above must be distinguished from the case contemplated by s. 3 of the Limitation Act, 1908.

preferred after the plea has been set up as a defence. An instance to dismiss a suit if it is barred by limitation, whether the plea of limitation has been taken by the defendant or not. Similarly, it is the duty of the appellate Court to dismiss an appeal before it if the appeal was barred by limitation when presented.

any duty upon an appellate Court to entertain the plea of limitation if the question is not whether the appeal before it is barred by limitation, but whether the suit was so barred. Similarly, the said section does not impose any duty upon the second appellate Court to entertain the plea of limitation if the question is not whether the second appeal is barred by limitation, but whether the first appeal was so barred. It is the provisions of the present rule that apply to the two last mentioned cases, and not the provisions of s. 3 of the Limitation Act. Hence in those cases the plea of limitation must be specifically taken in the memorandum of appeal or by leave of the Court under this rule.

Proviso to the rule—The appellate Court is not precluded from basing its decision upon a ground not set forth in the memorandum of appeal nor taken by leave of the Court under this rule (a), but this power is to be exercised by the Court alone and neither party can claim it as of right (b). But though the appellate Court may

New questions of fact—In this connection we may note the following observations made in the course of a judgment in a Madras case: "Though we may perhaps consider in appeal any question of law arising from facts which are either admitted or undisputed, we cannot allow without any satisfactory reason new questions of fact to be raised for the first time in appeal" (d)

Making a new case in appeal—A Court of appeal is not justified in exposing a party after he has obtained his decree to the brunt of a new attack of which he had never had notice during the hearing of the suit (e)

3 [S 543] (1) Where the memorandum of appeal is not drawn up in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, it may be rejected or be returned to the appellant for the purpose of being amended within a time to be fixed by the Court or be amended then and there

Rejection or amendment of memorandum

(2) Where the Court rejects any memorandum, it shall record the reasons for such rejection

(3) Where a memorandum of appeal is amended, the Judge, or such officer as he appoints in this behalf, shall sign or initial the amendment

Returned for amendment—When a memorandum of appeal is returned for amendment, the Court should fix a time for its return (f) See s 107

Appeal—A decision rejecting a memorandum of appeal on the ground that it is barred by limitation (g) or that it is insufficiently stamped (h), or that it was not duly presented (i) has the force of a decree within the meaning of s 2 and is therefore appealable

Appellate Court to have same power as Courts of original jurisdiction—It is important to note at this stage the provisions of s 107. That section provides that the appellate Court shall have the same powers and shall perform as nearly as may be the same duties as are conferred and imposed on Courts of original jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted therein tiffs or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, O. 41 and thereupon the appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be.

Ground common to all defendants—This rule provides that where there are more defendants than one, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the defendants, any one of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the defendants (j). The rule will not apply to different appeals on a common ground unless they have been consolidated (k). It is not necessary for the application of this rule that the decree should proceed on every ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, it is quite sufficient if it proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants. A sues B, C and D for recovering possession of certain lands on declaration of title thereto alleging that he was dispossessed by all the defendants together in pursuance of a conspiracy between them. B, C and D file separate written statements denying A's title and also denying dispossession and each claiming to hold separate parcels of land from third parties. The Court of first instance finds in favour of the title and the possession of A and that A was dispossessed by B, C and D. B alone appeals from the decree. The appellate Court finds that A had failed to prove the title set up by him or that he was in possession of the land. Should the appellate Court reverse the decree of the lower Court in favour of B alone who appealed from the decree, or should it reverse the decree of the lower Court in favour also of C and D though they did not join in the appeal? The answer is that if the decree of the lower Court proceeded on a ground common to all the three defendants, the decree should be reversed under this rule not only in favour of B but also in favour of C and D. Now the ground of defence common to all the defendants was that A had no title to the lands and the decree of the lower Court proceeded on the ground that A had a title to the lands. The decree therefore proceeded on a ground common to all the defendants. The appellate Court should therefore reverse the decree not only in favour of B but also in favour of C and D. It is quite immaterial that the defendants claimed to be interested by different titles in separate portions of the lands. It is enough if any one ground on which the decree appealed from proceeds is common to all the defendants (l). But the provisions of this rule do not apply, unless the lower Court whose decree is appealed from has proceeded upon some ground common to all the plaintiffs, or all the defendants. If the lower Court has not proceeded upon any such ground it is not competent to the appellate Court to reverse the decree as to all the plaintiffs or all the defendants upon a ground which the appellate Court considers to be common to all the plaintiffs or all the defendants (m).

If in the case put above, the appellate Court while reversing the decree in favour of B, refuses to reverse it in favour also of C and D on the ground that it has no power to do so the decree of the appellate Court will be subject to revision for failure of exercise of jurisdiction (n). See s 115 cl (b). If the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground

- O. 41, common to all the defendants, the appellate Court may reverse the decree in favour of
 rr. 4, 5. all the defendants even if some of the defendants suffered the decree to be passed ex parte against them (o)

Ground common to all the plaintiffs—A and his son B jointly sue C to recover Rs 2,000. A decree is passed for the plaintiffs for Rs 500 only. A alone appeals from the decree. C files cross objections under r. 22 below. The appellate Court rejects the plaintiff's claim in toto, and reverses the decree of the lower Court. Subsequently B, who did not join in the appeal, applies for execution of the original decree against C. B is not entitled to take out execution, for although he was not a party to the appeal, he is bound under this rule by the decree of the appellate Court (p)

See notes to r. 22 below, "A respondent may urge cross objections against the appellant but not as a rule against a co respondent"

May reverse decree in favour of all plaintiffs or defendants.—The word "may" shows that the appellate Court is given a discretion in the matter. It may therefore reverse the decree in favour of some only of the plaintiffs or defendants. It is not bound to do so in favour of all of them (q)

Death of one of several appellants or respondents in cases where the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all of them.—Where a preliminary decree had been passed in favour of two appellants jointly in ignorance of the fact that one was dead, the Court allowed the heirs of the deceased appellant to be substituted as parties in the final decree (r). See notes to O 22, rr. 3 and 4

Stay of proceedings and of execution.

5. [S 545] (1) An appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the appellate Court may order, nor shall execution of a decree be stayed by reason only of an appeal having been preferred from the decree; but the appellate Court may for sufficient cause order stay of execution of such decree.

(2) Where an application is made for stay of execution of an appealable decree before the expiration of the time allowed for appealing therefrom, the Court which passed the decree may on sufficient cause being shown order the execution to be stayed.

(3) No order for stay of execution shall be made under sub-rule (1) or sub-rule (2) unless the Court making it is satisfied—

Alterations in the rule —

1 The first part of sub r (1) namely An appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the appellate Court may order is new The object is to make express provision for a stay of proceedings from a decree pending an appeal from the decree Thus if a preliminary decree is passed in a suit for accounts between a principal and an agent [O 20 r 16] and an appeal is preferred from the decree the appellate Court may under this rule stay the inquiry into the accounts pending the appeal from the decree Under the Code of 1832 the Court directed a stay in cases like these in the exercise of its inherent power as there was no express provision in the Code in that behalf (s)

2 Sub r (4) is new It authorizes an ex parte stay The need for such an order constantly arises in practice

“Stay of proceedings —Under this part of the rule the Bombay High Court in appeal suspended a sentence of imprisonment for an offence under s 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (1907) the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure being applicable to such appeal (t) See notes above ‘Alterations in the rule’

Stay of execution —Once an appeal is preferred from a decree it is the appellate Court alone that is seized of the matter, and an application for a stay of execution should be made to that Court Where no appeal is preferred the appellate Court has no jurisdiction not having seized of the case and cannot stay execution even on the assurance of a pleader that an appeal will be filed (u) and so the application for a stay should be made to the Court which passed the decree But the application will not be entertained unless the decree is one from which an appeal lies and the application is made before the expiry of the time allowed by law for appealing therefrom (v) It should be made to the Judge who decided the case and without unreasonable delay (w)

O 41, r. 5.

Where decree has been executed—An order for a stay of execution implies that the decree has not been executed. Therefore where a decree has been executed, no order can be made under this rule (y). See r. 6 below.

Circumstances under which stay of execution may be granted—The Court has the power under this rule to make an order for a stay of execution for "sufficient cause". But no order should be made for a stay of execution unless the Court is satisfied that substantial loss may result to the party applying for a stay of execution if the execution is not stayed (z). And even if the Court is satisfied that substantial loss may result, no order should be made unless the application has been made without unreasonable delay, and, further, unless the Court is satisfied that security has been given by the applicant for the due performance of such decree as may ultimately be binding upon him [sub r. (3)]. The Court should not accept a security the validity of which is not free from reasonable doubt and the enforcement of which may lead to protracted litigation (a).

Notice to decree holder—It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that a final order staying execution should not be made without notice to the decree holder, if it is made without notice, it is illegal and it may be set aside under s. 115 above (b). The High Court of Patna has held differently (c). An interim stay, however, may be granted ex parte [see sub r. (4)].

Application of the rule—A obtains a decree against B for the recovery of certain immovable property, and applies for execution of the decree. If B has preferred an application for a stay of execution, the appellate Court is satisfied that substantial loss may result if the execution is not stayed, and if the application has been made without unreasonable delay, the appellate Court may order execution to be stayed under this rule upon security being given by B that if the decree of the lower Court is confirmed, he will deliver possession of the property to A. If the decree of the lower Court is confirmed, and if B fails to deliver possession of the property to A, A may proceed against the surety.

Security for performance of decree—The nature and extent of the liability of a surety under this rule depends on the words of the security bond (d). Thus where the bond was to perform all orders and decrees passed in appeal, it was held that the obligation under the bond extended to the final decree passed in second appeal (e). When immovable property is given by a judgment debtor as security for the due performance of a decree under sub r. (3) (e), it can be realized in execution without attachment. The provision of O 34, r. 14 do not apply to such a case, and further, the matter being one relating to execution within a 47, a separate suit does not lie (f). As to the mode of enforcing a security bond given under this rule, see notes to s. 145 under the head "security for the performance of any decree," p. 347 above.

Gaurar Singh* (1905) 32 Cal. 424 is no longer law in view of the alteration in the language of s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 now s. 34 r. 11.

(c) Sitot v. Apur (1878) 2 Bom. 64 3 Low. 1

A security bond given under this rule mortgaging immovable property exceeding Rs. 100 in value requires registration under the Transfer of Property Act, s 59, and the Registration Act, s 17, in order to make it effective against the property (g)

When respondent insolvent—In an application for stay of execution for costs when the respondent was insolvent the Madras High Court directed the appellant to pay the costs to the respondent's solicitor on his personal undertaking to return them in the event of the success of the appeal (h)

Effect of uncommunicated order staying execution—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta (i), that where an order is made by an appellate Court staying execution of a decree but before the order is communicated to the Court executing the decree, the property of the judgment debtor is sold in execution the sale is invalid and cannot stand the reason given being that when an unconditional order for stay of execution is made, the order becomes operative the moment it is made and suspends the power of the lower Court to continue the proceedings in execution. On the other hand, it has been held by the Madras High Court (j) that such sale is valid, the reason given being that the Court of first instance still retains jurisdiction to execute its decree notwithstanding an appeal from it, and that the power to execute the decree can only be taken away by some communication to it of the order of the appellate Court. The latter view, it is submitted is correct

Costs—The applicant who asks for stay of execution should, as a rule, pay the costs of the application even if the application is successful. The reason is that an applicant asking for stay of execution asks for an indulgence which will have the effect of interfering for the time being with the enforcement of the decree, and he who seeks such an indulgence should in the absence of special circumstances pay for it (l)

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order by the appellate Court refusing to stay execution under this section. Such an order is not a 'decree' within the meaning of s 2 cl 2 (l). It is now agreed by the Calcutta (m), Madras (n), and Lahore (o) High Courts that such an order is a 'judgment' within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent and therefore appealable as such

Where an order is made for stay of execution on security being furnished by the judgment debtor, and such security is furnished, no appeal lies from the order at the instance of the decree holder. Such an order cannot be said to conclusively determine any question relating to the rights and liabilities of parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree, and it does not therefore come within s 47 and s 2 cl (2) (p). Nor is it a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 10 of the Letters Patent of the Rangoon High Court (p 2). See notes to s 47, "Appeal," p 144.

Review—The Court making an order under this rule may cancel or vary it at any time (q)

O. 41, r 6

6 [S 546] (1) Where an order is made for the execution of a decree from which an appeal is pending, the Court which passed the decree shall, on sufficient cause being shown by the appellant, require security to be taken for the restitution of any property which may be or has been taken in execution of the decree or for the payment of the value of such property and for the due performance of the decree or order of the appellate Court, or the appellate Court may for like cause direct the Court which passed the decree to take such security.

(2) Where an order has been made for the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree, and an appeal is pending from such decree, the sale shall, on the application of the judgment debtor to the Court which made the order, be stayed on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit until the appeal is disposed of

- 1 The words 'or has been taken' have been added in sub r (1) to make it clear that security may be required though the property has already been taken in execution. These words give effect to a Calcutta decision (r)
- 2 The words 'of money' which occurred in the old section after the word 'in execution of a decree' have been omitted
- 3 The words 'to the Court which made the order' in sub r (2) are new. These words show that an application for a stay of sale is to be made to the Court which made the order for sale

Application of the rule—This rule does not apply unless (1) there is an order made for the execution of a decree and (2) there is an appeal pending from that decree (v). A judgment debtor whose application for a stay of execution is refused under r 5 may apply under this rule. The application contemplated by sub r (1) is an application by the judgment debtor (who has appealed from the decree) for security to be given by the decree holder for the restitution of any property that may be taken in execution or for the payment of the value of such property if the decree of the lower Court is reversed in appeal. Thus if A obtains a decree against B for the recovery of certain immoveable property and an order is made for execution of the decree, B may after filing an appeal from the decree apply for an order requiring A to give security for the restitution of the property to him (B) or for the payment of the value thereof, if the appeal is decided in his favour. The application may be made to the Court which passed the decree or to the appellate Court (v). If the application is made to the Court which passed the decree such Court shall on sufficient cause being shown by B for requiring the security, direct A to give the security. But if the application is made to the appellate Court that Court may in its discretion require security to be given.

7. [S 547] No such security as is mentioned in rules 5 and 6 shall be required from the Secretary of State for India in Council or, where the Government has undertaken the defence of the suit, from any public officer sued in respect of an act alleged to be done by him in his official capacity.

No security to be required from the Government or a public officer in certain cases

8 [New] The powers conferred by rules 5 and 6 shall be exercisable where an appeal may be or has been preferred not from the decree but from an order made in execution of such decree.

Exercise of powers in appeal from order made in execution of

Scope and object of the rule.—This rule is new. It has been added to meet particularly the case where the litigant does not quarrel with the decree, but appeals from an order passed in execution of that decree. In such a case the rule provides that the appellant may apply for a stay of execution of the decree under r 5 or for security for restitution under r 6. A obtains a decree against B, and applies for execution. B objects to the execution, but the objection is disallowed. B prefers an appeal from the order disallowing his objection. B may apply for a stay of execution of the decree under r 5 pending the disposal of the appeal from the order. This is in accordance with the undermentioned decision under the Code of 1862 (u)

Procedure on admission of appeal.

9. [S 548] (1) Where a memorandum of appeal is admitted, the appellate Court or the proper officer of that Court shall endorse thereon the date of presentation, and shall register the appeal in a book to be kept for the purpose.

Registry of memorandum of appeal

(2) Such book shall be called the Register of Appeals.

Register of Appeals

10 [S 549] (1) The appellate Court may in its discretion, either before the respondent is called upon to appear and answer or afterwards on the application of the respondent, demand from the appellant security for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit, or of both.

Appellate Court may require appellant to furnish security for costs

D. 41, r. 10.

Provided that the Court shall demand such security in all cases in which the appellant is residing out of British India, and is not possessed of any sufficient immoveable property within British India other than the property, (if any) to which the appeal relates.

(2) Where such security is not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal.

Scope and object of the rule—The object of the rule is to secure the respondent in an appeal from the risk of having to incur further costs which he might never succeed in getting out of the appellant. Under sub r (1) the appellate Court may, in its discretion, require security for costs. Under the proviso to that sub rule the Court shall demand security for costs. If no security is furnished, the Court should reject the appeal, whether the order for security is made under the sub rule or the proviso (1).

to what appeals the rule applies—This rule applies not only to appeals from substantive decrees but also to appeals from interlocutory orders under s 104 and to appeals from orders in execution under s 47 (w). The Privy Council have recently decided that it applies also to appeals under cl 15 of the Letters Patent (x). The Madras High Court had held that it was not so applicable because the Code dealt with appeals from one Court to another of higher grade, while cl 15 of the Letters Patent dealt with a different class of appeals (y). This was a good reason for holding that the right of appeal under the Letters Patent was not excluded by the words "and from no other orders" occurring in section 598 of the Code of 1882 corresponding to section 104 of the present Code (z), but it does not follow that the procedure of the Court in dealing with an appeal under the Letters Patent (now expressly saved by the words "save as otherwise provided by any law" inserted in s 104) is not regulated by the Code. Where any part of the Code does not apply to High Courts, specific provision is made to that effect. There is no such provision in respect of this rule. However a Chartered High Court is competent under s 129 to make a rule inconsistent with O 41, s 10, and, if it does, the Code rule would not apply (a). Bombay High Court rule 736 prescribes a deposit of Rs 500 as security for respondent's costs as a condition of filing the appeal, but this is not inconsistent with the present rule (b). Nor is rule 351 of the Madras High Court rules inconsistent (c).

Appeals in forma pauperis—It has been held by the High Court of Madras (d) that this rule applies to pauper appeals, thus an appellant, who has presented his appeal in forma pauperis, may be called upon to give security for costs under this rule, but very special grounds must be shown to support such an application. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (e), Bombay (f), and Lahore (g), that this rule does not apply to appeals preferred in forma pauperis.

"In its discretion"—Except in the case referred to in the proviso to sub r (1) the power of the appellate Court to require security for costs is discretionary. The mere fact that the appellant is poor or insolvent is no ground for demanding security for costs (h). Similarly mere non payment of the costs of the original suit is no ground for calling upon the appellant to furnish security under this rule unless his conduct be shown to be vexatious that is such as indicates a wilful determination on his part not to obey the order of the Court in respect of costs (i). On the other hand when the respondent had failed to recover his costs in the lower Court Macleod C.J., made an order for security observing that the Court's discretion was absolute and could not be fettered by cases (j). It is submitted that this was a misuse of the word 'absolute', for the discretion is a judicial discretion to be exercised in accordance with legal principles expounded in the cases. But the Court will as a general rule demand security for costs from a poor or insolvent appellant if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the appellant is not the real litigant but a mere puppet in the hands of others who are well able to furnish security (k) or if the merits of the case are plainly in favour of the respondent (l). See notes to O'Connell v. 1, Poverty of plaintiff' on p 781 above.

At what stage respondent should apply for security—The respondent should apply promptly or else it might be urged that he had waived his right (m).

Order for security—When an order is made under this rule for security for costs it is not necessary that any specific sum should be named in the order. It is sufficient if the order directs the appellant to furnish security for the costs of the original suit or for the costs of the appeal or for the costs of the appeal and the original suit (n). A surety for the costs of the appeal is discharged if the appeal is decided in favour of the appellant even if the appellate decree is reversed on second appeal (o).

Extension of time for furnishing security—The appellate Court may, under exceptional circumstances extend the time for furnishing security [see s 148]. Thus where the appellant alleged that he was unable on account of plague in Bombay to raise the money required for security within the time fixed by the Court, the Court extended the time for giving security. The time for giving security may be extended either before its expiry or afterwards (p).

"Court shall reject the appeal"—The appeal should not be rejected if the order for security has been made without notice to the appellant (q).

Restoring of appeal—An appeal, although it may have been rejected by the appellate Court under this rule upon failure of the appellant to furnish security, may be restored on sufficient grounds at the Court's discretion (r). But no appeal lies from an order refusing to restore it (s). It is no excuse for not furnishing security in time that the appellant is a wandering fakir for it is the duty of every litigant to keep in touch with his case (t).

(2) Where such security is not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal.

Appeal from order rejecting appeal under sub-rule (2)—An order rejecting an appeal under this rule is not appealable as an order under O 43, for it is not one of the orders specified therein. Nor is it appealable as a decree for it does not conclusively determine the rights of the parties with regard to any of the matters in controversy in the appeal within the meaning of the definition of decree [s 2, cl (2)] (u)

Appeal from order dismissing petition praying Court to receive security for costs—An order is made under sub rule (1) directing an appellant to furnish security for costs. The order is indefinite in that it does not fix the exact date on or before which security is to be given. The appellant, believing that the time for giving security has expired, applies to the Court to receive the amount fixed by the order as security. The Court holds that the time for furnishing security has expired and refuses the application. The appellant is entitled to appeal from the order under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, as the effect of the order would be to finally deprive the appellant of his power of prosecuting his appeal (v)

Insolvency appeal—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether this rule applies to the case of an appeal from an order passed by a Judge in insolvency under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act 3 of 1908, the High Court of Madras holding that it does not (w) while the High Court of Calcutta holding that it does (x). The latter view, it is submitted, is the correct view. See Act 3 of 1908, s 8 (2) (b) default," to make it clear that no appeal lies from an order of dismissal for default. See s 2, cl (2), sub cl. (b). Under the old section it was held that a decision dismissing an appeal for default was a decree and was therefore appealable (y).

Dismissal of appeal under sub rule (1): whether judgment necessary—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the dismissal of an appeal under sub s (1) did not relieve the lower appellate Court from the necessity of writing a judgment in the manner prescribed by s 574 of that Code [now r 31 of this Order] (z). A different view, however, was taken by the High Court of Allahabad (a). The present Order is divided into distinct parts under appropriate headings, an arrangement which did not appear in the corresponding Chapter of the Code of 1882. Rule 11 comes under the heading 'Procedure on admission of appeal.' The next heading of the Order is 'Procedure on hearing,' and r 31 comes under the next following heading 'Judgment in appeal.' Relying upon this classification, it was held by the High Court of Bombay in Tanay v Shankar (b) that under the present Code it is not obligatory upon the lower appellate Court in dismissing an appeal under this rule, to write a judgment as required by r 31. But this decision has since been overruled by a Full Bench of the same Court, on the ground that it was in conflict with the previous practice of that Court which was based on a Civil Circular being Circular 51 published in 1890 under the provisions of the High Courts Act 1861 by which it is provided that when an appellate Court dismisses an appeal under s 551 [now r 11 of this Order] a judgment should be written and a formal decree drawn up. In the course of the judgment Sir Basil Scott C J, said: "There is nothing in the new Code of Civil Procedure which introduces any change in the law, except in so far as the rules commencing with rule 9 of Order XLI are headed 'Procedure on admission of appeal.' That change is not sufficient to abrogate the rule published under the High Courts Act which is quite consistent with the provisions of the Code." (c). The result is that according to the Bombay High Court, when an appeal is dismissed under this rule, a judgment should be written and a formal decree drawn up. The High Court of Calcutta has also held the same way under the present Code (d).

Dismissal of appeal for default under sub r (2)—Where an appeal is dismissed for default, it is the decree of the lower Court alone that can be enforced in execution (e). See notes to s 36. What decrees may be executed.

Review—Dismissal of an appeal under this rule bars a review of the judgment dismissed under this rule the High Court has no power to review its judgment on the ground of the discovery of new and important matter (g). See notes to O 47 r 1. No review allowed on a question of fact after decision of second appeal.

Re admission of appeal dismissed for default under sub rule (2)—An appeal dismissed under sub r (2) may be re-admitted under r 13.

15. [S. 554.] The notice to the respondent shall declare that, if he does not appear in the appellate Court on the day so fixed, the appeal will be heard ex parte

Contents of notice

Procedure on hearing

16. [S. 555.] (1) On the day fixed, or on any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned, the appellant shall be heard in support of the appeal

Appellant to begin

(2) The Court shall then, if it does not dismiss the appeal at once, hear the respondent against the appeal, and in such case the appellant shall be entitled to reply

Right to begin—The mere fact that the respondent calls in question the right of the appellant to appeal does not give the respondent the right to begin (h)

It is the duty of the appellant to satisfy the Court of Appeal that the decision of the trial Court is erroneous (i). In every appeal it is incumbent upon the appellant to show some reason why the judgment appealed from should be disturbed. There must be some balance in his favour to justify the alteration of the judgment as it stands (j)

17. [S. 556.] (1) Where on the day fixed, or on any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed

Dismissal of appeal if appellant is default

(2) Where the appellant appears and the respondent does not appear, the appeal shall be heard ex parte

Hearing appeal ex parte

Alteration in the rule—The words the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed have been substituted for the words the appeal shall be dismissed for default to make it clear that no appeal lies from the order of dismissal for default (k). 19. [S 558] Where an appeal is dismissed under rule 11, sub-rule (2), or rule 17 or rule 18, the appellant may apply to the appellate Court for the re-admission of the appeal, and, where it is proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing or from depositing the sum so required, the Court shall re-admit the appeal on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit

Re-admission of appeal dismissed for default

"Shall re-admit the appeal"—These words have been substituted for the words may re-admit the appeal. The word may in the old section was construed by the High Court of Madras to mean shall (g)

"Sufficient cause"—The carelessness of an advocate's clerk does not constitute sufficient cause (r). But where the appellant's pleader appeared soon after the appeal was dismissed it was restored on the ground that the failure to appear was unintentional (s)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order of refusal to re-admit an appeal [O 23 r 1, cl (t)]. But no appeal lies from an order re-admitting an appeal (t)

Dismissal of appeal for failure to deposit costs of paper book or to pay Court-fees—Where an appeal is dismissed under the rules of a High Court for failure to deposit the costs of preparation of the paper book as required by the rules the decree may be set aside not by an order under this rule but by an order on an application for a review (u). So also if it is dismissed for failure to pay Court fees (t)

Inherent power to restore appeal dismissed for default—Although a cause may not amount to a sufficient cause within the meaning of this rule the Court has inherent power to pass an order of restoration if it considers that a case for restoration has been made out (w). According to the Bombay High Court (x) the Court has inherent power to admit an application for re-admission that is time barred under Art 108 of the Limitation Act but the Lahore (y) and Madras (z) High Courts differ following Accelate v Narayana (a). See note under O 9 r 9. Inherent power to restore suit dismissed for default on p 501 above

"Interested in the result of the appeal"—See notes to ¶ 33 below

Limitation—A person who was a party to the proceeding in the Court below may be added as a respondent, though the time to appeal against him has expired (c)

Adding of parties under this rule discretionary—It is a question for the Court in its discretion to determine in each case whether or not it will make an order for the addition of a party as contemplated by this rule (d). According to the Madras High Court its powers are not limited by this rule and it can also act under O 1, r 10 (e). But the Allahabad High Court has held that a Court of appeal cannot add a party who was not a party to the suit (f).

The Court will not under this rule add representatives of a deceased party to save an appeal that has abated (g) Nor will it add a respondent after the appeal against him is time barred (h)

Adding of parties in second appeal—Supposing a person to be a party to suit, but not a party to the appeal before the lower appellate Court. Has the High Court power in second appeal to add such person as a party to the appeal? No, according to the Allahabad High Court (i). Yes, according to the Madras (j), Calcutta (k), and Patna (l) High Courts.

Form—For form of notice to a party to a suit not made a party to the appeal, see Appendix G, form no. 7

21. [S. 560.] Where an appeal is heard ex parte and judgment is pronounced against the respondent, he may apply to the appellate Court to re-hear the appeal; and, if he satisfies the Court that the notice was not duly served or that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing, the Court shall re-hear the appeal on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit to impose upon him.

Sec O 9, r. 13, and notes thereto

"Sufficient cause"—Where counsel for respondent was unable to appear at the hearing as the respondent's agent had taken away the papers, it was held that it was not "sufficient cause" for rehearing the appeal (m). But when the party's agent could not appear to instruct the pleader because of his daughter's illness this was considered sufficient cause (n).

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order of refusal to re-hear an appeal [O 43, r 1 cl (t)]

22. [S 561] (1) Any respondent, though he may not have appealed from any part of the decree, may not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below, but take any cross-objection to the decree which he could have

Upon hearing respondent may object to decree as if he had preferred separate appeal taken by way of appeal, provided he has filed such objection in the appellate Court within one month from the date of service on him or his pleader of notice of the day fixed for hearing the appeal, or within such further time as the appellate Court may see fit to allow.

(2) Such cross-objection shall be in the form of a memorandum, and the provisions of rule 1, so far as they relate to the form and contents of the memorandum of appeal, shall apply thereto

Form of objection and provisions applicable thereto

(3) Unless the respondent files with the objection a written acknowledgment from the party who may be affected by such objection or his pleader of having received a copy thereof, the appellate Court shall cause a copy to be served, as soon as may be after the filing of the objection, on such party or his pleader at the expense of the respondent

(4) Where, in any case in which any respondent has under this rule filed a memorandum of objection, the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default, the objection so filed may nevertheless be heard and determined after such notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit.

(5) The provisions relating to pauper appeals shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply to an objection under this rule

Alterations in the rule—The words 'upon the hearing' which occurred in the first paragraph of s 561 of the Code of 1882 [now sub r 1] between the words 'may and not only support' have been omitted and sub rule (4) has been added. See notes below under the head 'Sub rule (4) where the appeal is withdrawn or dismissed for default'. The words 'the party who may be affected by such objection' in sub r (3) have been substituted for the words 'the appellant' which occurred in s 561.

Cross objections.—Suppose that in a suit brought by A against B, B sets up two defences and the Court of first instance decides both in B's favour, and A appeals, there is no scope for cross objections for cross objections cannot be filed as criticisms of a judgment (v), but if the Court decides in B's favour as to one and against him as to

O. 41, r. 22. the other then if A appeals, B may support the decree at the hearing of the appeal not only on the ground decided in his favour, but also on the ground decided against him without filing any cross-objections (p). In the case put above the decree was entirely in B's (respondent's) favour. Suppose now that A's claim is decreed in part. In such a case A may appeal from the decree, alleging that the decree ought to have been for the full amount claimed by him. And B also may appeal from the decree, alleging that the suit ought to have been dismissed altogether. If A appeals from the decree, and B also appeals, B's appeal is called a cross appeal. But B may not file a cross appeal and he may file cross objections under this rule. In the cross objections filed by B under this rule B may take any objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal (q). If no cross objections are filed at all by a respondent, the appellate Court has no power to grant any relief to him in a case where the granting of such relief is not necessarily incidental to the relief granted to the appellant (r), nor has it the power, in the absence of cross objections, to disturb so much of the original decree as is favourable to the appellant so as to place the appellant in a worse position (s). And in any event the Court cannot record a finding which does not affect the point at issue (t).

Sub rule (4): where the appeal is withdrawn or dismissed for default—The old section commenced with the words, "any respondent may upon the hearing not only support the decree etc." It was accordingly held that a respondent can be heard in support of his cross objections only upon the hearing of the appeal. If the appeal was withdrawn before the hearing the respondent, it was held, had no right to be heard in support of his cross objections (u) though the Court might in such a case allow him to prefer a regular appeal from the decree (v). But if the hearing had once commenced the appeal, it was held, could not be withdrawn so as to prevent, the cross objections being heard and determined (w). This distinction has now been done away with by the omission of the words 'upon the hearing' in sub r (1) and by the addition of sub r (4). Under the present rule the withdrawal of an appeal is no bar to the hearing of cross objections filed by a respondent, whether the appeal is withdrawn before or after the hearing. Similarly the dismissal of an appeal for default is no bar to the hearing of cross objections. This was correctly admitted in Bhimasena v Venugopal (x) a Letters Patent appeal, but the reasoning so far as it proceeds on the assumption that O. 41 does not apply to Letters Patent appeals seems opposed to the Privy Council decision in Savitri v Savitri (y). The dismissal of an appeal upon the appellant's failure to give security for costs is a dismissal 'for default' within the meaning of sub-r (4) (z). But if the appeal has abated the respondent is not entitled to have his cross objections heard (a).

Under the old section it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that the dismissal of an appeal as filed out of time was a bar to the hearing of cross objections (b). It has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that the law is the same under the present rule (c). The Lahore High Court has held that an appeal must be properly before the Court in order that cross objections may be heard (d), and it has been held that where an appeal is dismissed on the ground of insufficiency of Court fee stamp, the Court has no power to hear cross objections (e). The last mentioned decision is based on the ground that except in the case of the original appeal being 'withdrawn or dismissed for default' as expressly provided for in sub r (4), the general rule that cross objections cannot be heard unless the appeal is decided on the merits is still in force. But the dismissal of an appeal on the ground of non joinder of a party in a mortgage suit has been held not to be a bar to the hearing of cross objections, the reason given being that in such a case the appeal is heard the question of non joinder being one that arises in the appeal itself and is not extraneous to it, as would be a question as to whether it was presented in proper time or not (f).

Who may file cross objections.—Cross objections under this rule can only be filed by a party who might have appealed from the decree of the Court below but has not done so. It is not open to the party who has appealed and whose appeal has been dismissed subsequently to prefer cross objections under this rule. A sues B for damages. A's claim is decreed in part. A appeals from that part of the decree which is against him. B also appeals from that part of the decree which is against him. A's appeal is heard and dismissed. Before B's appeal is heard, A files cross objections in B's appeal setting up the very grounds upon which in his own appeal he had asked for relief. A's cross objections should not be heard (g). Again A obtains a decree in a partnership suit which is against B, one of the defendants ex parte. B does not apply under O 9, r 13, to set aside the ex parte decree. B cannot therefore file cross objections in A's appeal that he should have been given a hearing (h). But in a case where B before the ex parte decree was passed presented a petition asking to be heard under the erroneous impression that the ex parte decree had already been passed, it was held that he was not barred from filing cross objections on the ground that he was not heard (i). Cross objections as to costs in the Courts below will not be entertained in second appeal (j).

A respondent may urge cross objections against the appellant but not as a rule against a co respondent.—It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad, that as a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross objections should be limited to his urging them only against the appellant, and that it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge cross objections as against other respondents the exception holding good in those cases in which the appeal opens up questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co respondents (k). Thus in suits for dissolution of partnership and for accounts it is open to any respondent to prefer cross objections against a co respondent on any item in dispute between them. The reason is that in such suits accounts are taken not between the plaintiff on the one hand and the defendants on the other but between all the partners. A, B and C constitute a partnership firm. A sues B and C for dissolution of partnership and for accounts. A decree is passed in the suit declaring the amount coming to the share of each partner on the taking of accounts. A appeals from the decree. B

O. 41, and C are joined as respondents to the appeal. In such a case it is open to B to prefer cross objections against C in respect of an item in dispute between B and C (l). Similarly, rr. 22, 23. when the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all the parties against whom it is passed and the appeal is preferred by some only of such parties e.g. where the suit is—B v. A and C, and a decree is passed both against B and C, and the appeal is—B v. A and C, A who is the plaintiff respondent may prefer cross objections not only against B the appellant, but against C the co respondent. A sues B and C to recover Rs. 5000 alleged to be his share of the profits of certain lands. A decree is passed for A for Rs. 3000 against B and C. B appeals from the decree. C does not join B in the appeal and he is therefore made a party respondent. The appeal thus is—B v. A and C. In such a case it is open to A to prefer cross objections not only against B but also against C in respect of that portion of his claim that was disallowed by the Court of first instance namely, Rs. 2000 (m). According to the Madras (n) and Lahore (o) High Courts a respondent may urge cross objections against a co respondent in any and every case. Note in this connection the substitution in sub-r (3) of the words 'the party who may be affected by such objection' for the words 'the appellant' which occurred in s. 561 of the Code of 1882.

"Or within such further time"—This rule requires that cross objections should be filed by the respondent within one month from the date of the service of notice of the appeal. But the time may be extended if sufficient cause is shown (p).

Application of the rule—Cross objections may be filed not only in first appeal but also in second appeal (O. 42). They may also be filed in appeals from orders preferred under s. 104 and O. 43 [See O. 43 r. 2].

Second appeal—A second appeal will lie from a decree of the first appellate Court disallowing the cross objections of a respondent (q).

Letters Patent appeal—The Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts have held that the provision for respondents filing cross objections does not apply to Letters Patent appeals (r), but it is doubtful if this is correct in view of the Privy Council decision in Sabita v. Sati (s).

Form—As to form of memorandum of cross objections, see App. G form no. 8.

23. [s. 562.] Where the Court from whose decree an appeal is preferred has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point and the decree is reversed in appeal, the appellate Court may, if it thinks fit, by order remand the case, and may further direct what issue or issues shall be tried in the case so remanded, and shall send a copy of its judgment and order to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register of civil suits, and proceed to determine the suit;

and the evidence (if any) recorded during the original trial shall, subject to all just exceptions, be evidence during the trial after remand

Alterations in the rule—The words, “and the evidence (if any) recorded during the original trial shall, subject to all just exceptions be evidence during the trial after remand, at the end of the rule are new

Scope of the rule—It is not competent to the appellate Court under this rule to remand the case for further evidence to the lower Court and to require that Court to pass another decree. All that the appellate Court is empowered to do is to frame an issue and to send down that issue to the Court below for the return of a finding, and it is the duty of the appellate Court after receiving that finding to dispose of the appeal upon the evidence before it (i). The appellate Court cannot after finding on facts remand the case to the lower Court to pass a decree in accordance with that finding (v)

Preliminary point—This rule enables the appellate Court to remand a case to the lower Court for determination on the merits, if the lower Court has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point, and the decree of that Court is reversed in appeal. The expression preliminary point is not confined to such legal points only as may be pleaded in bar of a suit, but comprehends all points or issues whether of fact or of law, the determination of which has precluded the necessity for determining other points or issues and such other points or issues have therefore been left undetermined (i). A Full Bench of the Madras High Court defined it as any point whether of fact or of law, the decision of which avoids the necessity for a full hearing of the suit (u). Thus where the lower Court dismisses the plaintiff's suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation or that the Court has no jurisdiction to hear the suit, or that the necessary leave has not been obtained or that the plaint does not on the face of it disclose any cause of action (x) or that it is barred by the events in an earlier suit (x1) and the appellate Court reverses the decree of the lower Court on those grounds it may remand the case to the lower Court to be proceeded with on the merits. Where several issues are raised in a suit one of which is that of undue influence, and the Court dismisses the suit on a finding that there was undue influence without a finding on the other issues, the decision amounts to a disposal of the suit upon a preliminary point within the meaning of this rule (y). Similarly if A sues B to recover a sum of money on the basis of an award and four issues are framed one of which is whether the award is valid and binding and the Court after recording evidence on all the issues dismisses the suit on the ground that the award is invalid leaving the other issues undecided, the appellate Court may if it finds that the decision of the lower Court on the issue as to the validity of the award is wrong, remand the case to the lower Court to be disposed of on the merits. It does not matter that evidence has been recorded on all the issues (z). But where the first Court has decided a suit on the merits of the whole case as where the suit is decided on all the evidence and on all the issues, the appellate Court cannot remand the case under this rule (a)

O. 41, r. 23. Where the first Court heard the entire suit, and found all issues in favour of the plaintiff except one, namely, whether the suit was maintainable having regard to the provisions of O 21, r 92, and dismissed the suit on the finding that the suit was not maintainable, it was held by the Patna High Court that the suit was disposed of on a preliminary point within the meaning of this rule (b) This decision is in conflict with the decisions referred to above, and, it is submitted, is not good law To pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff on the strength of a plan put in by the plaintiff in a suit for possession of land is not a decision of the suit on a preliminary point, and no remand can be made in such a case under this rule (c)

No order of remand can be made under this rule unless the lower Court has disposed of the whole suit upon a preliminary point This rule authorises a remand only where the entire suit, and not only a portion of it, has been disposed of by the Court below on a preliminary point (d) Assuming that the entire suit is decided on a preliminary point, it is further necessary, before an order of remand can be made under this rule, that the appellate Court should also find that the decision on the preliminary point is wrong It is not a good ground, therefore, for making an order under this rule to say that the preliminary issue, e.g., an issue of limitation, has been decided by the Court of first instance on a wrong view of the burden of proof, unless the appellate Court finds that the issue has been wrongly decided (e) Again if the lower Court decides the suit on several preliminary points, the appellate Court should not remand the suit without deciding all those preliminary points (f)

Inherent power of remand: Remand in case of error, omission or irregularity—No order of remand can be made under the present rule except when the suit has been disposed of on a preliminary point There are, however, cases in which suits have not been disposed of on a preliminary point, and yet the Courts have claimed the power to remand the case professing to do so in the exercise of their inherent power (see s 151) These are cases in which the lower Court has committed any error omission or irregularity, by reason of which there has not been a proper trial or an effectual or complete adjudication of the suit, and the party complaining of such error omission or irregularity has been materially prejudiced thereby Thus if a suit is defective for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, the proper course is to return the plaint to the plaintiff for amendment and not to dismiss the suit (see notes to O 2, s 3, p 407 above) If the lower Court dismisses the suit instead of returning the plaint for amendment the appellate Court may set aside the decree and remand the suit with a direction to the lower Court to return the plaint to the plaintiff for amendment and to proceed with the suit after the plaint is amended (g) Similarly where a suit is brought in the name of a wrong person as plaintiff, the appellate Court may direct the plaint to be amended and remand the case for re trial (h) Where time was granted to the plaintiff to produce his evidence—but neither he nor his pleader appeared on the day to which the hearing was adjourned and the lower Court instead of proceeding to dispose of the suit under O 17, r 3 dismissed the suit for default under O 17 r 2, it was held that the appellate Court had power to remand the case to be disposed of in the manner prescribed by O 17, r 3 (i). A case may also be remanded where the decision of the lower Court is given without taking the defendant's evidence (j) In a Bombay case (k) the lower Court had erroneously presumed the death of the mortgagor and decreed redemption by a person claiming to be his heir and the High Court reversed the decree and remanded the case for retrial after joining the mortgagor as a party

Sections 562 and 566 of the Code of 1882 [now rr 23 and 25 of this Order] were the only sections that provided for a remand. The cases cited in the preceding paragraph did not fall under either of those sections. Moreover, the Code of 1882 contained a section, being s 564 which prohibited the appellate Court from remanding a case except as provided by s 562. That section was found in its working to be embarrassing, and to get over the difficulty presented by cases of the kind cited in the preceding paragraph, the Courts resorted to their inherent jurisdiction. That section has been omitted in this Code on the ground that it was unduly restrictive. The absolute prohibition of s 564 having been removed the Court, it is said, is free under s 151 to make an order of remand though the case may not fall either under this rule or rule 23 (1). It has accordingly been held that as under the old Code, so under the new Code, an order of remand can be made though the suit was not disposed of on a point which can be called a preliminary point within the meaning of this rule, provided such an order is necessary for the ends of justice (m). In Nabin Chandra v Prankrishna (n) however, Stephen and Mullick, JJ, expressed the opinion that if the appellate Court had at all any inherent power to remand, that power was taken away by s 107 read with O 41, rr 23 and 25, and that under s 107 an appellate Court can only remand a case "subject to such limitations as may be prescribed, that is, prescribed by rules 23 and 25 of O 41". The view so expressed ignores entirely the specific provisions of s 151 of the Code. In Mans Mohan v Ramtaran (o), Jenkins, C J, after observing that the combined effect of s 107 and O 41, r 23, was to limit the power of remand to the position described in O 41, r 23, said: "And this is the general rule except under special conditions which have no application in the circumstances of this case". The view taken by Stephen and Mullick, JJ, was dissented from by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ghusnari v The Allahabad Bank, Ltd (p) where it was held that the powers of the appellate Court as regards remand are not restricted to the case specified in O 41, r 23, but that the Court, by reason of its inherent jurisdiction recognized and preserved in the Code [s 151], may order a remand in cases other than the case specified in O 41, r 23, if it be necessary for the ends of justice. It has thus been held that an appellate Court may direct a plaint to be amended by adding parties and remand the whole case to the Court below (q). The High Court of Patna has followed the Full Bench ruling in Ghusnari (p) case (r). So also the High Courts of Bombay (s) Madras (t) and Lahore (u). The Allahabad High Court treats the question as unsettled, but puts a very wide construction on rule 23 (1). See notes to r 33 below, "Remand".

O. 41, r. 23. Remand in appeal from an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree—In an appeal from an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree the only case which can be remanded is the application under O 9, r 13, and not the original suit. If it obtains a decree ex parte against B B applies under O 9, r 13, for an order to set aside the decree on the ground that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing at the hearing, but the application is refused. B appeals from the order rejecting the application [O 43, s 1, cl (d)]. If the order is reversed by the appellate Court, the proper course for that Court is to remand the application to the lower Court to dispose of that application with due regard to the conditions of O 9, r 13, but not to remand the original suit for re trial (w).

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order remanding a case, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the appellate Court [O 43, r 1, cl (u)]. This means that the order of remand is appealable only in cases in which the decree, which would have been passed by the appellate Court had that Court instead of remanding the case under this rule decided the whole case and passed a decree, is appealable (x). No appeal lies from a remand order in an appeal from an execution proceeding if the suit is of such a nature that by reason of s 102 no second appeal lies (x1). If no appeal is preferred from the order of remand, the party aggrieved by the order cannot afterwards dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree, see s 105, sub s (2), and notes thereto. But though an appeal lies from an order of remand, it must be preferred according to the Calcutta High Court before the final disposal of the remanded suit, otherwise it can not be entertained. The reason given is that the right of appeal given by s 104 and O 43 from orders specified therein ceases with the disposal of the suit (y). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad, that the appeal may be preferred even after the decision of the remanded suit, provided it is within the period of limitation. The Allahabad Court proceeds on the ground that there is no provision in the Code imposing any such restriction on the right of appeal (z). The period of limitation for an appeal from an order of remand is 90 days from the date of the order [Limitation Act, art 156].

Though an appeal lies under rule 1 of Order 43 from an order of remand, no appeal will lie from the order when the order is itself made in an appeal preferred under any other clause of that rule. Thus if an appeal is preferred under O 43, r 1, cl (a), from an order under O 7, r 10, or under O 43, r 1, cl (j), from an order under O 21, r 92 or under O 43, r 1, cl (q), from an order under O 38, r 6, or under any other clause of Order 43, r 1, and the appellate Court allows the appeal and makes an order of remand no appeal will lie from the order of remand under O 43, r 1, cl (u). The reason is that cl (u) of r 1 of O 43, is subject to s 104, sub s (2), which provides that no appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal [it may be an order of remand] under that section (a).

Appeal from remand under the inherent power—When the order of remand is made under the inherent jurisdiction recognized in Ghurnata v. The Allahabad Bank (b) is it appealable? There are several decisions against such an appeal (c). Mukerji J says an appeal lies because the order of remand is itself a decree (d), but if that were so, the provision of O 43, r 1 (u) would be superfluous. The correct answer seems to be that rule 23 should be construed as widely as possible and that the right of appeal should not be curtailed except on very clear proof of circumstances justifying such curtailment. Therefore, even if the order of remand cannot be justified under the rule, yet if it is in substance an order under that rule, an appeal will lie (e). This is, of course, subject to the same condition that an appeal would lie from the decree of the appellate Court.

Powers of High Court in appeal from order of remand—In an appeal from an order of remand preferred under O 43 r 1, cl (u), the High Court is not confined to the question whether the order satisfies the requirements of the present rule, but may also determine the correctness of the lower appellate Court's decision on the preliminary point on which the Court of first instance disposed of the case. Thus if the Court of first instance dismisses a suit as barred by limitation and the appellate Court reverses the decree and remands the case under this rule, and an appeal is preferred to the High Court from the order of remand the High Court has the power to determine whether the point of limitation was correctly decided by the lower appellate Court (f).

Letters Patent appeal—An order of remand made by a single Judge of the High Court in second appeal is a judgment within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent, and is appealable as such (g)

Privy Council Appeal—See notes to s. 100 at pp. 289, 290 ante

Improper order of remand—Under the Code of 1882 an order under s. 562 is appealable, and a party might impeach the order of remand on appeal from the final decree. When no appeal was preferred from the order of remand, but the order was impeached on appeal from the final decree and the Court found that the order was improperly made, the question arose as to whether the order should be treated as illegal or merely irregular. It was held by the High Court of Allahabad that if a remand was ordered in a case in which it ought not to have been ordered, both the order of remand, and all the proceedings subsequent thereto are void and illegal (k). On the other hand, it was held by the Calcutta High Court that the remand order and the subsequent proceedings are not in such a case illegal but merely irregular and the subsequent proceedings should not be set aside unless the remand had substantially affected the decision of the remanded suit on the merits and the party complaining of the irregularity was materially prejudiced thereby (l) [see s. 89]. The Madras High Court held that though an order of remand made in contravention of the provisions of s. 562 is illegal, yet the error may be cured by the consent of parties or by waiver (j). The whole difficulty has been got over in the present Code by enacting that a party who does not appeal from an order of remand in the first instance cannot afterwards dispute the correctness of the order on appeal from the final decree (k) [see s. 105, sub s. (2)].

Remand of case by consent for trial on issues not raised in appeal— The effect of an appeal is to re open the decree of the lower Court, and it is competent to the appellate Court on the agreement of parties to remand the case to the lower Court for trial on issues not raised in the memorandum of appeal (b)

Trial Court—Jurisdiction to try the case remanded depends entirely upon the order of the appellate Court (m)

24. [S. 565.] Where the evidence upon the record is sufficient to enable the appellate Court to pronounce judgment, the appellate Court may, after re-settling the issues, if necessary, finally determine the suit, notwithstanding that the judgment of the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has proceeded wholly upon some ground other than that on which the appellate Court proceeds

Where evidence on record sufficient to enable appellate Court to pronounce judgment, the appellate Court may, after re-settling the issues, if necessary, finally determine the suit.

Scope of the rule—The scope of this rule is limited to cases in which the evidence upon the record is sufficient to enable the appellate Court to determine the suit (n)

This rule does not enable an appellate Court to declare a right in favour of one of the parties where no issue has been framed on the point, and the right has not been set up in the lower Court (o)

Second appeal—See s. 103 and notes thereto

25. [S. 566.] Where the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted to frame or try any issue, or to determine any question of fact, which appears to the appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, the appellate Court may, if necessary, frame issues, and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred and in such case shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required,

Power of Court to which issues are referred for trial under this rule—The Court to which issues are referred for trial under this rule has no power to try and decide the case but to try the issues only. It should then return the evidence to the appellate Court together with its findings thereon and the reasons therefor (g) Nor has it the power to make an order of reference under schedule II, para 3 of the Code (r)

Court by which issues should be tried—Where issues are referred for trial under this rule, they are triable only by the Court which was originally seized of the case and by no other Court (s)

New issue raised before High Court—'Even if it be competent to the High Court [in second appeal] to remit a case for rehearing on an issue not raised in the pleadings nor even suggested in the Courts below, this ought only to be done in exceptional cases for good cause shown and on payment of all costs thrown away' (t)

Appeal—No appeal lies under the Code from an order referring issues for trial under this rule (u) Nor does an appeal lie under the Letters Patent (v)

That is to say even if no objections are filed to the findings the appellate Court is bound to examine the correctness of the findings and to state in its judgment the reasons (r 31) for which it either accepts or rejects the findings (y) It should not accept the findings blindly without examining the evidence on which they are based (z) See notes to # 31. O. 41,
rr. 26, 27.

Where the appellate Court has heard arguments on some of the issues and has expressed its views thereon and remitted other issues under r. 25, it is not bound on the return of findings, to hear the case de novo, but may confine counsel to argument upon the findings (a)

The appellate Court shall proceed to determine the appeal—When an appellate Court has made an order referring issues for trial under r. 25, the return to such order must be made to the same Court, and such Court is not competent to transfer the appeal for disposal to another Court (b)

Unnecessary reference—In the case of an unnecessary reference under r. 25, can the Court disregard the findings returned? It can, if the reference order is of a single Judge and the appeal is heard ultimately by a Bench of two Judges (c). But not otherwise for it is an interlocutory order made with jurisdiction and operative in law until set aside in review (d). If the findings conflict with other findings of fact in the judgment this will not embarrass a Court of first appeal where the entire evidence is examined. A Court of second appeal may, however, be embarrassed and it is therefore preferable not to resort to the rule in second appeal (e) but to remand under the inherent jurisdiction (f)

Second Appeal—The provisions of this and the preceding rule apply so far as may be, by virtue of O. 42, to second appeals. Hence the High Court may in second appeal refer issues of fact for trial to the lower appellate Court, but when the finding and evidence upon such issues are returned to the High Court, the finding is conclusive, and it cannot be challenged upon the evidence before the High Court as in first appeal. The reason is that second appeal is not allowed on questions of fact. The only grounds on which a second appeal is allowed are those mentioned in s. 100, and these relate to errors of law or usage having the force of law or a substantial error or defect in procedure which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case on the merits. The objections to the findings must, therefore, be restricted to the limits within which the original pleas in second appeal are confined (g)

Sending back case for revised finding—An appellate Court has no power to send back a case to the lower Court to submit a revised finding on the facts on evidence already recorded. Such a course is not warranted by any one of the rules 23 to 28 of this Order (h). But if it does so, it is a mere irregularity within the meaning of s. 90, and if the appellate Court, on the revised finding returned to it, itself considers the evidence on which it is based, the decree will not be set aside in appeal (i)

27. [s. 598.] (1) The parties to an appeal shall not be entitled to produce additional evidence whether oral or documentary, in the appellate Court. But if—

Production of additional evidence in appellate Court

(a) the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted, or

- (b) the appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the appellate Court may allow such evidence or document to be produced, or witness to be examined.

(2) Wherever additional evidence is allowed to be produced by an appellate Court, the Courts shall record the reason for its admission.

When additional evidence may be admitted—Under this rule "the admissibility of additional evidence is made to depend, not upon the relevancy or materiality to the issue before the Court of the evidence sought to be admitted, or upon the fact whether or not the applicants had an opportunity of adducing evidence at some earlier stage but upon whether or not the appellate Court requires the evidence to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause" (j). Additional evidence under this rule should not be taken until the appellate Court has examined the evidence on the record and has after such examination come to the conclusion that the evidence as it stands is inherently defective, as, for instance, when the lower Court has omitted to take the evidence of an attesting witness to a mortgage deed (k). Until this is done, the appellate Court has no power to admit additional evidence, not even if the evidence offered be the evidence of new matter discovered after the Court of first instance had pronounced its judgment. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Aesaouji Issur v. G I P Ry (l), the legitimate occasion for [the application of the present rule] is when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, not where a discovery is made, outside the Court, of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it. This decision seemed to lend support to the view taken in the Calcutta case just quoted that the test of admissibility is the requirement of the Court itself and this construction has often been put upon this rule (m). But in truth sub-rule (b) falls into two parts (1) the requirement of the Court and (2) any other substantial cause. Aesaouji case dealt with (1) only because (2) was barred by an unsuccessful application for review to the lower Court. However, a recent decision of the Privy Council makes it clear that the appellate Court has a discretion to admit additional evidence for substantial cause (n).

The power given under this rule should be exercised very sparingly by the Courts and great caution should be exercised in admitting new evidence (o). Additional evidence must not be allowed to enable a plaintiff to make out a fresh case in appeal. If cases were remanded for the purposes of allowing parties to make out a new case or to improve their case by calling further evidence, there would be no end to litigation (p). An appellant who has ample opportunity of giving evidence in the lower Court, and elects not to do so, but rests his case on the evidence as it stood ought not to be allowed to give evidence which he could have given below (q). Similarly, the appellate Court should not

Nor should it allow additional evidence to prove the genuineness of a document held by the lower Court to be a fabrication (u). It must, however, be noted that where additional evidence is taken by the High Court with the assent of both sides it is not open to either party to complain of it (v).

Where the lower Court has refused to admit evidence—An appellate Court should not reverse the decrees of the first Court without allowing the decree holder to give evidence which he offered in the first Court and which that Court declined to take (w). The improper rejection of evidence does not justify the reversal of the decrees and the appellate Court should act under this rule (x).

Where the appellate Court requires any document to be produced—The appellate Court has no power under this rule to require a document to be produced unless it is required to enable it to pronounce judgment. Where judgment could be pronounced in the absence of the document the appellate Court should not allow the document to be produced (y). The word requires means nothing more than 'needs or finds needful' (z).

Where the appellate Court require a witness to be examined—An appellate Court should not under cl. (b) of this rule allow to be produced before it additional evidence which impeaches the testimony of a witness called in the Court below without that witness also being called and being given an opportunity to contradict or explain the additional evidence so given otherwise no witness whatever his standing would be safe from adverse judicial comment (a). Where a witness was examined and cross examined in the Court of first instance and there was no gap in the evidence or new matter about which it was necessary to examine him, and the appellate Judge merely cross examined him on his previous evidence on the chance of getting to the bottom of the matter, it was held that the examination of the witness by the Court under those circumstances was not warranted by the provisions of this rule (b).

"Or for any other substantial cause"—The cause referred to here need not be ejusdem generis with the causes stated in the earlier part of the rule (c). The expression any other substantial cause confers a wide discretion on the appellate Court to admit additional evidence when the ends of justice require it (d). It has accordingly been held that the discovery after the filing of the appeal of fresh evidence not known to and available to the appellant after due diligence during the pendency of the proceedings in the first Court is a 'substantial cause' within the meaning of this rule justifying the admission of such evidence in appeal (e). The Privy Council have made this clear in the case of Indrajit v Amar Singh (f). The sole issue in that case was whether a grant comprised certain villages. The grantor had leased them prior to the grant and claimed that they were not included in the grant. The first Court decided in favour of the grantor as there was no evidence to show that any arrangement had been made by the grantor with reference to the rent payable by the lessee. The grantee appealed and during the appeal discovered documents contemporaneously executed by the grantor directing the lessee to pay rents to the grantee and an under lessee to pay his rents to the lessee. These documents the High Court of Calcutta on its construction of Kessowji's case held they had no jurisdiction to admit as additional evidence. But as to this the Privy Council said—

Both in the case of Sree Manchunder Rey v Gopalchunder Chuckerbutty (g) and Kessowji Issur v Great Indian Peninsular Railway (h), their Lordships were dealing with the power of the appellate Court to require evidence to be produced for the purpose of enabling the Court to pronounce judgment. Those cases did not refer to the right of one or other of the parties to produce evidence which he considered essential to the right determination of the action. Under Order 47, rule 1, which reproduces section 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure Act 14 of 1882 a party has a right to apply for a review of judgment to the Court that has decided the case before an appeal has been preferred. The grounds on which such an application may be made are specifically set forth in rule 1. In the present case an appeal has been preferred and a review was therefore out of the question and the respondents took the only and proper course to apply to the High Court which was in possession of the case to admit the additional evidence either under general principles of law or under the specific provisions of rule 27.

The reference to the general principles of law somewhat weakens the judgment but it does appear that the grounds stated in O 47, r 1, do constitute other substantial cause (i).

Inability to understand the legal issues involved is not substantial cause (j), nor the slackness of the party or his legal advisers (k). The Privy Council refused to allow a party an adjournment to produce the record of a former suit when the absence of this evidence was due to his own remissness (l). If the appellate Court does require a witness not called by inadvertence in the lower Court, it is an error of law but one which does not justify interference in revision (m). Again if the party could have applied to the lower Court for an adjournment to call further evidence but does not do so, and takes the chance of a judgment in his favour on the evidence at his disposal he will not be allowed to call it in the appellate Court (n).

Recording of reason for admission of additional evidence—The provision requiring an appellate Court to record its reason for admitting additional evidence is merely directory, and not imperative. Hence the omission to record the reason does not render the evidence inadmissible (o). But if one party is allowed to adduce additional evidence the opposite party should be allowed to call rebutting evidence (p), and when additional evidence was recorded and no reason stated for its admission the suit was remanded with a direction to allow the opposite party to adduce rebutting evidence (q). When the Court after the suit was adjourned for judgment recalled and examined the plaintiff without recording reasons and without giving notice to the other side it was held that it had acted without jurisdiction (r).

rr. 27-30.

Second appeal.—Except in the case provided in s 103 the High Court is precluded in second appeal by virtue of the provisions of s 100 from entering into questions of fact. Hence where the Court of first appeal has admitted additional evidence under this rule the hearing in the Court of second appeal will not for that reason be treated as a first appeal so as to entitle the parties to go into questions of fact (s).

No appeal lies from a refusal by the lower appellate Court to admit fresh evidence under this rule (t). Hence if the lower appellate Court refuses to admit a document as additional evidence in appeal under this rule the High Court cannot interfere in second appeal and hold that such additional evidence ought to have been admitted by the lower appellate Court (u). But in Jetalal v. Tarafjal (v) a case was remanded under the inherent jurisdiction to the first appellate Court with a direction to admit additional evidence.

Privy Council appeal.—The rejection of an application under this rule does not give a right of appeal to the Privy Council (w).

28. [S. 569.] Wherever additional evidence is allowed to be produced, the appellate Court may either take such evidence, or direct the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, or any other subordinate Court, to take such evidence and to send it when taken to the appellate Court.

Mode of taking additional evidence

It need hardly be stated that where the additional evidence taken by the Court consists of documents they should be exhibited in the case (x). The lower appellate Court resumes its functions as a Court of first appeal and can appoint under s 75 a commissioner for the examination of witnesses (y).

29. [S. 570.] Where additional evidence is directed or allowed to be taken the appellate Court shall specify the points to which the evidence is to be confined, and record on its proceedings the points so specified.

Points to be defined and recorded

Judgment in Appeal

30. [S. 571.] The appellate Court, after hearing the parties or their pleaders and referring to any part of the proceedings, whether on appeal or in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, to which reference may be considered necessary, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day, of which notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders.

Time when and where pronounced

After hearing the parties or their pleaders The rule authorizes the Court to pronounce judgment after hearing the parties or their pleaders. Hence a judgment pronounced without the presence of the representative of the party is unauthorized by the Code. Thus where an appellate Court heard and decided an appeal without being aware of the death of the appellant the decree was held to be a nullity. (See notes to § 4, art. 4) § 199

31 [S 574] The judgment of the appellate Court shall be in writing and shall state—

- (a) the points for determination
- (b) the decision thereon
- (c) the reasons for the decision and
- (d) where the decree appealed from is reversed or varied the relief to which the appellant is entitled and shall at the time that it is pronounced be signed and dated by the Judge or by the Judges concurring therein

Shall state the reasons for the decision—The judgment of the appellate court should state the reasons for the decision. The reason of the rule has been stated to be to afford the litigant a opportunity of knowing and understanding the grounds upon which the decision proceeds with a view to enable them to exercise if they see fit, and as so allowed the right of second appeal conferred by s 100. If an appellate Court could dispose of appeals coming before it on a judgment which does not state the reasons for the decision the right of second appeal might at all events be neutralised (a). The reason for the decision should be stated not only when the decree of the first Court is affirmed or set aside but also when it is reversed (b). If the result is not ordered the proper function of the Court to be able to the High Court second appeal is to set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and send back the case to that Court in order that the appeal may be disposed of accordingly (c). The course was adopted where the judgment was appealed and allowed with costs (d) and in another case where the judgment was appealed and rejected under s 51 (now s 41 (1)) of the Civil Procedure Code (e). Where the decree of the first Court is affirmed in appeal the Judge of the appellate Court should state his reasons for the case and should not confine himself to affirming the reasons of the Court of first instance (f). The reason that the Judge should state is on the face of it that the points in dispute were clearly before him and of the Judge said that he exercised his sound discretion on the decision (g). Thus here the judgment was—To allow with the grounds of appeal would be simply to repeat the judgment of the District Magistrate. I concur with the decision in the District Magistrate's case on this point. The judgment of the lower Court is affirmed in full for the reasons stated for the affirmance and the appeal is dismissed with costs. The judgment was set aside (h). In the present case the Court ordered—Such a general and wholesale the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted or refused to make such order (q)

Illustration

A claims a sum of money as due to him from Y or X, and in a suit against both obtains a decree against X. X appeals and A and Y are respondents. The appellate Court decides in favour of A. It has power to pass a decree against Y.

Cases to which rule applies—This rule is new. It is taken for the most part from O 58 r 4 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Judicature in England. The object of the rule is to empower the appellate Court to do complete justice between the parties. O 41 r 4 and this rule give the Court ample power to make the order appropriate to the ends of justice. Under the former rule upon an appeal by one of the parties on a ground common to all the decree may be varied in favour of all, under the latter rule the Court has power to make the proper decree notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and such power may be exercised in favour of all or any of the parties even though they may not have filed an appeal or objection (r).
The illustration to the rule indicates a type of case for which provision is intended to be made. The following are further instances —

(1) A sues B and C for contribution. A decree is passed against B, but as against C the suit is dismissed. B appeals making A alone respondent to the appeal.
A does not appeal from the decree dismissing the suit as against C. If the appellate Court is of opinion that C is liable and not B it may under r 20 direct that C be added as a respondent as being a person interested in the result of the appeal and may under the present rule alter the decree so as to make C liable though there was no appeal referred by A from the dismissal of the suit against C. This is in accordance

O. 41, r. 33. with the Calcutta rulings under the Code of 1882 (s). According to the Allahabad rulings under that Code C could neither be added as a respondent nor even if he were joined as a respondent from the first could any decree be passed against him, no appeal having been preferred against him (t). The Allahabad ruling that C could not be added as a respondent (under s 20) was followed by the Madras High Court (u). The present rule gives effect to the Calcutta rulings and supersedes the Allahabad and Madras rulings. But C cannot be added as a respondent if limitation for filing an appeal against him has expired (v).

(2) A suit is brought on behalf of the public for (1) a declaration that the public are entitled to use certain locks on a certain river without payment of tolls, and (2) a declaration that the defendant is under an obligation to keep the locks in repair. A decree is passed for the plaintiff awarding the relief as to the use of the locks without payment of tolls, but declaring that the defendant is under no obligation to repair the locks. The defendant appeals. The plaintiff neither files a cross appeal nor objections. The appellate Court finds that the public are not entitled to use the locks without payment of tolls to the defendant. At the same time it finds that the defendant is under an obligation to keep the locks in repair. The appellate Court has power, while declaring by its decree that the public are liable to pay tolls, also to declare that the defendant is liable to keep the locks in repair, notwithstanding that no appeal or objection was taken to that part of the decree by the plaintiff (w).

The appellate Court has power under this rule to vary the decrees of the lower Court, though the variation may benefit a defendant who has not appealed from the decree (x). Thus when plaintiff's claim was decreed partly against A and partly against B, and A appealed and B did not, the appellate Court under this rule made a decree exempting B and making A liable for the whole amount (y). In a Patna Case (z) the plaintiff obtained a decree in the first Court against A, B and C for contribution. A alone appealed and the High Court under this rule dismissed the suit not only against A but against B and C as well. The plaintiff appealed and the Privy Council restored the decree of the first Court. In execution proceedings it was contended that this had not the effect of reviving the decree against B and C which had become time barred. But it was held that as O. 41, r. 33, enables an appellate Court to deal with the entire decree although the appeal may be as to part only, the entire decree becomes the subject matter of the appeal even when the appeal is from part of the decree and by some only of the parties, so that the final decree for purposes of limitation under Article 183 (2) was the decree of the Privy Council and that the application for execution was therefor within time. Similarly the appellate Court has power under this rule to make an order for extension of time for making an award in a matter governed by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899 (a).

Cases to which rule does not apply.—A sues B to recover rent, Rs 205. A decree is passed in favour of A for Rs 95 only. A appeals against the disallowance of the balance of the amount claimed. B neither files a cross appeal nor objections against the decree. The appellate Court finds that nothing is due to A from B. The appellate Court has no power to dismiss A's claim in toto. If B was aggrieved by the decree against him for Rs 95 he ought to have appealed or filed objections (b). Again the rule does not apply when the decree is really a combination of several decrees against several defendants (c). Mukerji J. on a review of all the cases said the rule should be cautiously applied and only in cases where but for recourse to it the ends of justice would be defeated (d).

Such other decree as the case may require—The power of the appellate Court is not limited to determining the question whether the original Court was right according to the law in force at the date of its judgment. It may pass such decree as is in accordance with any later enactment which came into operation subsequent to such date (e).

Remand—A sues B for three sums of money, X, Y and Z. 4 s claim is allowed as to items X and Y but disallowed as to item Z. A appeals from the decree as to item Z. B appeals from the decree as to items X and Y. The appellate Court dismisses A's appeal and allows B's appeal as to item X only with the result that item Y is decreed in A's favour. A then appeals to the High Court as to items X and Z. The High Court has power under this rule to remand the whole case for determination on the merits. The effect of such an order is to empower the lower Court to reopen the case even as to item Y which was decided by the lower appellate Court in favour of A and from which decision B had not referred an appeal to the High Court (f).

Proviso—The proviso was added by Act 9 of 1922. Its effect is that the appellate Court cannot allow a claim for compensatory costs which has been disallowed by the original Court.

- (c) an order under rule 4 of Order X pronouncing judgment against a party ,
- (f) an order under rule 23 of Order XI ,
- (g) an order under rule 10 of Order XVI for the attachment of property ,

- (m) an order under rule 3 of Order XXIII recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction ,
- (n) an order under rule 2 of Order XXV rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit ,

- (p) orders in interpleader suits under rule 3, rule 4, or rule 6 of Order XXXV ,
- (q) an order under rule 2, rule 3 or rule 8 of Order XXXVIII ,

- (u) an order under rule 23 of Order XLI remanding a case, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the appellate Court ,

- (1) an order made by any Court other than a High Court refusing the grant of a certificate under rule 6 of Order XLV
- (ii) an order under rule 4 of Order XLVII granting an application for review

Section 104—This rule forms part of s 104 [see s 104 sub s (1) cl (i)] The result is that no second appeal lies from an order passed in an appeal preferred under this rule (ii)

Clause (a) Order returning plaint to be presented to the proper Court—Where an order is made by the first Court of appeal returning a plaint under Order 10 by virtue of the powers conferred on it by s 107 the order is appealable under this clause and an appeal will lie to the High Court under s 106 (a). But no appeal lies from an order of an appellate Court returning a memorandum of appeal to be presented to the proper Court. The terms of cl (a) of this rule do not cover such a case nor can the reading of Order 10 with s 10 justify the interpolation of the words memorandum of appeal after the word plaint in cl (a) of the present rule (a)

Other clauses—These have already been considered in their proper place

2 [S. 590.] The rules of Order XLI shall apply, so far as may be to appeals from orders

See s 108 cl (b)

ORDER XLIV.

Pauper Appeals

1 [S. 592.] Any person entitled to prefer an appeal who is unable to pay the fee required for the memorandum of appeal, may present an application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal, and may be allowed to appeal as a pauper, subject, in all matters, including the presentation of such application, to the provisions relating to suits by paupers, in so far as those provisions are applicable

Provided that the Court shall reject the application unless, upon a perusal thereof and of the judgment and decree appealed from, it sees reason to think that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law, or is otherwise erroneous or unjust

O. 44, r. 1.

Alteration in the rule—The words "in all matters including the presentation of such application in the first paragraph are now See notes below under those words

"In all matters including the presentation of such application
—The present rule provides that the provisions relating to suits by paupers shall apply so far as may be to appeals by paupers. Therefore the application referred to in this rule for leave to appeal as a pauper must be presented by the applicant in person just as an application for leave to sue as a pauper [see O 33 r 3]. This is now made clear by the addition of the words "in all matters including the presentation of such application. In the absence of these words in the old section it was held by the Madras High Court that the rule as to the presentation of a pauper's petition (now contained in O 33 r 3) did not apply to pauper appeals (p). The Madras decision is no longer law.

"Subject to the provision relating to suits by paupers—A sues B to recover certain properties as the heir of her deceased husband. The suit is dismissed. A applies for leave to appeal as a pauper. It is found on inquiry that A had before instituting the suit entered into an agreement falling within the terms of O 33 r 5 (d), which would have disentitled A to sue as a pauper. The appellate Court should under these circumstances refuse leave to A to appeal as a pauper (p).

Application and memorandum of appeal—This rule requires two separate documents to be presented—a memorandum of appeal and an application for leave to appeal as a pauper. When the Judge disposes of the pauper application he does not thereby necessarily dispose of the appeal. He may still treat it as an existing appeal if the appellant desires to pay the full court fees on the appeal and to continue it as an ordinary appeal. The Judge is under no legal obligation to dismiss the appeal when he refuses the appellant leave to appeal as a pauper (r). Following this reasoning it has been held by the High Court of Madras that where an application for leave to sue as a pauper is rejected owing to the memorandum of appeal which accompanied it being unstamped, the rejection of the application does not carry with it the rejection of the memorandum of appeal. The result is that if the pauper applies for time to pay the court fee and time is granted to him [s 149] and the court fee is paid within the time fixed by the Court the appeal must be held to be in time though the court fee may have been paid after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for filing the appeal (s).

Proviso to the rule—The proviso is mandatory (t) and is a necessary safeguard introduced by the legislature for the benefit of litigants who find themselves opposed by paupers. To provide a safeguard against the proviso being overlooked the Judge admitting a pauper appeal should express and record briefly the reasons on which the leave proceeds (u). The proviso is of course not applicable unless the appeal is in forma pauperis (v).

Appeal—No appeal lies under the Code from an order refusing leave to appeal as a pauper. It was held in a Madras case that no appeal lies from such an order under cl 15 of the Letters Patent (w) but that decision has been disented from by a Full Bench of the same High Court in a recent case (x). There is an Allahabad case in which it was held that no appeal lies under the Letters Patent from an order refusing leave to appeal as a pauper (y) That decision however, proceeded on grounds no longer tenable and it cannot, therefore be treated as a precedent (See notes to s 104, 'Letters Patent Appeal, p 232 above

2. [s. 593.] The inquiry into the pauperism of the applicant may be made either by the appellate Court or under the orders of the appellate Court by the Court from whose decision the appeal is preferred

Inquiry into pauperism

Provided that, if the applicant was allowed to sue or appeal as a pauper in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, no further inquiry in respect of his pauperism shall be necessary, unless the appellate Court sees cause to direct such inquiry

ORDER XLV.

Appeals to the King in Council.

1. [s. 594.] In this Order, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context, the expression "decree" shall include a final order.

Decree defined

When appeals lie to King in Council—See ss 109 and 110

2. [s. 598.] Whoever desires to appeal to His Majesty in Council shall apply by petition to the Court whose decree is complained of.

Application to Court whose decree is complained of

In forma pauperis—When a person applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in forma pauperis, he must present an application for that purpose to the High Court and a separate application to His Majesty in Council (a)

Power of High Court to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in forma pauperis—It has recently been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (b) Patna (c) and Madras (d) that O 44 r 1, does not apply to appeals to His Majesty in Council and that the High Court has no power to grant leave to appeal

Limitation—See notes to s 109 above

3. [S 600] (1) Every petition shall state the grounds of appeal and pray for a certificate either that, as regards amount or value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of section 110, or that it is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

(2) Upon receipt of such petition, the Court shall direct notice to be served on the opposite party to show cause why the said certificate should not be granted.

Alteration in the rule—In sub rule (2) the word "shall" has been substituted for the word "may"

Petition—A petition for a certificate, which was dropped when the judgment complained of was reversed on review, was treated as revived when the review was held incompetent by the Privy Council (g)

Certificate—The certificate of leave to appeal, and not the order for such certificate is the document which the Judicial Committee are bound to consider and act upon in determining whether leave to appeal has been properly granted or not, and unless the certificate upon which the leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify that leave, they ought to hold that leave has not properly been given (h) The certificate must make plain upon the face of it that the discretion conferred upon the High Court was invoked and exercised (i) The assent of the respondent to the issue of a certificate under this rule cannot give effect to it in the absence of the conditions under which alone it could be issued (j)

Certificate as to fitness—Where a case fulfils the requirements of s 110 the petitioner is entitled to a certificate as of right in the ordinary course of procedure. When it does not, that is, where the matter is under the appealable value or is not measurable by money, the granting of the certificate is entirely in the discretion of the Court (k). In the former case, the High Court should certify the sufficiency of the amount for appeal to the Privy Council, and should also certify, when the decision of the lower Court is affirmed, that the appeal involves a question of law. The Judicial Committee will not interfere with any question of valuation unless it can be shown that some item has been improperly valued or excluded, or that there is some fundamental principle which renders the valuation unsound. On the mere question of the value of admitted items the Committee will not interfere, nor will they allow a party to contend that the valuation has been arrived at on an erroneous principle, unless he has raised that contention by his printed case (l) In the latter case it is enough if the certificate states that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council (m) Where a party applies to the Committee for special leave to appeal, the matter being under the appealable value or not measurable by money, he should first have applied to the Court below for a certificate under this rule and s 109, cl (c), that the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council, and observed that unless this was done, special leave to appeal would not be granted by the Committee except in special cases (n) See notes to s 109 "Certificate as to fitness, p 291, and notes to s 110 under sub head "Where the matter is under the appealable value or not capable of valuation," p 299

Procedure.—If the petitioner does not prosecute his petition, it may be struck off for non prosecution (o)

Appeal.—An order granting a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council is not a 'judgment' within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent Hence no appeal lies from such an order (p) Nor does an appeal lie under that clause from an order refusing an application for leave to the Privy Council where the refusal is based on the ground that the case did not fulfil the requirements of s 110 above (q).

Form.—For form of notice under sub r (2), see App G, form no. 12

4. [New.] For the purposes of pecuniary valuation, suits involving substantially the same questions for determination and decided by the same judgment may be consolidated :

Consolidation of suits

but suits decided by separate judgments shall not be consolidated, notwithstanding that they involve substantially the same questions for determination.

Consolidation of suits.—This rule is new In the absence of any such rule in the Code of 1882, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that suits involving substantially the same questions for determination could be consolidated for the purpose of reaching the pecuniary limit necessary for an appeal, if the property affected by the suits was the same, notwithstanding that the suits were decided by separate judgments (r) According to the Calcutta decisions, however, such consolidation was not permissible unless the suits, besides involving the same question for determination, were decided by the same judgment (s) The present rule gives effect to the Calcutta rulings (t) It need hardly be observed that suits that could be consolidated for the purposes of pecuniary valuation must be suits actually instituted and not merely suits in gremio futuri (u)

Judgment.—The judgment referred to in this rule is the judgment appealed against and not the judgment of the lower Court (v)

Inherent power to consolidate cases—This rule provides for consolidation of cases "for the purposes of pecuniary valuation." The High Court of Patna has held

(s) Postal Insurance Company v Aliy Coomar (1901) 5 Cal W N 41

O. 45, that the High Court has inherent powers to permit consolidation of cases on grounds
 rr. 4-6, other than those specified in this rule. Accordingly where two appeals to His Majesty in Council were in substance one, the two were ordered to be consolidated and tried together, the Court observing that "in the interest of justice and to save unnecessary expense the appeals ought to be consolidated" (u)

5. [New] In the event of any dispute arising between the parties as to the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, or as to the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, the Court to which a petition for a certificate is made under rule 2 may, if it thinks fit, refer such dispute for report to the Court of first instance, which last mentioned Court shall proceed to determine such amount or value and shall return its report together with the evidence to the Court by which the reference was made

Remission of dispute to Court of first instance

Dispute as to value of subject-matter—This rule is new. It gives legislative recognition to the practice followed under the Code of 1859 in cases where there was a dispute as to the value of the subject matter of the suit. This practice referred to in the undermentioned Calcutta case (x) where it was held that a plaintiff in a suit for damages cannot ensure an appeal to the Privy Council by merely placing his damages at a sufficiently high figure. 4 claims Rs 10 000 as damages for an alleged defamation. The suit is dismissed on the ground that the libel was privileged, and the decision is affirmed in appeal. A applies for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The mere fact that A claimed Rs 10 000 as damages is not sufficient proof that the amount of the matter in dispute is Rs 10 000. Hence if the other party disputes the correctness of the amount A must show that the amount of the matter in dispute is Rs 10 000. When there is a contest as to the true value of the matter in dispute it has been the invariable practice—a practice sanctioned by the Judicial Committee—to ascertain by evidence and enquiry what the true value is. But where an inquiry has already been made at the trial of the suit by the Court of first instance as to the value of the subject matter of the suit, and the finding as to the value has been acquiesced in by the applicant the High Court may not direct any fresh inquiry under this rule (y). Where a reference is made under this rule to the Court of first instance, the inquiry should be held by that Court. The Court of first instance has no power to remit the investigation to some other officer (z).

Effect of refusal of certificate

6. [S 601] Where such certificate is refused, the petition shall be dismissed

Costs.—Where the petition is made to the High Court and it is dismissed with costs the proper Court to execute the order is the lower Court (a)

(a) furnish security in cash or in Government securities for the costs of the respondent, and

(2) Where the applicant prefers to print in India the copy of the record, except as aforesaid, he shall also within the time mentioned in sub rule (1) deposit the amount required to defray the expense of printing such copy

Rule amended.—The italicised words were added into this rule by Act 26 of 1970. In sub rule (1) the words originally were "within six months". The period is now reduced to 90 days. See notes below Extension of time. The provisos were also added by the same Act.

O. 45,
rr. 7, 8

Date of the decree—This means the date on which the decree is pronounced not that on which it is signed (b)

Extension of time—It has been held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that the High Court may extend the time allowed for giving the security and making the deposit provided there are "cogent reasons" for doing so (d). According to the Madras High Court the "cogent reasons" must be such as would lead the Court to believe that the party was diligent in due time to be prepared to lodge the deposit within the limited period, and that he was prevented from doing so not owing to the absence and difficulty of getting funds, but owing to some circumstances accidental or otherwise over which he had no control or owing to mistake which the Court would consider not unreasonable or caused by negligence (e). On the other hand, it has been held by the Chief Court of the Punjab that poverty is a cogent reason for extending the time if the amount required is large and the applicant has deposited a substantial portion of the amount within the time originally allowed (f). Prior to Act 26 of 1910 it was the uniform practice to extend time on good cause shown. But the object of the amending Act was to expedite Privy Council appeals and the restrictive words used limit the Court's discretion so that the Court can in no case grant an extension of more than sixty days (g). The Allahabad High Court has held that the shorter period allowed by the amending Act does not apply when the decree was passed before the Act came into force (h).

Security in case of consolidated appeal—Where two or more appeals are consolidated for purposes of pecuniary valuation, the security required by this rule is the whole security which the appellants together have to furnish and not only a portion thereof. Therefore, if two or more appeals are consolidated, and some sets of appellants furnish the security required from them, but others do not, the consolidated appeal cannot be admitted under r 8 below (i).

Records—The Privy Council have strongly condemned the inclusion in the record of unnecessary papers and disallowed the costs occasioned thereby (j).

Delay—If delay in the preparation of the record is due to the inaction of the appellant it seems that the appeal may be certified as not effectually prosecuted (k).

Appeal—No appeal lies under cl 15 of the Charter from an order refusing to extend the time for furnishing security for costs and directing the appeal to be struck off (l).

8. [S 603] Where such security has been furnished and deposit made to the satisfaction of the Court, the Court shall—

- 9. [S. 604.] At any time before the admission of the appeal the Court may, upon cause shown, revoke the acceptance of any such security and make further directions thereon

Revocation of acceptance of security

9-A. Nothing in these rules requiring any notice to be served on or given to an opposite party or respondent shall be deemed to require any notice to be served on or given to the legal representative of any deceased opposite party or deceased respondent in a case, where such opposite party or respondent did not appear either at the hearing in the Court whose decree is complained of or at any proceedings subsequent to the decree of that Court and the appeal shall not proceed without an order in this behalf of His Majesty in Council,

12. [S. 607.] When the copy of the record except as aforesaid, has been transmitted to His Majesty in Council, the appellant may obtain a refund of the balance (if any) of the amount which he has deposited under rule 7

Powers of Court pending appeal 13. [S. 608] (1) Notwithstanding the grant of a certificate for the admission of any appeal the decree appealed from shall be unconditionally executed unless the Court otherwise directs

(2) The Court may, if it thinks fit, on special cause shown by any party interested in the suit, or otherwise appearing to the Court,—

- (a) impound any moveable property in dispute or any part thereof or
- (b) allow the decree appealed from to be executed taking such security from the respondent as the Court thinks fit for the due performance of any order which His Majesty in Council may make on the appeal or
- (c) stay the execution of the decree appealed from taking such security from the appellant as the Court thinks fit for the due performance of the decree appealed from, or of any order which His Majesty in Council may make on the appeal or
- (d) place any party seeking the assistance of the Court under such conditions or give such other direction respecting the subject matter of the appeal as it thinks fit, by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise

Alterations in the rule:—

O. 45, r. 13.

1. The words 'admitting the appeal' which occurred in the first paragraph of the old section after the word 'Court' have been omitted. Those words gave rise to a conflict of decisions on the question whether the Court had power under the old section to stay the execution of the decree appealed from after a petition had been presented for leave to appeal but before the appeal was admitted. It was held by the High Court of Bombay that the Court had the power (n). On other hand, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the Court had no such power, the decision being based on the ground that the words 'the Court admitting the appeal' indicated that no stay could be granted until the appeal was admitted (o). The words 'admitting the appeal' have been omitted to make it clear that the power conferred by this rule may be exercised at any time after the presenting of the petition, and even before the grant of a certificate for the admission of the appeal.

Another result of the omission of the words 'admitting the appeal' after the word 'Court' is to invest the High Court with power to stay execution, notwithstanding that an appeal has been admitted by special leave of His Majesty in Council (p). Under the Code of 1882 it was held that since the powers conferred by the corresponding s 603 could only be exercised by the Court admitting the appeal, the High Court had no power to stay execution where the appeal was admitted by special leave of His Majesty in Council (q).

It seems unnecessary to add that a District Court cannot stay execution and that O 41 does not apply (r).

2. The words 'by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise' at the end of cl (d) are new.

'The Court.'—The Court referred to in this rule and r 14 is the High Court (s).

Stay of execution before grant of certificate.—See notes above, 'Alterations in the rule, No 1'.

Stay of execution in view of an application for special leave to appeal.—The High Court has an inherent power to make an order for stay of execution in view of an application by the judgment debtor to the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (t).

Clause (b).—The respondent decree holder a failure to give security will not deprive him of the benefit of s 15 of the Limitation Act (u).

Clause (c).—If the Court fixes a time for furnishing security as a condition of stay of execution it is advisable that the time for tender of security should be specified with further directions for the inquiry as to its sufficiency (v). Proceedings for final decree for partition after a preliminary decree has been passed are not execution proceedings which can be stayed under this rule (w).

O. 45,
rr. 13, 14.

Security after execution—The Court has power to require security to be given under this rule even after the decree has been executed wholly or in part (x). It has also the power to stay further execution after the decree has been partially executed (y).

Stay of execution where appeal admitted by special leave.—See notes above "Alterations in the rule," No. 1, second paragraph.

Appointment of receiver where appeal admitted by special leave.—The High Court has power to appoint a receiver under cl. (d) notwithstanding that the appeal was admitted by special leave of His Majesty in Council (z).

Practice.—Applications of the character mentioned in this rule ought always to be made in the first instance, at any rate, to the Court in India, which has ample power to deal with the matter according to the circumstances of the peculiar case, and has knowledge of details which the Judicial Committee cannot possess on an interlocutory application (a). If the application is refused by the High Court, and the Judicial Committee is of opinion that the application ought to have been granted, it may grant a stay of execution. But more than this it will not do; for instance, it will not appoint a receiver of the property under attachment nor take the security referred to in cls (b) and (c) of sub rule (2). In such cases, the Judicial Committee will grant leave to the applicant to apply to the High Court with an intimation of its opinion. The High Court is bound to take notice of such order, it being an order of His Majesty the King in Council, and to govern itself accordingly (b).

Appeal—No appeal lies under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from an order refusing to stay execution pending appeal to the Privy Council (c).

14. [s. 609.] Where at any time during the pendency of the appeal the security furnished by either party appears inadequate, the Court may, on the application of the other party, require further security.

(2) In default of such further security being furnished as required by the Court,—

(a) if the original security was furnished by the appellant, the Court may, on the application of the respondent, execute the decree appealed from as if the appellant had furnished no such security;

15 [S. 610.] (1) Whoever desires to obtain execution of any order of His Majesty in Council shall apply by petition, accompanied by a certified copy of the decree passed or order made in appeal and sought to be executed, to the Court from which the appeal to His Majesty was preferred.

I proceed re to enforce orders of King, in Council

(2) Such Court shall transmit the order of His Majesty in Council to the Court which passed the first decree appealed from, or to such other Court as His Majesty in Council by such order may direct, and shall (upon the application of either party) give such directions as may be required for the execution of the same, and the Court to which the said order is so transmitted shall execute it accordingly, in the manner and according to the provisions applicable to the execution of its original decrees

(3) When any monies expressed to be payable in British currency are payable in India under such order, the amount so payable shall be payable to the rate of exchange for the time being prevailing at the making of the order by the Secretary of State for India in Council with the concurrence of the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the adjustment of financial transactions between the Imperial and the Indian Governments.

(4) Unless His Majesty in Council is pleased otherwise to direct, no order of His Majesty in Council shall be inoperative on the ground that no notice has been served on or given to the legal representative of any deceased opposite party or deceased respondent in a case, where such opposite party or respondent did not appear either at the hearing in the Court whose decree was complained of or at any proceedings subsequent to the decree of that Court, but such order shall have the same force and effect as if it had been made before the death took place.

O. 45, r. 15.

Alterations in the rule—Paragraphs 3 and 4 of the old section which related to the enforcement of the liability of a surety for the costs of the respondents have been omitted in view of the general rule now laid down in s 145. Para 4 was added by Act 26 of 1920 in order to prevent delays in the disposal of Privy Council appeals.

Jurisdiction of Patna High Court—The Patna High Court has no jurisdiction to execute an order of His Majesty in Council passed in an appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court on appeal from a subordinate Court in Behar. The application for execution of such an order should be made to the Calcutta High Court (d).

"Whoever desires to obtain execution"—It may be that where a decree has been passed in favour of a number of persons jointly, an application under this rule by one or more of them would be sufficient to entitle all of them to apply for execution in the Court below. But it is not so where several persons are by a decree declared entitled to separate specific shares, say of an equal share, in which case each person obtains by the decree a right to a separate share. In such a case no single plaintiff is entitled to execute the decree on behalf of all the plaintiffs, from which it follows that an application under sub r (1) by some of the plaintiffs does not entitle all of them to apply under sub r (2) for execution to the Court to which the order of His Majesty in Council is sent for execution under that sub rule (e).

Functions of the High Court under this rule—The act of the High Court in receiving and filing orders of His Majesty in Council under this rule is a purely ministerial function. The High Court therefore, has no power, under this rule to discuss the effect of the order of His Majesty in Council on an application to file the order. If the order is impeached as erroneous, the proper course for the party aggrieved by the order is to apply to His Majesty in Council to make the necessary alteration or modification in the order (f).

"Execution"—The word 'execution' includes restitution as described in s 144. A person, therefore, who desires to obtain execution, though it be by way of restitution, must apply in the first instance to the Court indicated by this rule (g). The provisions of this rule are mandatory so that if the petition is presented to a different Court the execution application is liable to be dismissed (h).

Application for execution of order of His Majesty in Council by assignee of order.—Where an order of His Majesty in Council is transmitted by the High Court for execution under sub r (2) to the Court which passed the first decree appealed from, the latter Court is not in the position of a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution, and it is not therefore precluded from entertaining an application for execution of the order by an assignee of the order (i). See O 21, r 16, and notes thereto. Application for execution by a transferee should be made to the Court which passed the decree. p 614 above.

Enforcement of liability of surety—A obtains a decree against B in a High Court for possession of certain immoveable property. B appeals to the Privy Council, and C stands surety for A's costs of the appeal [r 7, sub r 1, cl (a)]. If the appeal is dismissed with costs, A may proceed against C for costs by an application for execution [s 145].

Restitution—A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immovable property Possession of the property is delivered to him in execution The decree is then set aside in appeal to the Privy Council Pending the appeal to the Privy Council the property is sold in execution of a decree obtained by C against A and it is purchased by P B is entitled on reversal of the decree by the Privy Council to restitution of the property as against P, the latter being a "representative" of A within the meaning of s 47 (b) See notes to s 144 under the head Against whom restitution may be claimed p 343 above

Mesne profits—Where a party is dispossessed of land in pursuance of a decree of the High Court and the decree is reversed in appeal to the Privy Council, he is entitled not only to restoration of the land but to mesne profits during the period of dispossession, though the order of His Majesty in Council may be silent as to such profits (l) See s 144

Rate of exchange—The Courts have differed on the question whether the words for the time being refer to the rate of exchange at the date of the passing of the order or to that current when the amount is realised The former view is held by the Calcutta High Court (m) the latter by the Allahabad High Court (n)

Interest on costs—Where interest on costs is not allowed in the order of His Majesty in Council such interest cannot be given by any Court in this country (o)

Letters Patent appeal—An appeal lies under cl 13 of the Letters Patent from an order of a single Judge of a High Court refusing to transmit for execution the order of His Majesty in Council as provided by sub rule (2) of this rule (p)

Limitation—An application for execution under this rule is governed by Art 193 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (q)

Dismissal of appeal for want of prosecution—Where an appeal is preferred to the Privy Council from the decree of a High Court, but the appeal is dismissed for want of prosecution, the order of His Majesty in Council does not amount to a decree at all for purposes of limitation or for any other purpose Such an order does not deal judicially with the matter of the suit, but merely recognizes authoritatively that the appellant had not complied with the conditions under which the appeal was open to him, and that therefore he is in the same position as if he had not appealed at all (r)

ORDER XLVI.

Reference

- O. 46, r. 1. 1. [S. 617.] Where, before or on the hearing of a suit or an appeal in which the decree is not subject to appeal, or where, in the execution of any such decree, any question of law or usage having the force of law arises, on which the Court trying the suit or appeal, or executing the decree, entertains reasonable doubt, the Court may, either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties, draw up a statement of the facts of the case and the point on which doubt is entertained, and refer such statement with its own opinion on the point for the decision of the High Court

Reference of question to High Court

Alterations in the rule.—

- 1 The words is not subject to appeal have been substituted for the word final as the expression final decree is now used in this Code in contradistinction to a preliminary decree
- 2 The words or the construction of a document which construction may affect the merits which occurred in the old section after the words having the force of law have been omitted as they are sufficiently covered by the power to refer any question of law

Hearing of a suit or appeal—A reference can be made to the High Court under this rule only in a suit or an appeal in a suit and not in every matter before the Court in which a point arises on which the Court entertains reasonable doubt (1). Thus where a pleader was fined Rs. 25 by a Subordinate Judge for refusing to act on behalf of his client after receipt of retaining fee and on appeal the District Judge referred the matter to the High Court under this rule it was held that no reference could properly be made under this rule as there was no suit or appeal in a suit (2). Nor can any reference be made in a proceeding other than a suit or an appeal in a suit even by virtue of the provisions of s. 141 above (3). See note to s. 141. Decree not subject to appeal—This rule does not authorize a reference to the High Court except in a suit or appeal in which the decree is not subject to appeal. Therefore no reference can be made to the High Court in a matter in which an appeal lies, for in appealable cases a remedy to correct possible error is provided by the appeal. It is only when a decree is not subject to appeal that a reference can be made under this rule. (v) In Ranjit v Durga (w) a Munsif being of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to entertain a particular suit, returned the plaint to be presented to the proper Court. On appeal, the District Judge referred the matter to the High Court. The High Court held that the order of the Munsif returning the plaint being an appealable order [O 43 r 1, cl (a)] the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the reference. On the same ground it is held that there could be no reference under this rule in a matter of probate, and that an order made by a District Judge on an application for probate being appealable it cannot be referred for the opinion of the High Court under this rule though, when referred the High Court may deal with the case as a Court of concurrent jurisdiction under s 264 of the Indian Succession Act (x).

Jurisdiction—A Judge who has no jurisdiction to hear a suit or an appeal has no jurisdiction to make a reference before or at the hearing of such suit or appeal (y).

Reasonable doubt—A reference under this rule can only be made when a Judge entertains a reasonable doubt on a question of law or usage having the force of law. A Judge cannot ordinarily entertain a reasonable doubt on a point clearly decided by the rulings of the High Court to which he is subordinate, unless the authority of the decision can be questioned by virtue of anything said or decided in the Privy Council (z). If the Court has no reasonable doubt it should not make a reference merely because it is asked to make one (a).

Reference by Presidency Small Cause Court—See Presidency Small Cause Court Act 1882, s 60.

2. [s. 618.] The Court may either stay the proceedings or proceed in the case notwithstanding such reference and may pass a decree or make an order contingent upon the decision of the High Court on the point referred,

Court may pass the

but no decree or order shall be executed in any case in which such reference is made until the receipt of a copy of the judgment of the High Court upon the reference.

3. [s. 619.] The High Court, after hearing the parties if they appear and desire to be heard, shall decide the point so referred, and shall transmit a copy of its judgment, under the signature of the Registrar, to the Court by which the decision of the High Court.

“Such Court shall proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court”—In Yule & Co v Mahomed Hossein (b) the Calcutta Small Cause Court passed a decree for the plaintiffs contingent on the opinion of the High Court. The High Court held that upon the case presented by the plaintiffs they could not recover. The judgment of the High Court was transmitted to the Small Cause Court, and the Small Cause Court Judge, instead of entering judgment for the defendants, allowed the suit to be withdrawn by the plaintiffs with liberty to them to bring a fresh suit [O 23, r 1]. Upon a petition for revision it was held by the High Court that the Small Cause Court was bound on receipt of the decision of the High Court to dispose of the case in conformity with that decision, and to enter judgment for the defendants, and that the order allowing the plaintiffs to withdraw from the suit was illegal.

Power to alter etc decree of Court making reference

5. [S. 621.] Where a case is referred to the High Court under rule 1, the High Court may return the case for amendment, and may alter, cancel or set aside any decree or order which the Court making the reference has passed or made in the case out of which the reference arose, and make such orders as it thinks fit

(2) On receiving the record and statement, the High Court may order the Court either to proceed with the suit or to return the plaint for presentation to such other Court as it may in its order declare to be competent to take cognizance of the suit.

At any time before judgment — A reference under this rule can only be made before judgment (c)

7. [S. 646-B.] (1) Where it appears to a District Court that a Court subordinate thereto has, by reason of erroneously holding a suit to be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes or not to be so cognizable, failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or exercised a jurisdiction not so vested, the District Court may, and if required by a party shall, submit the record to the High Court with a statement of its reasons for considering the opinion of the subordinate Court with respect to the nature of the suit to be erroneous.

(2) On receiving the record and statement the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit.

(3) With respect to any proceedings subsequent to decree in any case submitted to the High Court under this rule the High Court may make such order as in the circumstance appears to it to be just and proper.

(4) A Court subordinate to a District Court shall comply with any requisition which the District Court may make for any record or information for the purposes of this rule.

Provincial Small Cause Courts' Act 9 of 1887, sec. 16—Section 10 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts' Act runs as follows "Save as expressly provided by this Act or by any other enactment for the time being in force, a suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes shall not be tried by any other Court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes by which the suit is triable"

"If required by a party shall"—It has been held by the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta that a District Court is bound to make a reference under this rule if one of the parties requires it to do so (d). On the other hand, it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the word "shall" is not mandatory, but merely directory and that a District Court should not make a reference under this rule, unless it is satisfied that a Court subordinate thereto has erroneously held upon the point of jurisdiction in regard to the particular suit before it (e).

Statement of reasons.—Where a reference is made to the High Court under this rule, the District Court which makes the reference should state its reasons for considering the opinion of the subordinate Court with respect to the nature of the suit to be erroneous (f).

Powers of High Court under this rule—There is a conflict of decisions as to the powers of the High Court under this rule as will be seen from the cases considered below—

A suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court is tried by a District Munsif on the merits and without objection to his jurisdiction, and a decree is passed for the plaintiff.

O. 46, r. 7. defendant appeals to the District Court, making no reference to the question of jurisdiction in his grounds of appeal. The District Court reverses the decree passed by the Munsif. The plaintiff applies to the High Court under s. 115 for a revision of the decision of the District Court. It is clear that the suit being one of a nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court, the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain it under his ordinary jurisdiction having regard to the provisions of section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act set forth above. Nor had the District Court jurisdiction to entertain the appeal from the decree in such a suit. What order should the High Court make, assuming, of course, that the suit was one of a nature cognisable by a Small Cause Court and which of the following courses should it adopt?—

- (1) Should the High Court set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court?
- (2) Or has it power to consider the case on the merits and to decline to interfere in the matter even though in strict law the suit should have been tried under a different procedure?
- (3) Or should it not set aside at least the decree of the District Court as having been made without jurisdiction, and then dispose of the case on its merits leaving the decree passed by the Munsif to stand or not as may in its discretion appear best?

The first course was adopted by White, C. J., in a Madras case where the learned Judge observed that there was no alternative but to adopt that course (g).

The second course was adopted by the High Court of Calcutta in the undermentioned cases (i) where the Court declined to interfere on the ground that they had a complete discretion in the matter.

The third course was adopted in a recent case by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (j). The Full Bench held, dissenting from the Calcutta decisions cited above and overruling an earlier Madras case (k) in which the Calcutta decision was followed that the decree of the District Judge should be set aside as having been passed without jurisdiction. That decree was accordingly set aside, and the decree passed by the Munsif was restored. The same course was adopted in a Bombay case (l).

As regards the Allahabad High Court, it declined to interfere in one case on the ground that the present rule did not apply unless there was an erroneous holding as to jurisdiction, and that there could be no holding at all if no objection to jurisdiction was taken by either party in the Courts below (i). In a later case, it followed the Full Bench ruling of the Madras Court and set aside the decree of the District Court and restored the decree passed by the Munsif (m).

ORDER XLVII.

*Review.*Application for review of judgment

1. [S. 623.] (1) Any person considering himself aggrieved— O. 47 r. 1

- (a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred,
- (b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is allowed, or
- (c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order

(2) A party who is not appealing from a decree or order may apply for a review of judgment notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal by some other party except where the ground of such appeal is common to the applicant and the appellant, or when, being respondent, he can present to the appellate Court the case on which he applies for the review.

In what cases a party may apply for a review—A party aggrieved by a decree or a decision specified in clause (a) (b) or (c) of sub-rule (1) [see s 114] may apply for a review in any of the following cases —

- I on the ground of the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which after the exercise of due diligence, was not within the knowledge of the party or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or
- II on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or
- III for any other sufficient reason

Ex parte decree or order—A party aggrieved may apply for a review of an ex parte decree or order (u) and if the case falls within this rule it is no objection that an application under O 9, r 13, could have been made and that it is barred by 47, r. 1. limitation (o) See notes under § 9, r. 13, and O 41, r. 1. The Court has jurisdiction to review an ex parte order for issue of writ for delivery of possession and to recall the writ (p)

Miscellaneous proceedings—The provisions of the Code as to review apply to proceedings under the Indian Succession Act, and an order granting letters of administration is open to review (q)

Order on application—Where a party aggrieved by a decree applies for a review, the application may either be granted or rejected (r, 4 below)

If the application is rejected the case ends there and the parties are relegated to the old decree. The order rejecting the application is final, and no appeal lies therefrom (r 7), but the party aggrieved may appeal from the old decree.

If the application is admitted, the case is re heard, and it may result in a repetition of the decree or in some variation of it. In either case, the whole matter having been re opened, there is a fresh decree (r), until that fresh decree is passed the old decree remains in suspense (s)

I. Discovery of new and important matter or evidence—When a review is sought on the ground of the discovery of new evidence the evidence must be (1) relevant and (2) of such a character that if it had been given in the suit it might possibly have altered the judgment (t). As stated by Lord Loreburn, L C, in Brown v. Dean (u), "It [new evidence] must at least be such as is presumably to be believed, and if believed would be conclusive." Applications on this ground must be treated with great caution and as required by r 4 (2) (b) the Court must be convinced that the materials placed before it in accordance with the formalities of the law do prove the existence of the facts alleged (v). It is not only the discovery of new and important evidence that entitles a party to apply for a review, but the discovery of any new and important matter which was not within the knowledge of the party when the decree was made. A sues B to recover a sum of money alleged to be due under a certain agreement and obtained a decree. B appealed to the Privy Council. Pending the appeal A brought another suit against B to recover another sum of money alleged to have become due under the same agreement, and obtained a decree on the strength of the former decree. Their Lordships of the Privy Council reversed the first decree. B then applied for a review of the second decree, and the application was allowed on the ground that in the circumstances of the case the Privy Council decision was 'new and important matter' on which to apply for a review of the second decree (w). This decision stands on the special facts of the case. In Amrit Lal v. Madho Das (x), it was held that where a decree is based upon a decision of a Divisional Bench of the High Court and that decision is subsequently overruled by the Full Bench the reversal is no ground for a review of the decree. Nor is the production of a new ruling or authority, which if brought to the notice of the Judge at the first hearing might have altered the judgment, "new and important matter" within the meaning of this rule (y).

It is not to be supposed that the discovery of new evidence is by itself sufficient to entitle a party to a review of judgment. The provision relating to review contemplates grounds which would alter or cancel the decree. Thus if a suit is dismissed on two grounds, namely, (1) that no notice of suit was given, and (2) that the plaintiff was illegitimate, and the plaintiff applies for a review on the ground of discovery of new evidence on the question of legitimacy, it is a good ground for rejecting the application that even if the Court held on the reception of new evidence that the plaintiff was legitimate it would not lead to the modification or setting aside of the original decree. The absence of notice being fatal to the suit (2).

11 Mistake or error apparent on the face of the record.—A review may be granted whether on any ground urged at the original hearing of the suit or not whenever the Court considers that it is necessary to correct an evident error or omission (a). Thus a review was granted where an error on a point of law was apparent on the face of the judgment (b). Similarly a review was granted when the provisions of the second paragraph of s 57 (now s 98, sub s (2)) were wrongly applied (c). But it is no ground for review that the judgment proceeds on an incorrect exposition of the law (d) or on a ruling which has subsequently been modified (e) or reversed (f). See s 152.

III. "For any other sufficient reason"—These words mean that the reason may be one sufficient to the Court to which the application for review is made, and they cannot be held to be limited to the discovery of new and important matter or evidence, or the occurring of a mistake or error apparent on the record (g). Thus in Ghansham v Lal Singh (h), a reference to a Full Bench was disposed of in the absence of the respondent. The respondent proved that his absence at the hearing was due to the fact that notice of the reference was not served upon him. It was held that this constituted a 'sufficient reason' for granting a review. In Sulleman v The New Oriental Bank Corporation, Ltd (i), a review was granted on the ground that the question that had cropped up at the hearing was one of great general commercial importance. In Gopal v Solomon (j), all the parties, counsel on both sides, and the Judge were at the trial of the suit under a misapprehension as to the contents of a document. It was held that this was a 'sufficient reason' for granting a review. In a Patna case, where an auction purchaser applied for an order for delivery of possession and the order was made it was held that it was sufficient ground for reviewing the order that the application was on the face of it barred by limitation (k). But a party who not only had an opportunity of raising a question but who actually raised it, and who was not to the applicant, he would satisfy the Court that its previous order was wrong (m) Omission to raise a point of law is not sufficient (n) Nor is it a ground for review of a compromise that a party alleges that his consent was procured by undue influence (o)

The ground of review must be something which existed at the date of the decree and the rule does not authorize the review of a decree which was right when it was made, on the ground of the happening of some subsequent event (p). But when a decree fixed a period for the performance of a condition and a railway strike made timely performance impossible, the High Court of Allahabad held that it had jurisdiction to extend the time in review (q).

The Privy Council have in the case of Chhajju Ram v. Neha (r) reviewed the case law in which their Lordships said there was no little inconsistency (due partly to the fact that prior to the Code of 1877 the ground for review was not so restrictive) and laid down the rule that "any other sufficient reason" means a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously. The case was one in which the Punjab Chief Court had granted a review as the judgment had "proceeded on an incorrect exposition of the law." This was held by the Privy Council not to be analogous and therefore not a sufficient reason. The actual decision is no doubt correct but the general rule laid down has not escaped criticism. Mukerjee J. in Gopika Ram v. Maharaja (s), referring to Chhajju's case said "Whether any analogy can be discovered between the two grounds specified, namely, 'the discovery of new and important matter or evidence' and 'some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record' need not be discussed. But whether a particular reason is analogous to either one or other of these two grounds may obviously lead to very refined if not subtle arguments." Again in Narain v. Chiranj (t) the Allahabad High Court described the rule in Chhajju's case as 'technical' and said in our opinion the words in O. 47, r. 1, 'for any other sufficient reason' are not only very wide in themselves, but are intentionally so made by the Legislature because of the possibility of exceptional cases arising in which obvious injustice would be worked by a strict adherence to the terms of the decree. There is much force in these criticisms for as Mukerjee J., pointed out in Probhas Kumar v. Nihar Lal (u), the powers exercisable under s. 151, and under O. 47, r. 1, are not mutually exclusive and there are several cases where it was held to be immaterial whether the review was granted under O. 47 or under the inherent jurisdiction, e.g., where a suit was by mistake dismissed for default though a plaintiff was present in person (v), or where a suit was dismissed for failure to make up the deficit of Court fee and it was found that the Court fee had been embezzled by a pleader's clerk (w), or where important evidence was produced just after judgment was signed (x).

Chhajju's case, however, is the law, and has been followed (y). But there are some inconsistencies in the cases which follow it and these serve to illustrate the difficulty of applying the rule. Thus though Chhajju's case decided that an incorrect exposition of the law was not a sufficient reason, yet in Narain Rao v. Balwanth Dabhu (z) an error as to the Hindu law of succession was held to be an error patent on the face of the record and again in Brindaban v. Damodar (a) the Calcutta High Court reviewed its judgment because it construed a leading case in Hindu Law in a sense different to that adopted in a subsequent Privy Council decision. Another similar case is Ganesh v. Suraj (b). In that case a landlord had obtained a decree for rent against tenants of a 12 anna share of a holding and advertised the whole holding for sale. The tenants of the 4 anna share sued to restrain the sale alleging fraud and collusion. The Judge dismissed the suit and then granted a review ■ a case on which he had relied had been subsequently overruled In appeal Dawson Miller C J, admitted that if review was on the ground of error patent on the face of the record no appeal lay under rule 7, but said that in view of Chhajju's case it could not be contended that review had proceeded on this ground He held that the review was on the ground of discovery of new matter and that in this view the condition of rule 4 (2) (b) was not fulfilled as the subsequent overruling decision had been published before the trial and accordingly reversed the order for review Of other cases decided on the rule in Chhajju's case two deserve special notice Bindiaslami v Secretary of State (c) arose out of a motion by the Collector to hold an inquiry under s 19H of the Court Fees Act into the value of an estate The Government pleader applied for an adjournment to call his evidence but the Judge refused and gave judgment The Judge then granted a review as the Government pleader was under the impression that the case would not be taken up This was reversed in revision by Rankin J, as the case was not analogous to excusable failure to bring before the Court new and important matter or evidence and as there was an element of negligence in the case, for the Judge had not found that there was any justification for the Government pleader's erroneous impression The other case Mahadeo v Lakshmi Narayan (d) decides that since Chhajju's case a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed under O 9, r 8, has no remedy by way of review

Review granted on particular ground—Where a review is granted on a particular ground it is in the discretion of the Court to rehear the whole case or only the particular point on which the review has been granted (e)

Where an appeal dismissed summarily under O 41 r 11 is admitted on an application for review, the appeal is not restricted to the single ground which was made the basis of the application for review (f)

Where an appeal has been preferred before application for review—After an appeal has been preferred from a decree no application can be made for a review of that decree This clearly appears from cl (a) of sub r (1) An appeal is not the less preferred within the meaning of this rule though it may be dismissed summarily under O 41 r 11 Hence a party against whom a decree has been given is precluded after dismissal of his appeal under O 41 r 11 from applying for a review (k) If an appeal is dismissed for default and an application under O 41 s 19 has become time barred review is incompetent (l) But if the appeal is withdrawn it is as though no appeal had been preferred and hence it is open to the party to apply for a review (m) See notes to O 41 r 27 under the head Or for any other substantial cause

No review allowed on a question of fact after decision of second appeal—The High Court cannot in second appeal allow an application for a review of judgment on the ground of discovery of new evidence, after the appeal is disposed of by that Court The reason is that the High Court is bound in second appeal by the findings of fact of the lower appellate Court But if the application is made before the disposal of the appeal it may be a ground for allowing the appellant to withdraw the appeal to enable him to apply to the lower appellate Court for a review of its judgment on the ground of discovery of new evidence (r)

Application to set aside order made by another Judge—One Judge of a High Court cannot set aside an order made by another Judge of that Court even though the order be wrong The remedy lies in review on the grounds mentioned in this rule (s)

To whom application for review may be made—This is s 624 recast with proviso (c) to s 626 superadded to it. The alteration of language does not involve any alteration of law.

Rule 1 sub r (1) provides that the application for review of a decree or order should be made to the Court which passed the decree or order sought to be reviewed. Reading rule 1 with the present rule, we have the following result —

I Where a decree is passed by a High Court Judge, the application for review of the decree may be made to that Judge or his successor in office, whatever be the ground on which the review is sought

II (1) Where a decree is passed by a Judge other than a High Court Judge, the application for review of the decree may be made to the Judge who delivered the judgment or to his successor in office, provided the review is sought on the ground of—

- (b) some clerical or arithmetical mistake or error apparent on the face of the decree

(2) Where a decree is passed by a Judge other than a High Court Judge, and the review is sought, not upon the grounds mentioned above, but upon other grounds, the application shall be made to the very Judge who passed the decree; it cannot be made to his successor in office (v). Thus if a review is sought of a decree passed by a Judge other than a High Court Judge on the ground of a supposed error of judgment (u), or if a review is sought of an order made by such a Judge on the ground that the order was made in the absence of the applicant and without giving him notice of the hearing (x), the application for review shall be made only to the Judge who passed the decree or made the order. Such an application, however, may be disposed of by the successor of the Judge who passed the decree, provided that the Judge who passed the decree has ordered notice to issue under rule 4, sub rule (2), proviso (a). It is not necessary that the application should also be disposed of by the Judge who passed the decree (y).

Rule 5 provides for the hearing of applications for review

3. [S. 625.] The provisions as to the form of preferring appeals shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to applications for review.

This rule relates to form and does not enlarge the right. It does not make O 43, # 1 (t) applicable to a refusal to restore an application for review (2)

4. [S. 626.] (1) Where it appears to the Court that there is not sufficient ground for a review, it shall reject the application.

O. 47, r. 4. Provided that—

- (a) no such application shall be granted without previous notice to the opposite party, to enable him to appear and be heard in support of the decree or order, a review of which is applied for: and
- (b) no such application shall be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence which the applicant alleges was not within his knowledge, or could not be adduced by him when the decree or order was passed or made, without strict proof of such allegation.

Alterations in the rule—The words “and the Judge shall record with his order his reason for such opinion,” which occurred in the old section after the words ‘it shall grant the same’ in sub r (2), have been omitted. Those words were construed by the Privy Council as being no more than a direction to the Judge how to act when he had decided to grant the application (a)

“No such application shall be granted without previous notice to the opposite party.”—The expression “opposite party” means the party interested to support the order sought to be vacated or modified upon the application for review. When an appeal is summarily dismissed under O 41, r 11, the order of dismissal may be set aside on an ex parte application for review without notice to the respondent. The respondent in such a case cannot be said to be “the opposite party” within the meaning of cl (a) of this rule (b)

New matter or evidence.—The effect of this expression is the same as if the words were ‘new and important matter or evidence’ as in rule 1 above (c)

“Strict proof”—As to the meaning of the words “strict proof” in sub r (2) cl (b), see notes to r 7 below, “Sub rule (1), cl (b) application in contravention of provisions of rule (4)”

Form—As to form of notice required by sub r 2 (a) see App G, form No 14

Second application for review—See notes under the same head to r 7 below

Death of party pending review—The order granting a review only holds the judgment in suspense. The death of a party does not therefore cause the writ or appeal to abate (d)

Appeal—It is provided in general terms by O 43, r 1, cl (w), that an appeal lies from an order under this rule granting an application for review. Cl (w) however is to be read with and subject to rule 7 below (e). See notes to r. 7 under the head Appeal.”

Appeal—

(1) Order "rejecting" = application for review.—No appeal lies under the Code from an order rejecting an application for review. Nor does an appeal lie from such an order under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, for the said clause is controlled by the express provisions of this rule which says that such an order "shall not be appealable," and even if it is not so controlled, an order rejecting an application for review is not a "judgment" within the meaning of that clause (f). Nor is the order open to revision under s. 115 of the Code for even if it is wrong, it is no more than an erroneous exercise of discretion (g). But where there is no exercise of discretion at all, as where the Court rejects the application, not after considering whether there are sufficient grounds for a review [r. 4, sub r. 1], but on the erroneous view that it has no jurisdiction to entertain the application, the order is open to revision, for it is a case of failure to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Court by law (h).

(ii) Order granting application for review—An appeal lies from an order admitting an application for review, O 43, r 1 (w). It is clear, however, from sub r (1) that an appeal from such an order can lie only in the three cases mentioned therein, for otherwise the provisions of sub r. (1), so far as they relate to appeal, would be quite superfluous (i). The Bombay High Court in a recent case (1) have held that the right of appeal given by O 43, r 1 (w) is not restricted by this rule which is treated as having become superfluous since a right of appeal was expressly conferred by the present cl 15 of the Letters Patent (l) Thus if an appeal is preferred from an order admitting an application for review on the ground that the alleged "sufficient reason" for which the application was admitted did not constitute "sufficient reason" within the meaning of r 1 of this Order, the appeal should not be entertained (m) Nor is the order appealable solely on the ground that the application for review was time barred (n) There must be an error both as to limitation and in the application of the rule as to sufficient reason If the appeal is entertained, the order of the appellate Court may be set aside in revision under s 115 on the ground of "material irregularity" (o)

(iii) Second appeal from order passed in appeal under this rule—No second appeal lies from an order passed in appeal from an order granting an application for review. This is now sufficiently clear from the provisions of O. 43, r. 1, cl. (w), read with s. 104, sub s. (2). A applies for a review, and the application is granted. B appeals from the order granting the application. Whether the appellate Court confirms or sets aside the order of the lower Court, no second appeal lies to the High Court from the order of the appellate Court (p).

Sub-rule (1) (b): "In contravention of the provision of rule 4."—It is provided by r. 4 above that no application for review should be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter without strict proof of the allegation as to such discovery. The words strict proof mean proof according to the formalities of law. Where an order therefore is made granting a review on proof of discovery of new matter according to the formalities of law, no appeal lies from the order on the ground that the evidence adduced in proof of the allegation as to discovery of new matter was not sufficient to prove the allegation. The words strict proof do not refer to sufficiency of proof in securing the conviction of the judicial mind on the fact in dispute (q).

Grounds of objection in appeal—An order granting an application for review can only be objected to upon the three grounds specified in the rule and no other, whether the objection is taken by an appeal from the order (r) or in an appeal from the final decree passed in the suit (s).

Second application for review—Though no appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for review, it does not preclude a second application for review on grounds different from those taken in the first application (t).

Where application for review is time-barred—The period for an application for review of judgment by a Provincial Court of Small Causes is 15 days from the date of the decree, by the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction 20 days, and by other Courts 90 days [Limitation Act, 1908 arts. 161, 162, 173] and the applicant is entitled under s. 12 of the Limitation Act to deduct time spent in obtaining copy of the decree (u). But the Court may admit the application after the period of limitation, if the applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not making the application, within the prescribed period [Limitation Act 1908, s. 5]. Where a second application for review is made after the period of limitation, the mere fact that the second application was not made because the first was pending does not constitute sufficient cause for admitting the second (v). If an application for review is admitted after the period of

THE SECOND SCHEDULE.

ARBITRATION.

Arbitration in Suits.

1. [s. 506.] (1) Where in any suit all the parties interested agree that any matter in difference between them shall be referred to arbitration, they may, at any time before judgment is pronounced, apply to the Court for an order of reference

Parties to a suit may apply for order of reference

- (2) Every such application shall be in writing and shall state the matter sought to be referred

Alterations in the rule.—

- 1 The word interested in clause (1) has been added after the word parties
See notes below under the head All the parties interested must join in the application
- 2 The words in person or by their respective pleaders specially authorized in writing in this behalf which occurred in the old section after the word apply and before the words to the Court have been omitted

Scope of the Schedule.—The present Schedule deals with arbitration under three heads (a) —

I Where a suit has been instituted and all the parties interested agree to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in the suit. In that case all proceedings from first to last are under the supervision of the Court and they are governed by the provisions of paras 1 to 16 of this Schedule. The first step is to apply to the Court for an order of reference under para 1. If all the parties interested have joined in the application an order of reference will be made under para 3.

II Where parties wish to litigate and agree to refer their differences to arbitration and it is desired that the agreement of reference should have the sanction of the Court. In that case the parties to the agreement or any of them may apply to the Court under para 17 to have the agreement filed in Court and to make an order of reference thereon. If an order of reference is made all further proceedings will be under the supervision of the Court and they will be governed by the provisions of paras 3 to 16 so far as they are consistent with the agreement (para 19). See paras 17 to 19.

III Where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court and the assistance of the Court is only sought in order to give effect to the award. In that case any person interested in the award may apply to the Court under para 20 to have the award filed in Court. See paras 20-21.

Arbitration.

Sch. II,
para. 1.

All the parties interested must join in the application—In order to give jurisdiction to the Court to make an order of reference under this and para 3 it is necessary that all the parties interested must apply to the Court (b). If all the parties interested do not apply, and an order of reference is made, the order is illegal, and if an award is made on such reference, the award also is illegal (c). Thus where in a suit for partnership accounts brought by A against B and C, A and B alone applied to the Court to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration, and an order of reference was made, it was held, on an objection raised by B to the validity of the award, that C not having joined in the application, the order of reference as well as the award made in pursuance thereof were illegal (d). But when the part not referred can be separated from the part referred, para 12 (a) would apply. So in a suit where some of the defendants were adults and some were minors for whom no guardian ad litem was appointed, and the minors were not interested in the dispute of the plaintiffs with the adult defendants, it was held that the Court was not justified in refusing to file the award made on a reference by all parties, for the part which related to the minors and which was invalid could be separated from the other part. The proper procedure was to modify or correct the award under para 12 (a) of this Schedule (e).

The word "interested" is new. It has been added to give effect to a recent Allahabad decision (f). It refers to the succeeding words "any matter in difference between them". A party to a suit who is not interested in a matter in difference between the other parties to the suit need not join in an application under this paragraph for an order of reference. A sues B and C, praying as against B for a declaration of his title to certain property and as against C for possession of the property. A and B alone apply to the Court to refer to arbitration the question as to the ownership of the property. The Court has jurisdiction to make an order of reference, though C has not joined in the application, for the question of ownership is not in issue between A and C. But C not being a party to the reference, the award is not binding upon him, though it is binding as between A and B (g).

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that a defendant who does not put in an appearance and does not contest the suit is not a "party" within the meaning of this paragraph. The mere fact, therefore, that such a defendant has not joined in the application for an order of reference will not invalidate an award (h). On the other hand it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (i) and Madras (j), that the mere fact that the defendant has not put in an appearance and does not contest the suit is no ground for holding that he is not a party "interested" within the meaning of this paragraph. Also a party may be interested though no relief is claimed against him (k). A person, however, who is not a necessary party to a suit is not a party "interested" within the meaning of this para. (l). See O 1, § 10 (2).

Sch. II,
para. 1.

"Apply"—This section requires that all the parties interested should not only agree to a reference, but that they should all apply to the Court for an order of reference (m). Therefore, if one of the parties interested agrees to a reference, but he changes his mind subsequently and does not join in the application, the application for an order of reference should be refused (n).

Matter in difference—This must be a matter in difference in the suit itself (o). Where an award comprises matters which are not in dispute in the suit, and adjudicates upon the rights of a person who was not a party to the suit and who was interested in some of them, and the findings with reference to the matters in question in the suit could not be separated from those not so in question, the award is otherwise invalid within the meaning of para. 15 (1) (c), and it should be set aside under that para. so far as it deals with matters in difference in the suit (p).

Application shall be in writing—The provision requiring the application to be in writing is directory only, and not imperative, hence an award is not invalid merely because the application for the order of reference was not made in writing (q). In a recent case before the Judicial Committee where the agreement was in writing but it was not signed by one of the parties it was held that para. 1 of this Schedule did not require that the writing should of necessity be signed (r), and it has also been held that the record made by the Court of an oral application is sufficient (s). But where a parsadanishin lady was a party and the application was signed by her pleader who was not authorized by his vakalatnama to do so, the award was held to be invalid (t). For form of application for an order of reference, see the Appendix to this Schedule, form No. 1.

Before judgment—A suit may be referred to arbitration after a reference is made to the High Court (u).

"Court"—Section 107 of the Code provides that an appellate Court shall have the same powers as a Court of original jurisdiction. It follows therefore that an appellate Court can act under this paragraph and refer matters in dispute in the appeal to arbitration if all the parties interested agree to a reference (v). But a Court to which certain issues have been referred for trial under O. 41, r. 25, cannot act under this paragraph, as the duty of such Court is to try the issues as directed by the appellate Court and to return to the appellate Court its findings thereon together with the evidence (w). Similarly a Court dealing with petitions under the Provincial Insolvency Act 1907 has no power to refer the proceedings to arbitrators to decide whether the petitioner should or should not be declared an insolvent (x).

Revocation of arbitrator's authority—When a matter is referred to arbitration by an agreement between the parties without the intervention of a Court of Justice, the agreement to refer to arbitration cannot be revoked by any party without good cause and Arbitration.

Sch. II, paras. 1-3. a mere arbitrary revocation will not be permitted by the Court (y). Where a claimant did not proceed with the reference for a period of nine months without any just cause it was held that it amounted to a good cause sufficient to entitle the other party to revoke the submission (z). Similarly if the arbitrator is indebted to one of the parties at the time of the reference or becomes so indebted after the reference, and this fact is not disclosed to the other party, the non disclosure is a sufficient cause for revoking the submission upon discovery of the fact (a).

But when a matter is referred to arbitration by an order of the Court the Court alone can revoke the authority of the arbitrator and that too in the cases specified in paras 8 and 15. The Court has no power to revoke the authority of an arbitrator in any other case. Thus where after an order of reference was made under para 3, the defendant applied to the Court for an order to revoke the authority of the arbitrator and to appoint a new arbitrator in his place on the ground that he had come to know of certain facts which showed that the arbitrator was not worthy of the confidence reposed in him it was held that the Court had no power to make the order as the case did not come either under para 3 or 15. It was further held that the objection raised by the defendant could only be considered after the award was made and filed in Court and that too to the extent permitted by para 15 (b). Note the words 'or being otherwise invalid' in para 15, cl (c).

Where a party dies after application but before order of reference—The death of a party to an application made under this rule for a reference to arbitration before the order of reference is made does not operate as a revocation of the authority of the proposed arbitrator, therefore, if the right to sue survives, it is competent to the Court to make an order of reference after substitution of the representative of the deceased party (c). All that is necessary is substantial representation without strict adherence to the rules of the Civil Procedure Code as to legal representatives and guardians ad litem (d).

Withdrawing from suit pending arbitration—See notes to O 23 r 1, under the same head p 763 above.

Execution proceedings—This Schedule does not apply to execution proceedings and a reference to arbitration by an execution Court is without jurisdiction (e).

Form—For form or application for an order of reference see the Appendix to this Schedule form No 1.

shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award, and shall specify such time in the order. Sch. II, para. 3.

(2) Where a matter is referred to arbitration, the Court shall not, save in the manner and to the extent provided in this Schedule, deal with such matter in the same suit.

The word making has been substituted for the word "delivery." In fact the word delivery was construed as meaning "making." See notes below under the head "Making of award."

Fixing of time or the making of award.—The present paragraph provides that the Court shall fix a reasonable time for the making of the award and specify such time in the order of reference. Paragraph 8 enables the Court from time to time to enlarge the period for the making of the award. Paragraph 13 provides that an award made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court may be set aside by the Court. The provision contained in this paragraph requiring the Court to fix a reasonable time for the making of the award is not merely directory, but imperative. Hence this provision should be strictly followed. At the same time it has been held that if no time is fixed for delivery of the award in the order of reference, but the Court subsequently makes an order for enlarging the time (para. 8), and fixes in that order the time within which the award should be made, the omission to fix the time in the order of reference is not fatal to the award (f). Rankin J. has described the provision as to reasonable time as the main pillar of the scheme of the Schedule. By the reference the Court parts with control of the suit temporarily, for the time limit will bring the matter back to the Court and enable it to resume control and either to grant further time or to supersede the arbitration under para. 8. If the Court fixes no time limit, it surrenders control and jurisdiction is involved because such an order professes to abrogate jurisdiction. Accordingly a reference which gave the arbitrators leave to extend for such further time as they may allow themselves was held to be invalid and the arbitration was superseded (g). See para. 15 (1) (c) and notes thereto.

Making of award.—An award is said to be made when it is completed and signed by the arbitrators. Hence it is sufficient if the award is made—that is, completed and signed by the arbitrators—within the period limited under this paragraph; it is not necessary to the making of the award that it should actually reach the hands of the Court within such period. The validity of the award depends upon the making of it within the period allowed, and it is immaterial on what date it is actually delivered to the Court. Thus where the time fixed by the Court for the delivery of an award in a suit pending before it was 16th April 1900 and the award was completed and signed on the 16th April but did not reach the hands of the Court until the 17th of April it was held that the award was within time (h).

Clause (2).—Where a matter is referred to arbitration the Court should not deal with it in the same suit except in the manner provided in this Schedule. Hence the Court has no power to grant permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, for there is no paragraph in this Schedule corresponding

Sch. II, paras. 3, 4 to O 24 = 1 (i) Nor can the Court revoke the authority of the arbitrator and appoint a new arbitrator except in the cases specified in paragraph 5 (j) Nor is it open to the Court to hear the suit on the merits, unless the arbitration has been superseded under para 5 8 or 15 (l) Similarly the Court has no power to confirm an order passed by the arbitrators making payments of their fees a condition precedent to the hearing of the reference there being no paragraph in this Schedule empowering the Court to make an order in that behalf (f) On the same principle where an award is once set aside on the ground, e.g. that one of the parties to the reference had died before the termination of the arbitration proceedings, the Court has no power to send back the case to the arbitrators for decision (i)

Form—For form of order of reference see form No 2 to the Appendix to this Schedule

Where reference is to two or more arbitrators to provide for a difference of opinion

- (b) by declaring that, if the majority of the arbitrators agree, the decision of the majority shall prevail, or
- (c) by empowering the arbitrators to appoint an umpire, or

(2) Where an umpire is appointed, the Court shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of his award in case he is required to act

Decision of majority—Where the order of reference did not provide that the decision of the majority of arbitrators should prevail and two of the five arbitrators refused to act it was held that an award by the remaining three who constituted the majority was not valid (a)

Empowering arbitrators to appoint an umpire—The arbitrators have no power to appoint an umpire unless they are authorized in that behalf (c)

Power of Court to appoint arbitrator in certain cases

- (a) where the parties cannot agree within a reasonable time with respect to the appointment of an arbitrator, or the person appointed refuses to accept the office of arbitrator, or
- (b) where an arbitrator or umpire—
 - (i) dies, or
 - (ii) refuses or neglects to act or becomes incapable of acting, or
 - (iii) leaves British India in circumstances showing that he will probably not return at an early date, or
- (c) where the arbitrators are empowered by the order of reference to appoint an umpire and fail to do so, any party may serve the other party or the arbitrators, as the case may be, with a written notice to appoint an arbitrator or umpire.

(2) If, within seven clear days after such notice has been served or such further time as the Court may in each case allow, no arbitrator or no umpire is appointed, as the case may be, the Court may, on application by the party who gave the notice, and after giving the other party an opportunity of being heard appoint an arbitrator or umpire or make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit

Notice to appoint arbitrator—Where an order of reference is made on the joint application of A and B and the arbitrator refuses to act and A serves B with notice to appoint a new arbitrator the appointment of the new arbitrator must be made both by A and B and not by B alone (7)

Duty of Court under this paragraph—In the event of the happening of any of the events mentioned in this paragraph the Court must adopt one of the two courses pointed out in the paragraph namely appoint a new arbitrator or make an order superseding the arbitration. Thus where one of three arbitrators refused to act and the Court neither appointed a new arbitrator nor made an order superseding the arbitration, it was held that the award made by the other two was invalid (s)

Appointment of new arbitrator or umpire—Under the Code of 1882 the Court had no power, on the happening of either of the events referred to in cl (a) of this paragraph, to appoint a new arbitrator without the consent of all the parties to the reference, the reason being that the corresponding Section 507 of that Code contained the words 'and [if] the parties desire that the nomination shall be made by the Court' (t) But the said words have been omitted in cl. (a), and the Court has power under this paragraph to appoint a new arbitrator without the consent of all the parties even in the cases mentioned in cl (a) In cases covered by cl (b) it is open to the Court to appoint only one new arbitrator in place of several old arbitrators (u) But the Court has no power to appoint an arbitrator or umpire under sub para (2) unless notice is given as required by sub para (1) and the party served with the notice has been given an opportunity of being heard (v)

The power of the Court to appoint a new arbitrator or umpire may be limited by agreement. A and B submitted to arbitration on the terms that the umpire should be selected from seven persons named. The umpire first selected refused to act, and the Court appointed a new umpire who was not one of the seven persons named. It was held that the umpire not being one of the seven named in the agreement, the award of the umpire was invalid (w)

An irregularity of procedure in the appointment of a new arbitrator is cured by consent of parties. So when one of three arbitrators refused to act and the two remaining arbitrators co-opted a third and the parties consented, the award was held to be valid (x).

Where arbitrator refuses to act.—If an arbitrator refuses to act, the Court cannot compel him to act. Thus where an arbitrator refused to act, and the Court instead of accepting his refusal, directed him to proceed and make an award, it was held that the award was invalid. The finality of an award is based entirely upon the principle that the arbitrators are judges chosen by the parties themselves, and that such judges are willing to settle the disputes between them (y). But an arbitrator has full power to retract his resignation before it is accepted. The mere circumstance of an arbitrator having first tendered and then withdrawn his resignation does not divest him of the character of arbitrator (z). When arbitrators refuse to act and the Court proceeds to try the suit an order superseding arbitration may be implied (a)

Order superseding arbitration.—When once a matter is referred to arbitration by an order of the Court, the Court has no power to hear the suit on the merits unless the arbitration has been superseded by an order under this paragraph (b) or under paragraph 8 or 15

6. [S. 512.] Every arbitrator or umpire appointed under Sch. II, paragraph 4 or paragraph 5 shall have the like powers as if his name had been inserted in the order of reference. paras. 6-8.

Powers of arbitrator or umpire appointed under paragraph 4 or 5

Summoning witnesses and default

7. [S. 513.] (1) The Court shall issue the same processes to the parties and witness whom the arbitrator or umpire desires to examine, as the Court may issue in suits tried before it

(2) Persons not attending in accordance with such process, or making any other default, or refusing to give their evidence, or guilty of any contempt to the arbitrator or umpire during the investigation of the matters referred, shall be subject to the like disadvantages, penalties and punishments, by order of the Court on the representation of the arbitrator or umpire, as they would incur for the like offences in suits tried before the Court

8 [S. 514.] Where the arbitrators or the umpire cannot complete the award within the period specified in the order, the Court may, if it thinks fit, either allow further time, and from time to time, either before or after the expiration of the period fixed for the making of the award, enlarge such period, or may make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit

Alteration in the rule.—The words either before or after expiration of the period fixed for the making of the award are new. They give effect to decision under the old section (c). But they do not abrogate the ruling of the Privy Council in Raja Har Narain v. Claudrain (d) that it is not merely directory but is mandatory (e).

Extension of time for making award.—If the time originally fixed for making an award has expired and no award is made the Court may extend the time for making the award. It is not necessary that the application to extend the time should be made before the expiry of the period originally fixed for making the award. The application may be made even after the expiry of the time originally fixed (f). But it must be made before the award is made. The Court has no power to enlarge the time for the making of an award after the time for making it has expired and after the award has been made (g). respect (A) An award made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court may be set aside under paragraph 13 (1) (c) The application for extension of time need not necessarily be in writing (i)

Where by an order of reference power is given to the arbitrator to extend the time for making the award, he can only extend the time before the time originally fixed for making the award has expired (j)

Estoppel—The parties to a reference, may be estopped by their conduct from impeaching the validity of an award on the ground that it was made after time (k)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order superseding an arbitration where the award has not been completed within the period allowed by the Court (s 104, sub [s (1), cl (a)]

Where umpire may arbitrate in lieu of arbitrators

9. [S. 515.] Where an umpire has been appointed, he may enter on the reference in the place of the arbitrators,—

(a) if they have allowed the appointed time to expire without making an award, or

(b) if they have delivered to the Court or to the umpire a notice in writing stating that they cannot agree.

10. [S. 516.] Where an award in a suit has been made, the persons who made it shall sign it and cause it to be filed in Court, together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved before them; and notice of the filing shall be given to the parties.

Award to be signed and filed

Award need not be signed by arbitrators in each other's presence—It is quite enough if all the arbitrators agree to the terms of the award and sign it There is no provision of law requiring them to sign in the presence of each other (l) But the award must be signed by all the arbitrators before it is filed (m), but not necessarily at the same time and place (n) An award signed by one of the arbitrators while it is on the file of the Court is invalid (o)

Necessity of arbitrator's presence at meetings.—When a case has been referred to arbitration, the presence of all the arbitrators at all meetings, and, above all, at the last meeting when the final act of arbitration is done, is essential to the validity of the award (p)

"Together with any depositions and documents"—The Court has jurisdiction to compel arbitrators to give up documents that may have been filed before them as exhibits during the course of the arbitration. Also if the original records of the suit are handed to the arbitrators to enable them to proceed with the arbitration and they fail to return them, the Court can compel them to return the records (g)

Notice of the filing shall be given—It is a material irregularity within the meaning of s 115, if the Court gives judgment without issuing notice, and the judgment will be set aside in revision (r)

Delivery of award—The act of an arbitrator in delivering an award to the proper officer of the Court for the purpose of being filed in Court is not an 'application' within the meaning of the Limitation Act. Hence there is no period of limitation within which an award should be delivered by an arbitrator to the Court (s)

Form—For form of award see the Appendix to this Schedule, form no. 5

11. [S. 517.] Upon any reference by an order of the Court, the arbitrator or umpire may, with the leave of the Court, state the award as to the whole or any part thereof in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court, and the Court shall deliver its opinion thereon, and shall order such opinion to be added to and to form part of the award.

Statement of special case
by arbitrators or umpire

Special case—The special case must be on a point of law only (t)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order on an award stated in the form of a special case [s 104 sub s (1), cl (b)]. Where the arbitrators differ on certain matters referred to them, but instead of referring their differences to an umpire as provided by the order of reference, they submit their own opinions in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court, such submission is not an award stated in the form of a special case and no appeal therefore lies from any order made upon such submission (u)

Form—For form of special case see the Appendix to this Schedule, Form No. 4

Power to modify or correct award

12 [S. 518.] The Court may, by order, modify or correct an award, —

- (a) where it appears that a part of the award is upon a matter not referred to arbitration and such part can be separated from the other part and does not affect the decision on the matter referred, or
- (b) where the award is imperfect in form, or contains any obvious error which can be amended without affecting such decision; or

- (c) where the award contains a clerical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission.

Power to modify or correct—The Court has no power to modify or correct an award except in the three cases mentioned in this paragraph. A Court acts without jurisdiction if it modifies an award because it takes a view different from that held by the arbitrator (v)

Where a part of the award is upon a matter not referred to arbitration—Where the matters in dispute in a suit are referred to arbitration, but the question of costs is not referred, and the arbitrators make an award containing a direction that the defendant should pay the plaintiff a costs, the Court has power under this paragraph to modify the award by striking out the direction for the payment of costs the case being one in which the part of the award upon the matter not referred could be separated from the other part (v). An award that goes beyond the terms of the reference is to that extent ultra vires (x). But where no such separation is possible, the Court should remit the award to the reconsideration of the same arbitrator under paragraph 14, cl (a)

Clause (c)—This clause is new. An arithmetical error is no ground for setting aside an award (y)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order modifying or correcting an award, see sec 104, sub sec (1), cl (c)

13. [S. 519.] The Court may also make such order as it thinks fit respecting the costs of the arbitration where any question arises respecting such costs and the award contains no sufficient provision concerning them.

Order as to costs of arbitration

14 [S. 520.] The Court may remit the award or any matter referred to arbitration to the reconsideration of the same arbitrator or umpire, upon such terms as it thinks fit,—

Where an award or matter referred to arbitration may be remitted

- (a) Where the award has left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration, or where it determines any matter not referred to arbitration, unless such matter can be separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred,

- (b) where the award is so indefinite as to be incapable of execution;

(c) where an objection to the legality of the award is apparent upon the face of it

Sch. II,
para. 14.

Remission of award when the award has left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration—The ground for holding an award to be invalid on account of its not disposing of all the matters referred appears to be that there is an implied condition in the submission of the parties to the arbitration that the award shall dispose of all. Hence this condition may be waived by the consent of all the parties before the arbitrators ()

Where the issues in a suit were referred to arbitration and there was no distinct and separate finding by the arbitrators on each of the issues but there was a decision on the whole matter in controversy between the parties it was held that the award could not be said to have left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration and it should not therefore be remitted to the reconsideration of the arbitrator (a). A separate finding on each issue is not necessary when the whole matter in issue between the parties is decided by the arbitrators (b). But where several issues in a suit are referred to arbitration and the arbitrator decides by the award only one issue the award must be remitted to his reconsideration (c). If the arbitrator fails to reconsider the award the award becomes void see paragraph 1. Even if parties come to an agreement as regards some of the matters referred to arbitration the award shall contain a determination of the matters though it be in terms of the agreement otherwise the award would be open to the objection that it has left the matters undetermined (d).

Award patently illegal—This is the rule in Holgh & v Fernie (e) which limits the right of interference by the court to the case where a question of law necessarily arises in the face of the award upon matters of interpretation and forming part of the award. This rule was extended in Saif Ali & Sons v. Awer (f) to a case where an award referred to a contract as the subject-matter. The Court of Appeal held that they were entitled to look at the contract and meet the claimants that it was wrongly construed. Saif Ali & Sons has been labelled a landmark case by Bharid Co v. Jurey Balloo (g) the Privy Council. Another law in the face of the award means in their Lordships' view that it can be found in the award and document actually incorporated thereto and in fact a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment as to the legal proposition which is the law of the award and which you can say is erroneous. In this case it has been rejected by a buyer as a final award that it was of inferior quality unless the rule of the Rules of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association. This rule provides that a buyer the right of buying may take it back at the market rate—an option which would of course only exercise if the market rate had risen. But here the market rate was below the contract rate and the defendant seller claimed to recover the difference. The award allowed the claim and in the preamble of the award narrated the events which led up to the dispute and the reference to arbitration. It was made of the contract and the letter for rejection and return. The Bombay High Court set aside upon this refusal and said that as the contract referred to the Rules and as the rejection was under the contract that the arbitrator had wrongly construed the provisions.

the rule as an obligation, and that this was an error patent on the face of the award. The Privy Council however said that the rule in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (92) does not mean that if in the narrative a reference is made to the contention of one party, that opens the door to seeing first what that contention is, and then going to the contract on which the parties depend to see if that contention is sound. They also observed that the arbitrators were entitled to put their own construction on Rule 52. Where the only question in a suit was whether a Hindu was born blind and therefore not entitled to inherit, and the suit was referred to arbitration, and the arbitrator made an award whereby the blind man was declared to be entitled to a life interest in a certain portion of the property, it was held on an objection to the award under cl (c) of this paragraph that the award was not so patently illegal that it could be remitted to the reconsideration of the arbitrator (h).

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order under this paragraph remitting an award to the reconsideration of arbitrators. Where an award is remitted to the reconsideration of the arbitrator, and the arbitrator submits a fresh award and a decree is passed in accordance with the revised award, no appeal lies from the decree on the ground that the order of remittal was wrong (r. 16) and that the original award ought to have been accepted and acted upon (i). But where an award is remitted to the reconsideration of the arbitrator, and the arbitrator refuses to reconsider the award (which consequently becomes void under paragraph 15), and the Court proceeds to try the case and passes a decree in the ordinary way [para 15, sub para (2)], the legality of the order remitting the award may be challenged on appeal from such decree (j), see sec. 103.

15. [S. 521.] (1) An award remitted under paragraph 14 becomes void on failure of the arbitrator or umpire to reconsider it. But no award shall be set aside except on one of the following grounds, namely:—

- (a) corruption or misconduct of the arbitrator or umpire;
- (b) either party having been guilty of fraudulent concealment of any matter which he ought to have disclosed, or of wilfully misleading or deceiving the arbitrator or umpire;
- (c) the award having been made after the issue of an order by the Court superseding the arbitration and proceeding with the suit or after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court, or being otherwise invalid.

(2) Where an award becomes void or is set aside under clause (1), the Court shall make an order superseding the arbitration and in such case shall proceed with the suit.

3 Clause (2) is new

Misconduct—The term "misconduct" does not necessarily imply moral turpitude, it includes neglect of the duties and responsibilities of the arbitrators, and what Courts of Justice expect from them before allowing finality to their awards (1). Nor does it necessarily imply corruption (2).

Acts amounting to misconduct—The following acts have been held to amount to "misconduct" on the part of an arbitrator affording a ground for setting aside an award —

- 1 Irregularities in procedure which amount to no proper hearing of the matters in dispute (m), e.g., hearing and receiving evidence from one side in the absence of the other side without giving the other side affected by such evidence the opportunity of meeting and answering it (n)
- 2 Proceeding with arbitration in the absence of one of the arbitrators (o).
- 3 Refusing to hear witnesses produced by the parties (p)
- 4 Arbitrators improperly adding another to their number (q)
- 5 Where three out of five arbitrators were not present at the time the award was made and did not sign the award, although it purported to be signed by all of them, it was held that it amounted to misconduct, and the award was set aside (r)

Acquiescence in acts amounting to misconduct—It is misconduct if some of the arbitrators are not present at some of the meetings. But if this procedure is adopted with the concurrence of all the parties or if it is acquiesced in by them, it is not open to any of the parties to impeach the award on that ground (1)

Acts not amounting to misconduct — An arbitrator is not bound by technical rules of procedure. Hence it is not a valid objection to an award that the arbitrator did not act in strict conformity with the rules of evidence (f). But he should not make private inquiries behind the backs of the parties (u) unless authorized by the wide terms of the reference (z). Again the rule of evidence which declares that letters written without prejudice should not be admitted in evidence being a rule founded upon natural justice, is as binding upon arbitrators as upon Courts of Justice, and an arbitrator is wrong in receiving and acting upon such a letter. But if no objection is taken by the other side to the admissibility of such letter, and an award is made, the award will not be set aside on the ground of misconduct (w) Where it is provided in an agreement for reference that an adjustment relied upon by the plaintiff should not be taken into consideration by the arbitrator, a bona fide mistake on the part of the arbitrator in admitting the adjustment in evidence does not amount to misconduct. Such a stipulation is nothing but a rule of evidence introduced pro hac vice (x)

It is not misconduct on the part of the arbitrator to delegate to a third party the performance of acts of a ministerial character, so long as he exercises his own judgment on the matters referred (y) "Misconduct" cannot be presumed from the mere fact that the arbitrator is the relative of one of the parties (z) The mere fact that the arbitrator has failed to account for the delay in making the award is no ground for presuming fraud (a)

In Buta v Municipal Committee of Lahore (b) certain matters in dispute between A and B were referred to arbitration. The agreement of reference was drawn up by A's counsel. The arbitrator, feeling doubtful as to the meaning of a certain clause in the agreement, wrote to A to obtain his counsel's opinion on the meaning of that clause. A obtained the opinion and sent it on to the arbitrator. B was not informed of this until after the award was made. It was held that though it would have been prudent and discreet for the arbitrator to have written to A with B's knowledge and informed B of the opinion, the omission to do this did not amount to misconduct, as there was no ground for impeaching the good faith of any of the parties concerned.

Evidence of arbitrator—Where a charge of dishonesty or partiality is made against an arbitrator, any relevant evidence he can give is properly admissible. It is, however, necessary to take care that evidence admitted as relevant on such charges is not used for a different purpose, namely, to scrutinize the decision of the arbitrator on matters within his jurisdiction and in which his decision is final (c)

Appeal from decree based on an award on ground of misconduct—No appeal lies from a decree passed in accordance with an award on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrator (d) The only remedy available to the party aggrieved by the award is to apply to have it set aside under this paragraph. See notes to paragraph 16, under the head "Invalid award" p 1092 below.

Fraudulent concealment of any matter which ought to have been disclosed—Where the arbitrator was the retained pleader of the plaintiff and this fact was not disclosed by the plaintiff to the defendant before the arbitrator was appointed the award was set aside on the ground that that fact was one which ought to have been disclosed. Every disclosure which might in the least affect the minds of those who are proposing to submit their dispute to the arbitration (if any particular individual as regards his selection and fitness for the post, ought to be made so that each party may have every opportunity of considering whether the reference to arbitration to that particular individual should or should not be made (e)

have no longer seisin of the reference, and they are functi officio, and cease to have any more power to make an award than the man in the street (f) Similarly an arbitrator is functus officio after the award is made, and he cannot thereafter add to or alter the award (g)

Award made after expiration of period allowed by Court—Clause (c) of s 521 stopped at the words "the suit" which occur in cl (1), sub cl (c), of this para. It was followed by another clause which ran thus: "And no award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by the Court" The latter clause has now been omitted, and instead thereof we have the words "or, after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court" added into sub cl (c) The effect of this alteration is that the only remedy now open to the party impeaching an award on the ground that it was made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court is to apply under this paragraph to set aside the award If no application is made to set aside the award under this paragraph, or if the application is made but refused, the award becomes final, and no appeal will lie from a decree based upon the award (h) [Under the Code of 1892 it was held that an appeal lay from a decree based upon such an award (i)] If the application to set aside the award is granted, and an order is made under sub para (2) superseding the arbitration, the order is appealable under s 104, sub s (1), cl (a) See notes to r 16 below, "No appeal lies from a decree based on an award, etc," p 1091, and notes to paragraph 3, "Making of award," p 1077 above

Another consequence of the alteration is that whereas under s 521 of the old Code an award out of time was a nullity (j), it is not so under the present rule Under the present rule, it is merely voidable and if not sought to be set aside within the period of limitation [Limitation Act, 1908, art 158], it is binding upon the parties

When the award is otherwise invalid—The words "or being otherwise invalid" at the end of sub cl (c) are new Under the Code of 1892 it was held that when an award was not a valid and legal award, an appeal would lie from the decree based upon such award even though the decree might be in accordance with the award The leading case on the subject was Kali Pranno Ghae v Rajani Kant (k) decided by the High Court of Calcutta in the year 1898 The object of adding the words "or being otherwise invalid" into sub cl (c) is to supersede the Calcutta and other decisions which allowed an appeal from a decree based upon an invalid award, and to give effect to the principle of finality in cases of arbitration enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ghulam Khan v Muhammad Hasan (l) and followed in recent cases (m) The result is that the only remedy now open to a party seeking to impeach an award as being invalid is to apply under this paragraph to have it set aside If he fails to do so, or if an application is made but refused the award becomes final, and no appeal will lie from a decree based upon the award See notes to paragraph 16 under the head "Invalid award," p 1092 It is worth while noting that the Special Committee which introduced these alterations intended to allow an appeal from an order under this paragraph setting aside or refusing to set aside an award (n), but no such provision is to be found in s 104

15, 16.

An award is not illegal merely because it is based on evidence given by one of the parties on a special oath administered under the Indian Oaths Act with the consent of the other party (o)

An award is invalid if the arbitrators go beyond the scope of the suit and decide matters which are not in suit and which concern persons who are not parties to the suit Rankin J. said such an award cannot be treated partly as an award on a reference by the Court and partly as an award by private agreement, for there is no provision for such simultaneous arbitration and the jurisdiction for the different types of arbitration must not be confused (p) The Privy Council reserved their opinion as to whether there may not be an exception to this comprehensive statement as to simultaneous arbitration but held that such an award was not in accordance with the order of reference and therefore "otherwise invalid" under para 15 (q)

Appeal from order under this paragraph—Except in the case provided by s 104, cl (a), no appeal lies from an order under this paragraph setting aside or refusing to set aside an award (r) If the objecting party does not appear in support of his objection, the Court has no option but to pronounce judgment in accordance with the award (s), and the decree made thereon cannot be set aside under O 9 s 13 because it is not an ex parte decree (s2). But if the order under this paragraph is made by a Charter of High Court, it amounts to a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent, and is appealable under that clause See notes to s 104 under the head "Letters Patent appeal," p 282 See also notes to paragraph 21 below under the head "Appeal," p 1105

It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay and by the Chief Court of the Punjab that though no appeal lies from an order setting aside an award, the legality of the order may be challenged on appeal from the decree that may be ultimately passed in the suit (t) [see s 105] A different view has been taken by the High Court of Allahabad (u)

Revision—In order under this paragraph setting aside or refusing to set aside an award is not subject to revision (v) But an order superseding arbitration may be attacked under s 105 in appeal from the decree in the suit (u)

16. [S. 522.] (1) Where the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for re-consideration in manner aforesaid, and no application has been made to set aside the award, or the Court has refused such application, the Court shall, after the time for making such application has expired, proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award.

(2) Upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, and no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award. Sch. II para. 16.

"After the time for making such application has expired"—That is, after 10 days from the date on which the award is submitted to the Court see Limitation Act, 1908, sch 1, art 158. The date of submission of the award to the Court has been held to mean the date on which the award is received by the Registrar of the Court (x), but in a later case it was suggested that it means the date of filing the award (y). No form is prescribed for an application to set aside an award and it is sufficient if some notice is given to the proper officer of the Court (*).

No appeal lies from a decree based on an award except in so far as such decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award.—In references to arbitration the general rule is that, as the parties choose their own arbitrator to be the judge in the dispute between them they cannot object to his decision either upon the law or upon the facts. It is now well established that where a matter is referred to an arbitrator, he is the sole and final judge of all questions not only of fact but of law (a). Thus where an award was impeached on the ground that it was against law, their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "They [arbitrators] may have erred in law, but arbitrators may be judges of law as well as judges of fact, and an error in law certainly does not vitiate an award (b). And this principle has been carried so far that if parties submit to an arbitrator the decision of a bare point of law, and he gives an erroneous decision, his award is binding notwithstanding (c). In all these cases the Court would say to the party seeking to set aside the award: 'You have constituted your own tribunal, you are bound by its decision (d). The present paragraph gives effect to the principle of finality' of awards, by declaring that no appeal shall lie from a decree based on an award, except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with, the award (e). The only cases in which the Code allows an appeal from a decree based on an award are—

- (1) where the decree is in excess of the award, as where the decree gives interest which the arbitrators have not awarded (f), or
- (2) where the decree is not in accordance with the award.

In this respect there is no difference between a decree based upon a private award (para. 21) and a decree based upon an award made through the intervention of the Court (g).

Is a decree based on an award which has been modified by the Court under paragraph 12 a decree in accordance with the award? It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that it is not and hence an appeal lies from the decree. Thus where an award directed the defendant to make certain payments to the plaintiff by instalments, and the award was modified by the Court under paragraph 12 by omitting the direction as to payment by instalments, and a decree was passed on the award as so modified, it was held that an appeal would lie from the decree (k). The soundness of this decision is open to question. It is submitted that a decree is in accordance with an award within the meaning of this paragraph, if it is in accordance with the award as modified under paragraph 12, though it may not be in accordance with the original award. Paragraph 16 says "The Court shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award." It is clear that when an award is modified under paragraph 12, the only award according to which judgment could be pronounced is the modified award. Moreover, the decision runs counter to "the principle of finality" which finds expression in the Code.

Where an application made under para 15, cl. (c), to set aside an award on the ground that it was made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court has been refused, and a decree is subsequently passed in accordance with the award, no appeal lies from the decree, the decree being in accordance with the award. Nor does any appeal lie from the decree under the Letters Patent (l). See notes to paragraph 15,

'Award made after expiration of period allowed by Court,' p 1089 above, and notes, 'Appeal from order under this paragraph,' p 1090 above. See also notes to a 104, 'Letters patent appeal,' p 282 above.

Invalid award—Under the old section it was held by the Courts in India, that though a decree might be in perfect accordance with an award, an appeal would lie from the decree, if the award upon which the decree was based was invalid. The reason given was that that section presupposed a valid and legal award, and not an award upon which no decree could be passed (j). A different view, however, was taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Glulam Khan v Muhammad Hussain (k) decided in the year 1902. After that expression of opinion two of our High Courts held that no appeal lay under s 522 from a decree passed on an award on the ground that the award was invalid (l). Under the present Code it is quite clear that no appeal lies from a decree, where such decree is passed in accordance with the award though the award may be invalid. But the party aggrieved by the award may apply under para 15, cl. (1) sub cl. (c), to have the award set aside. If he does not avail himself of that remedy, the award becomes final, and no appeal lies from the decree based upon the award (m). This change has been introduced by the insertion of the words "or the award being otherwise invalid" in para 15, cl. (1), sub c. — as stated in the notes to paragraph 15 unc invalid. The effect of this alteration is that a decree has been passed under the present paragraph upon an award, except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award (n). The result is that all those cases, in which it was held under the Code of 1832, that a decree though it be in accordance with the award may be challenged by way of appeal on the ground that there was no valid and legal award, are no longer law.

(a) An order of reference made on the application of some only of the parties interested is illegal [see paragraph 1]. Therefore an award made in pursuance of such order is also illegal. According to the old section an appeal would lie from a decree upon such an award (o). But no appeal lies under this paragraph, and the only remedy open to the party aggrieved by the award is to apply to the Court under paragraph 15, cl. (1), sub cl. (c), to set aside the award. Such an application should be made within 10 days from the date on which the award is submitted to the Court. See paragraph 1.

(b) An award made after the expiration of the period fixed by the Court under paragraph 3 or enlarged by the Court under paragraph 8, is invalid. According to the old section an appeal would lie from a decree based on such award (p). No appeal lies under the present paragraph, but the party aggrieved by the award may apply to have it set aside under paragraph 15. See notes to para. 15, "Award made after expiration of period allowed by Court."

(c) An award must be signed before it is filed and it must be signed by all the arbitrators. An award signed by some only of the arbitrators is illegal. Similarly an award signed by an arbitrator after the same has been filed in Court is illegal. According to the old section an appeal would lie from a decree based on such award (q). No appeal lies under this paragraph, but the party aggrieved by the award may apply under paragraph 15 to have it set aside (r).

(d) The matters in difference in a suit between A and B are referred to the arbitration of C. C is the retained pleader of A but this fact is not disclosed to B [see para. 10]. C makes an award. The award is illegal. According to the old section an appeal would lie from the decree (s). No appeal lies under the present paragraph, but B could apply to have the award set aside under paragraph 15.

An appeal lies from a decree based upon a judgment pronounced in contravention of the provisions of this paragraph, though the decree may be in accordance with the award.—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that if a decree is passed on an award before the time for making the application to set aside the award has expired, an appeal will lie from the decree, though the decree may be in accordance with the award (t). But in such cases the Bombay and Lahore High Courts interfere by way of revision (u). The Allahabad High Court has held that where an application to set aside an award has been refused by the Court without considering it, and a decree is passed on the award, an appeal will lie from the decree, though the decree may be in accordance with the award. The reason given is that the word "refused" in this paragraph means refused after judicial consideration (r).

Second appeal.—A second appeal will lie to the High Court where the decree of the Court of first instance is in accordance with the award, and such decree is set aside by the first appellate Court. The reason is that no appeal lies from a decree passed Distinction between valuer and arbitrator.—A sues B for a declaration that he is entitled to one half share of certain property. An order is made by consent that A should pay B a quarter of the value of the property to be settled by a certain referee nominated by the parties. The order is not one passed under paras 2 and 3, and the decision of the referee is not an award on which a judgment could be pronounced under the present paragraph (k). But the terms of the agreement between the parties may be such that the valuer may be invested with the power of an arbitrator in which case the valuation made by him may operate as an award. In Jackson v Barry Railway Co (1), the building contract contained the following clause "In the event of any question or dispute arising between the company and the contractor as to [then followed the enumeration of several questions], such questions or disputes shall be referred to the engineer whose decision shall be conclusive and binding on both parties." It was assumed that the above clause was an agreement to refer to arbitration, and the only question argued was whether in view of a letter written by the engineer to the contractor after intimation to the parties to proceed with the arbitration the engineer had rendered himself incapable of acting as an arbitrator. It was contended on behalf of the contractor that the true inference from the letter was that the engineer had so completely made up his mind against him that he would not be patiently listened to and receive an honest decision, but this contention was overruled.

Order of reference on agreements to refer.

17. [S. 523.] (1) Where any persons agree in writing that any difference between them shall be referred to arbitration, the parties to the agreement, or any of them, may apply to any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates, that the agreement be filed in Court.

Application to file in Court agreement to refer to arbitration

(2) The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties interested or claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs, and the others or other of them as defendants or defendant, if the application has been presented by all the parties, or, if otherwise, between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

(3) On such application being made, the Court shall direct notice thereof to be given to all the parties to the agreement, other than the applicants, requiring such parties to show cause, within the time specified in the notice, why the agreement should not be filed.

Sch. II,
para 17.

(4) Where no sufficient cause is shown, the Court shall order the agreement to be filed, and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement or, if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree, the Court may appoint an arbitrator.

Alteration in the paragraph—In cl 4 the words “and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement, or, if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree, the Court may appoint an arbitrator” are substituted for the words “and shall make an order of reference thereon, and may also nominate the arbitrator when he is not named therein and the parties cannot agree as to the nomination”

Does not apply—The procedure prescribed by this paragraph does not apply to cases to which the Arbitration Act applies. See notes to s 89 p 234 above

Scope of the paragraph—Paras 1 to 16 deal with cases in which the parties to a suit agree to refer the matters in difference between them in the suit to arbitration and apply to the Court for an order of reference. The application in such a case must be made by all the parties to the suit interested in the matters in difference proposed to be referred to arbitration. This and the subsequent paragraph refer to cases in which persons themselves agree, independently of the Court, to refer the matters in difference between them to arbitration (j). In such a case any party to the agreement may apply to the Court to have the agreement filed and to have an order of reference made thereon. Where such an order is made, the provisions of paras 2 to 16 apply to the proceedings in so far as they are consistent with the agreement so filed (k) [para 19]. When a submission is filed in Court under this paragraph, the submission is said to be made a rule of the Court.

Agreement to refer to arbitration matters in difference in a pending suit—A brings a suit against B. While the suit is pending, the parties agree to refer the matters in dispute in the suit to arbitration without the intervention of the Court that is, without obtaining an order under para 1. Can the award made on such a reference be filed under this schedule? Can it be recorded as an adjustment under O 23 r 3? We have already dealt with these questions in the notes to O 23 r 3 under the heading “Submission and award, on p 768 above. We have there expressed our opinion that an agreement to refer matters in difference in a pending suit to arbitration without leave of the Court under paras 1 to 3 is illegal as an invasion of the jurisdiction of the Court and that an award made on such an agreement is a nullity and cannot be treated as an adjustment because O 23 r 3 is subject to section 20. This is the opinion of the Calcutta High Court (l). There is nothing, however, to prevent parties compromising their suit on the terms of an invalid award. In a Patna case (m) parties came to an agreement to arbitrate in a pending suit and applied the same day to the Court to withdraw the suit. The suit was accordingly dismissed and the award made and filed under paras 20 and 21. This was quite correct for the agreement was virtually conditional on the Court surrendering its jurisdiction by allowing the suit to be withdrawn. An agreement to refer to arbitration the partition of a testator's estate does not encroach upon the jurisdiction of the Court in which proceedings for the probate of the will are pending and is therefore valid (n).

The agreement must be in writing—This paragraph does not apply unless the agreement to refer is in writing (o).

Agreement to refer future differences to arbitration—Where a charter party contains a clause that any disagreement that may arise (s, arise in future) between the contracting parties as to the proper interpretation of the charter should be referred to arbitration, the agreement, though it refers to future differences, can be filed under this paragraph (p). Agreements to refer future differences are not outside the scope of this section.

Numbered and registered as a suit—It has been held that in spite of these words a proceeding under this para is not a suit for a suit is commenced by filing a plaint (q). The High Court of Calcutta has held that a proceeding under para 21 is a suit (q²). It is submitted however that these words make it a statutory suit otherwise the words would have been "Numbered and registered as if it were a suit".

"Sufficient cause"—Where an agreement is to refer to several specified arbitrators and one of the arbitrators dies before the application is made under this paragraph the Court should not make an order of reference under this paragraph (r). But it is otherwise if the agreement contains an express provision that in case of death of any arbitrator, another arbitrator may be appointed in his place (s). During the pendency of a private arbitration one of the parties died and the arbitrator thinking he had no power to proceed in the legal representative refused to go on. On an application to file the agreement it was held that the Court had no power to order the arbitrator to proceed (t). In another similar case (u) the Court appointed a new arbitrator under para 3 which is made applicable by para 19 if its exercise is not inconsistent with the agreement of reference.

"Arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement"—Thus where an agreement provides for a reference to a Fair play merchant the Court has no power to appoint an Indian merchant (v).

Where the agreement to refer has been duly revoked—Where an agreement to refer has been revoked for good cause by one of the parties thereto the Court is not competent to order it to be filed under this paragraph (w). See notes to para 1 under the heading "Revocation of arbitrator's authority".

Umpire.—If an agreement filed under this paragraph does not contain any provision for the appointment of an umpire in the event of the arbitrators being unable to agree, the Court has no power under this paragraph to appoint an umpire (x).

Appeal.—An order under this paragraph filing or refusing to file an agreement to refer to arbitration is now appealable as an order [s 104, sub-s (1), cl. (d)] Under the Code of 1882 it was appealable as a decree (y).

Revision.—The mere fact that the application is not numbered and registered as a suit as required by cl (2) of this paragraph is no ground for interfering in revision, such an irregularity is not a material irregularity within the meaning of s 115 (z).

18. [New. Cf. Arbitration Act 9 of 1899, s. 19.] Where any party to any agreement to refer to arbitration, or any person claiming under him, institutes any suit against any other party to the agreement, or any person claiming under him, in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such suit may, at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, apply to the Court to stay the suit; and the Court, if satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the agreement to refer to arbitration, and that the applicant was, at the time when the suit was instituted and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration, may make an order staying the suit.

History of the section—This paragraph is a reproduction with slight alterations of section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act. The latter section is based on s. 4 of the English Arbitration Act, 1889, which again is based on the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s 11. As to the history of the last mentioned section, see Doleman & Sons v Os ell Corporation (a).

By s 23 of the Indian Contract Act agreements in restraint of legal proceedings are declared void. To that section there was an exception to the effect that if the parties have agreed to refer their disputes to arbitration, the existence of the agreement shall be a bar to seeking redress in the ordinary Courts. The exception also recognized the right to sue for specific performance of the agreement. Then came the Specific Relief Act of 1877 which by s 21 took away the right to sue for the specific performance of the agreement, but preserved the right to the party who was willing to abide by the agreement to object to a trial of the suit filed by the other party. Lastly, we have paragraph 22 of this Schedule which has repealed that portion of s 21 of the Specific Relief Act which enabled the defendant to plead the agreement to refer as a bar to the suit. In lieu thereof we have the present paragraph which enables a party who is willing to abide by the agreement to apply for a stay of the suit filed by the other party. But the application must be made at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement. If the application is not so made, the suit will proceed, and any award made by the arbitrator after the institution of the suit is a nullity. The reason is that as soon as a suit is brought in respect of the subject matter of the reference, the arbitrators become functus officio (b). The Calcutta High Court has held that though the award made while the suit is pending and not stayed is a nullity, the party benefitting by the award may still obtain a stay order, apply for the award to be filed under para. 20, and then, when the Court refuses to file it on the ground that it is invalid, the arbitrator whose jurisdiction has been restored by the stay order may complete their proceedings and make a fresh award (c). The rule does not apply when the award deals with a question that is not in issue in the suit (d).

"At the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement."—The corresponding words in s. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, are, "at any time after appearance and before filing a written statement or taking any other steps in the proceedings." It has been held under the English Arbitration Act, 1889, that where the defendant did not know what was the subject matter of the action, and asked for a statement of claim, the mere request for the statement of claim was not a step in the proceedings (e). But where the defendant was unaware that the contract contained an arbitration clause and asked for an order of discovery and the order asked for was made, it was held that he had taken a step in the proceedings and therefore was not entitled to a stay (f).

"Institutes any suit"—These words show that the present rule refers only to suits instituted after the agreement to refer to arbitration has been made. It uses B in respect of certain matters. The parties then agree to refer the matters to arbitration. Subsequently A declines to proceed with the arbitration, and writes to B that he will proceed with the suit. B applies for an order staying the suit. The Court has no power under this paragraph to stay the suit, for the suit was instituted prior to the agreement (g).

"No sufficient cause"—The burden lies on the plaintiff to show that some sufficient reason exists why the matter should not be referred to arbitration and not on the defendant to show that no such reason exists (h).

"May make an order staying the suit"—The Court has a discretion under this paragraph as to staying a suit instituted by one party to a submission against the other party. At the same time it must be remembered that it is the prima facie duty of the Court to act upon the agreement between the parties (i). If parties choose to determine for themselves that they will have a domestic forum in stead of

Sch. II, paras. 18, 19. resorting to the ordinary Courts then since that Act of Parliament [that is the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 11, which corresponds to the present paragraph] was passed a prima facie duty is cast upon the Courts to act upon such an agreement⁽¹⁾ If however the arbitration proves abortive, the Court may remove the stay and proceed with the trial of the suit (1)

Denial of agreement—Where one of the parties denies the agreement to refer set up by the other party, it is within the province of the Court to decide whether there is such an agreement (1)

Validity of agreement to refer—To bring a case within this paragraph there must be a subsisting agreement to refer capable of being carried into effect. A suit therefore cannot be stayed under this paragraph if the submission has been revoked for good cause (m). Nor can it be stayed if the original contract containing the arbitration clause is followed by another agreement materially altering the original contract, the reason being that in such a case the arbitration clause ceases, by virtue of the alteration to have any effect. But a mere extension of time for the performance of that which a party under the original contract is bound to perform does not amount to a material alteration, and the arbitration clause does not cease to operate in such a case (n). See Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act, notes to s. 28

Stay refused—Where an arbitration clause does not cover all the matters in respect of which the suit is brought, the Court will not, as a rule, split the suit into two parts, one to be tried by the arbitrator and the other to be tried in Court. The Court will, in such a case, try the whole suit (o). Where fraud is charged, the Court will in general refuse to refer the dispute to arbitration if the party charged with the fraud desires a public inquiry (p)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order staying or refusing to stay a suit when there is an agreement to refer to arbitration, see s. 104, sub s. (1), cl. (c)

19. [S. 524.] The foregoing provisions, so far as they are consistent with any agreement filed under paragraph 17, shall be applicable to all proceedings under the order of reference made by the Court under that paragraph, and to the award and to the decree following thereon.

Does not apply—This paragraph does not apply to cases to which the Arbitration Act applies. See notes to s. 89, p. 234 above

"So far as they are consistent with any agreement filed under paragraph 17"—This paragraph provides that where an order of reference is made under paragraph 17 the provisions of paras. 1 to 16 shall apply to all proceedings under the order only so far as they are consistent with the agreement filed under paragraph 17. Thus under paragraph 11 the Court has the power to extend the period for the making of the award. But if the agreement filed under paragraph 17 provides that the arbitrator shall make their award within a fixed period and that they shall have no power to enlarge the time for making the award, the stipulation in the agreement will prevail to the exclusion of the provision in paragraph 8. But the words so far as they are consistent with any agreement filed under paragraph 17 would not preclude the Court from setting aside an award for misconduct of the arbitrators, though there may be a clause in the agreement that the award should be accepted as final. (q) Nor do they preclude the Court from appointing a new arbitrator under paragraph 5 in place of one who refuses to act provided there is no clause in the submission expressly excluding the power of the Court to make such an appointment. Arbitration without the intervention of a Court.

20. [S. 525.] (1) Where any matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court, and an award has been made thereon, any person interested in the award may apply to any Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award that the award be filed in Court.

Filing award in matter referred to arbitration without intervention of Court

(2) The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

(3) The Court shall direct notice to be given to the parties to the arbitration, other than the applicant, requiring them to show cause, within a time specified, why the award should not be filed.

Old section—This paragraph corresponds to s. 525 of the Code of 1892 except that in cl. (1) the words any Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award have been substituted for the words Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the matter to which the award relates. See notes below. Court to which application should be made under this paragraph.

Does not apply—This paragraph does not apply to cases to which the Arbitration Act applies, see notes to s. 89 p. 234 above.

Pending suit—See notes to para. 17 above under the head Agreement to refer to arbitration matters in a pending suit p. 1096 above. See also notes to O. 23, s. 3 Adjustment submission and award p. 768 above.

Scope of this and subsequent paragraph—The present paragraph and paragraph 21 refer to cases where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court and the assistance of the Court is only sought in order to give effect to the award. (s)

This paragraph is no bar to a regular suit to enforce an award—Under the corresponding section 525 of the Code of 1892 it was held that a party interested in an award may at his option avail himself of the summary remedy provided by that section to enforce the award, or he may bring a regular suit to enforce the award (t) There is nothing in the present Code to preclude such a suit. Rather, such a suit is saved by s. 89 as appears from the words 'save in so far as is otherwise provided by any other law for the time being in force' (u). See notes to para. 21, "Res judicata," p. 1106 below.

A valid award constitutes a bar to a suit on the original demand—An award duly passed in accordance with the submission of the parties is equivalent to final judgment. Hence if an award is made for a partition of joint property no party to the reference can sue for partition. The award is an answer to the suit, though no decree may have been passed on the award (v).

Court to which application should be made under this paragraph—It is the subject matter of the award, and not the subject matter of the reference, that determines the jurisdiction of the Court under the present paragraph. Under the old section the application to file the award had to be made to 'the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the matter to which the award relates,' and these words were held by the High Court of Calcutta to mean 'the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the reference' (w). The words 'subject matter of the award' have been substituted in this paragraph for the words 'matter to which the award relates' to make it clear that an application under this paragraph may be made to any Court having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the award. So when the subject matter of an award was the management and control of three temples outside the district of Berar and the question of the application of the revenue was between members of the founder's family not resident in Berar, the Privy Council held that the District Judge of Berar had no jurisdiction to entertain an application to file it (x).

Limitation—The application under this paragraph should be made within 6 months from the date of the award. Limitation Act, 1908, sch. I, art. 178 (y). The date of the award means not the date the award bears but the date on which it was given to the parties (z) i.e., the date of publication (a). The application is not a suit and therefore the applicant cannot claim the benefit of section III of the Limitation Act (b). See notes to para. 17, "numbered and registered as a suit", on p. 1097 above.

Where an award is delivered in parts—If the agreement to refer provides that the matters in dispute may be taken up and dealt with seriatim and that the award may be delivered bit by bit, each portion decided may be dealt with as a distinct award under this paragraph (c).

Lost award.—When an award has been lost, the procedure of this rule cannot be resorted to and the parties must be referred to a regular suit (d).

"Where any matter has been referred to arbitration."—Do the words "any matter" refer only to a matter in respect of which a suit can be entertained by a Civil Court under s. 9 of the Code?—This paragraph provides that when any matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court, and an award has been made thereon any person interested in the award may apply that the award be filed in Court. Paragraph 21 provides for the passing of a decree on the award. Suppose now that the matter referred to arbitration is one as to which a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit under s 9 of the Code e.g., disputes about man pan, and an award is made thereon. Has the Court jurisdiction to file such an award, and pass a decree thereon under paragraph 21? It has been held by the High Court of Bombay, that it has, and that it is not against the policy of the law to give effect to such awards (c). The result is that rights which are not at all civil rights may be the subject matter of an arbitration and award and of the decree of a Civil Court. It would be interesting to know how the decree, if disobeyed, would be enforced. However this may be, it is clear that where a matter is such that on grounds of public policy it can be disposed of only by a Court, it cannot form the legitimate subject of a reference, and if such a matter is referred to arbitration, and an award has been made thereon, the Courts should refuse to pass a decree thereon. Thus the right to succeed to the trusteeship of a public charitable trust is not a right which can be settled by arbitration. A Court therefore has no jurisdiction to entertain an application to file an award in such a matter under this paragraph (f).

Numbered and registered as a suit—See notes to para 17 under the same head over p 1097 above

21. [s. 526.] (1) Where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon, and where no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 is proved, the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award.

(2) Upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, and no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award.

Points of distinction between s 256 of the Code of 1882 and this paragraph:—

1. The words, "where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon," have been added into cl (1) to negative the view held by the High Court of Bombay under the old section that the Court had no power to determine questions relating to the factum and validity of the agreement to refer and of the award, and to give effect to the view held by the other High Courts. See notes below, "Where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration," &c

This word "proved" has been substituted for the word "shown." In fact it was held under the old section that the word "shown" meant "proved" (g). See notes below under the head "Proved"

Sch. II,
para. 21.

Does not apply—This paragraph does not apply to cases to which the Arbitration Act applies. See notes to s. 89, p. 234 above

When the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon—These words are new. In the absence of these words in the corresponding section of the Code of 1852 it was held by the High Court of Bombay that where an application was made under that section to file an award, and the other party raised objections to the factum or validity of the submission and award, the Court had no jurisdiction to inquire whether the parties had or had not referred the matters in dispute to arbitration, and the Court should therefore reject the application, and refer the applicant to a regular suit to enforce the award (A). On the other hand, it was held by the High Courts of Allahabad (i), Calcutta (j) and Madras (k) that the Court had the power under that section to determine all questions relating to the existence and validity of the alleged agreement to refer and of the award, and that the applicant must not be referred to a separate suit. The present paragraph supersedes the Bombay decisions, and gives effect to the decisions of the other High Courts.

"Proved"—It is not sufficient to "allege" grounds of objection under paras 14 and 15. It is necessary that the ground of objection should be proved. See notes above under the head "Points of distinction," etc.

Grounds of objection under paras 14 and 15—Where a matter has been referred to arbitration under an order of the Court, the Court has power in the cases mentioned in para 14 to remit the award to the reconsideration of the arbitrator. Thus if an award determines any matter not referred to arbitration, the Court may remit the award under para 14, and if such matter can be separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred, the Court may amend the award by striking out that portion of the award which is in excess of the reference, and enforce the award as to the rest of it. In the case, however, of an arbitration without the intervention of the Court (paras 20-21), it was held by the High Courts in a series of cases that if the award determines matters outside the scope of the reference, the Court must refuse to file the award even when the matter not referred can be separated from that which was referred, the reason given being that the Court had under this para only two courses open to it, namely, to file the award or refuse to file it, and that it had no power to remit or amend the award (l). This, however, is incorrect for para 21 refers to para 14 where the principle of separation is recognized. The point is concluded by the decisions of the Privy Council (m) that the part of the award which is good should be filed and the remainder that is bad rejected.

An arithmetical error, according to the Allahabad High Court, does not render the award invalid (n). But the Lahore High Court has held that the Judge has no power to correct an arithmetical mistake even with the consent of the party affected, the reason given being that a Court acting under this paragraph must either file the award as it is # refuse to file it (v) But this is inconsistent with the Privy Council ruling referred to above

para. 21.

Award made after long delay—Where the agreement to refer was made in 1900, and the award was not made until 1910 and the Court came to the conclusion that it would probably not have been made at all but for one of the parties having brought a criminal complaint against one of the arbitrators the Court refused the application to file the award. The Court presumed from the circumstances of the case that the reference must have been abandoned (p)

Award made after revocation of submission—An award made after the agreement to refer has been revoked by one of the parties thereto for good cause cannot be filed under this paragraph (9)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this paragraph filing or refusing to file an award (s 104 sub-a (1) cl (f)) even though no express order is made (r) But no appeal lies from the order passed on appeal (v), see s 104 (2) (t) But s 104 refers to appeals within British India and does not take away the right of appeal to Privy Council given by section 109 (w) Again though an appeal lies from an order made under the paragraph no appeal lies from a decree passed on an award except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award (t) [see sub para (2)] Suppose now that an order is made directing an award to be filed, and a decree is passed based on the award before an appeal is preferred from the order Is the right to appeal from the order lost because a decree is drawn up? It has been held that it is not and it has been further held that if the Appellate Court sets aside the order, it is competent to it to declare that the decree based on the order is vacated (v2) See notes to para 15 Award made after 'expiration of period allowed by Court,' p 1089 above

The making of a decree is no bar to an application to restore a petition of objection which has been dismissed for default of appearance (u). A applies to file an award under para 20. B objects to the filing of the award on certain grounds. On the date fixed for the hearing of the objections B does not appear. Thereupon his objections are disallowed and an ex parte decree is passed against B in accordance with the award. B thereupon applies under O 9 r 13, to set aside the ex parte decree and to hear his objections to the award. The application is rejected. B then appeals from the order rejecting the application. Is the order appealable? Yes, it is appealable under s 42 r 1 (d) by which it is provided that an appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for an order to set aside an ex parte decree in a case open to appeal. The case is open to appeal for the question between the parties was whether or not the award should be filed as a decree of the Court and any order made upon it would be appealable under s 104 sub s (1) cl (f) (x).

Res judicata—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the refusal of a Court to file a private award on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrator does not operate as res judicata in respect of a suit subsequently brought to enforce the award, the reason given being that the doctrine of res judicata pre-supposes a former suit and a decree in that suit, and that the order of refusal is not a decree, but merely an order (y) This decision has been followed by the Bombay High Court (z) The Calcutta High Court has held that the bar of res judicata would only apply to grounds of objection referred to in paras 14 and 15 heard and finally decided (a)

Withdrawal of suit—The fact that an application has been made under para 20 does not preclude the applicant from withdrawing the application under O 23 r 1, at any time prior to the pronouncement of judgment and preparation of the decree It is true that a suit alone can be withdrawn under O 23 r 1, but an application filed under para 20 is numbered and registered as a suit (b)

THE THIRD SCHEDULE.

EXECUTION OF DECREES BY COLLECTORS

1. [S. 321.] Where the execution of a decree has been transferred to the Collector under section 68, he may—

Powers of Collector

- (a) proceed as the Court would proceed when the sale of immoveable property is postponed in order to enable the judgment-debtor to raise the amount of the decree, or
- (b) raise the amount of the decree by letting in perpetuity, or for a term, on payment of a premium, or by mortgaging, the whole or any part of the property ordered to be sold, or
- (c) sell the property ordered to be sold or so much thereof as may be necessary

Clause (a)—See O 21, r 83

Payment by instalments.—A Collector to whom a decree for sale of mortgage property has been transferred for execution under s 68 is limited to one of the three courses specified in this paragraph and may not depart from them, much less may he do what the Court itself could not do in such a case—allow payment of the debt to be made by instalments (c) Nor has the Collector jurisdiction when mortgaged property is sold under O 34 r 12 free of a prior mortgage encumbrance to settle accounts as to what is due on each mortgage (d) When the Collector receives sale proceeds they are assets held by the Court and so an application for rateable distribution must be made before receipt of sale proceeds by the Collector (e)

2. [S. 322.] Where the execution of a decree, not being a decree ordering the sale of immoveable property, in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same, but being a decree

Procedure of Collector in special cases for the payment of money in satisfaction of which the Court has ordered the sale of immoveable property, has been so transferred, the Collector, if, after such inquiry as he thinks necessary, he has reason to believe that all the liabilities of the judgment-debtor can be discharged without a sale of the whole of his available immoveable property, may proceed as hereinafter provided

Notice to be given to decree holders and to persons having claims on property

- (a) every person holding a decree for the payment of money against the judgment-debtor capable of execution by sale of his immoveable property and which such decree holder desires to have so executed, and every holder of a decree for the payment of money in execution of which proceedings for the sale of such property are pending, to produce before the Collector a copy of the decree, and a certificate from the Court which passed or is executing the same, declaring the amount recoverable thereunder,

(2) Such notice shall be published by being affixed on a conspicuous part of the Court-house of the Court which made the original order for sale, and in such other places (if any) as the Collector thinks fit and where the address of any such decree holder or claimant is known a copy of the notice shall be sent to him by post or otherwise

Power of Collector to hear objections to execution of decree transferred to him for execution—Where a decree for money is transferred for execution on to the Collector under s 68 he is not authorized under this paragraph to hear any objection by the parties interested in the property advertised for sale to the sale of that property nor is it any part of the Collector's duty to decide whether the property has or has not been properly attached (f)

4. [S 322 B] (1) Upon the expiration of the said period the Collector shall appoint a day for hearing any representations which the judgment debtor and the decree holders or claimants (if any) may desire to make and for holding such inquiry as he may deem

(3) Where any such dispute arises, the Collector shall refer the same, with a statement thereof and his own opinion thereon to the Court which made the original order for sale, and shall, pending the reference stay proceedings relating to the subject thereof. 5. [S. 322 C.] The Collector may, instead of himself issuing the notices and holding the inquiry required by paragraphs 3 and 4, draw up a statement specifying the circumstances of the judgment debtor and of his immoveable property so far as they are known to the Collector or appear in the records of his office, and forward such statement to the District Court, and such Court shall thereupon issue the notices, hold the inquiry and draw up the statement required by paragraphs 3 and 4 and transmit such statement to the Collector

THE INDIAN HIGH COURTS.

Constitution.

101 Ch. Act, s. 2, 19. The high courts referred to in this Act are the high courts of judicature for the time being established in British India by letters patent.

- (3) A judge of a high court must be—

- (b) a member of the Indian Civil Service of not less than ten years' standing, and having for at least three years served as, or exercised the powers of a district judge ; or as a judge of the court; and the person so appointed may sit and perform the duties of a judge of the court until some person has been appointed by His Majesty to the office of judge of the court, and has entered on the discharge of the duties of the office or until the absent judge has returned from his absence, or until the Governor General in Council or the local Government, as the case may be, sees cause to cancel the appointment of the acting judge

'Upon the happening of a vacancy in the office of any other Judge of any such High Court'—These words refer to a Judge appointed to his office by His Majesty and not a person appointed under the section to act as a Judge (b)

Time for appointment of acting Judge—There is no limit of time mentioned in this section within which the appointment of an acting Judge is to be made. Such an appointment therefore is not invalid because it was not made immediately upon or within a reasonable time after the occurrence of the vacancy in which it is supplied (c)

Government of India Act.

Sub section (2)—This sub section reproduces in effect the provisions of sec 8 of the Statute 21 Geo III c 70 relating to the Supreme Court of Calcutta, cl 23 of the Charter of the Supreme Court of Madras, 1800, and cl 30 of the Charter of the Supreme Court of Bombay, 1823. There was no such provision in the High Courts Act, 1861 nor in any of the High Courts charters. See Despatch from Secretary of State, cl 17, p 1136 below.

The High Court has power under the Specific Relief Act I of 1877, s 45 to make an order requiring the Chief Revenue authority to state a case and refer it to the High Court under s 51 of the Income Tax Act 7 of 1918, the power not being the exercise of original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, so as to be excluded by sub sec (2) (d).

Ss.
106, 107.

107. [Ch. Act. c. 15.]—Each of the high courts has superintendence over all courts for the time being subject to its appellate jurisdiction, and may do any of the following things, that is to say,—

Powers of high court with respect to subordinate courts

- (a) call for returns,
- (b) direct the transfer of any suit or appeal from any such court to any other court of equal or superior jurisdiction,
- (c) make and issue general rules and prescribe forms for regulating the practice and proceedings of such courts,
- (d) prescribe forms in which books, entries and accounts shall be kept by the officers of any such courts, and
- (e) settle tables of fees to be allowed to the sheriff, attorneys, and all clerks and officers of courts.

Provided that such rules, forms and tables shall not be inconsistent with the provisions of any Act for the time being in force, and shall require the previous approval, in the case of the high court at Calcutta, of the Governor-General in Council, and in other cases of the local Government.

Power of superintendence: Civil proceedings—The High Courts have under this section not only administrative but judicial powers. In the exercise of its power of superintendence a High Court may direct a Subordinate Court to do its duty, and this power is not limited to cases in which the Subordinate Court declines to hear or deter mine a suit or application within its jurisdiction. But a High Court is not competent in the exercise of this power, to interfere with and set right the orders of a Subordinate Court on the ground that the order of the Subordinate Court has proceeded on an error of law or an error of fact (e). A High Court in the exercise of its superintending power will not ordinarily interfere except in cases of grave and otherwise irreparable injustice (f).

The power of revision conferred upon a High Court by s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code is limited to cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court. There is no such limitation upon the power of superintendence conferred upon a High Court by the present section (g). All that is necessary is that the Court over which the power of superintendence is sought to be exercised should be subject to its appellate jurisdiction. If the subordinate Court is one from which an appeal lies to the High Court, though it be in certain specified cases only, then that Court is subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court and that is sufficient to attract the power of superintendence conferred by this section, and that power may therefore be exercised over the Subordinate Court even in cases where a direct appeal does not lie (h).

Power of superintendence: Criminal proceedings.—In the exercise of its power of superintendence the High Court will interfere with an order under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, when the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction, or has exceeded his jurisdiction, or where there has been a material irregularity in the proceedings which amounts to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction or to an usurpation of jurisdiction, or which has prejudiced a party to the proceedings (i). In case of a difference of opinion, the senior Judge's opinion will prevail (j).

The High Court has power under this section to stay the trial of a criminal case by a Magistrate pending the decision of a civil suit between the parties (k).

Agency Courts.—Under rule 14 of the Rules of 1920 framed under the Ganjam and Vizagapatam Agency Courts Act 24 of 1839 and under the present section the High Court has power to transfer to its file cases pending before the Agency Commissioner (l).

Defence of India Act, 1915.—The High Court has no jurisdiction to superintend the proceedings of commissioners appointed under the Defence of India Act, 1915 (m).

Rent Act.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that it has power under this section to revise the orders of the Rent Controller under the Calcutta Rent Act (n). The High Court of Rangoon has held that it has no power to interfere with the orders of the Rent Controller under the Rangoon Rent Act (o).

Land Acquisition Act.—The High Court has no power under s 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or this section to interfere with an order of the Collector refusing to make a reference under s 18 of the Land Acquisition Act (p) See notes to s 115, "Subordinate Court," on p 312 above

Ss.
107, 108.

Municipal Commissioner.—A Municipal Commissioner sitting as an Election Court is not subject to the superintendence of the High Court under this section, nor is he subject to the appellate jurisdiction (g)

When present section to be resorted to.—The special power of superintendence conferred by this section is not as a rule to be exercised in cases where there is an adequate remedy by other proceedings such as appeal or revision (r) That power is as a rule exercised in the following cases —

- (1) where there is no remedy by revision or appeal (s),
- (2) where it is doubtful whether the High Court has the power to revise under s 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure (t),
- (3) where the order passed is of an extraordinary character, and there has been a gross failure on the part of the Subordinate Court to do its duty (u)

Appeal.—No appeal lies under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order made by a High Court in the exercise of the power of superintendence under s 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, which corresponds with the present section. See cl 15 of the Letters Patent as amended in 1919

108. [Ch Act, ss 13, 14].—(1) Each high court may by its own rules provide as it thinks fit for the exercise, by one or more judges, or by division courts constituted by two or more judges of the high court of the original and appellate jurisdiction vested in the court

Exercise of jurisdiction by single judges or division courts

(2) The chief justice of each high court shall determine what judge in each case is to sit alone, and what judges of the court, whether with or without the chief justice, are to constitute the several division courts

Original Jurisdiction.—See notes to s 115, "Appeal" on p 320 above

Rules.—An order made by a Judge in excess of the jurisdiction delegated to him by rules framed by the High Court under this section is a nullity (v).

DESPATCH FROM SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR CHARLES WOODS DESPATCH ACCOMPANYING FIRST LETTERS PATENT OR CHARTER

Judicial, No 24

INDIA OFFICE,

London, 14th May, 1862

To

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL

My Lord,

I HEREBY transmit to you the Letters Patent or Charter (w), under the Royal Sign Manual, for the High Court of Judicature to be established in Bengal in accordance with the provisions of the Act 24 and 25, Victoria, Chapter 104, for establishing High Court of Judicature in India, and request that you will take immediate measure for instituting

2. This Charter will accomplish the great object which has so long been contemplated, of substituting for the Supreme and Sudder Courts abolished by the Act of High Court of Judicature, possessing the combined powers and authorities of the abolished Courts and exercising jurisdiction both over the Provinces under the Sudder Court and over the Presidency Town which forms the local jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

3. Before I review the provisions in detail, it is necessary that I should direct your attention to the general scope and main provisions of the Act in question.

4. It abolishes, in the first place (as soon as the Charter shall issue), the Supreme Court and the Court of Sudder Dewany Adawlut. It vests in the High Court (by the last provision of section 9) the powers and authorities of those Courts respectively except so far as the Crown may by such Charter otherwise direct. And (by the first part of the same section) it invests the High Court with such Civil, Criminal, Admiralty, Vice Admiralty, Testamentary, Intestate and Matrimonial Jurisdiction, and all such powers and authority in relation to the administration of justice in the Presidency, as the same Charter may confer. With respect, therefore, to the fusion of the Supreme and Sudder Courts, it appears obvious that the Act itself speaks, and that to assume and effect the same purpose by affirmative declaration in the Charter would be superfluous. It has been, consequently, deemed unnecessary that the Charter should exhibit on the face of it an explicit statement of the powers and jurisdiction to be possessed by the new Court in consequence of the fusion as would have been the proper course if these powers and jurisdiction had been entirely new. Recourse has been had in some places in lieu of such explicit statement to reference to statutory provisions, and in others, to the Charter of the Supreme Court when the object of clearness appeared to require it. But wherever the Charter does not otherwise specify, the High Court will use the powers and administer the jurisprudence appertaining to those Courts respectively to whose authority it now succeeds.

(w) The Letters Patent dated the 14th May, 1862 forwarded with this despatch were afterwards revoked by further Letters Patent dated 23rd December, 1865, for which see post

Despatch from Secretary of State.

5 But the Charter is intended positively to declare all such Civil Criminal and other jurisdictions above specified as the Crown thinks proper by this Charter to confer on it supplementary or additional to its main purpose, namely, the fusion of the afore said Courts

6 Moreover, the words giving authority to confer on the Court such jurisdiction and such powers and authorities for the administration of justice as the Crown may direct appear very large and such as in point of fact, invest the Crown with extensive legislative powers so far as the administration of justice, within the meaning of the sections, may require It has been however, thought best to use this power very sparingly and simply as ancillary to the real purpose of the Act, namely, the establishment of new Courts

7 Another reason for the form which the present Letters Patent assume is to be found in the provisions of section 17 of the Act of last Sessions By that section power is given to the Crown to recall the Letters Patent establishing the Court at any time within three years after its establishment, and to grant other Letters Patent in their stead. This provision was inserted in the Act, mainly with the view of enabling Her Majesty's Government to avail themselves of the advice and assistance of the Judges of the Court in framing the more perfect Charter by which the jurisdiction and authority of the Court is to be permanently fixed On this point, I request you will put yourselves in communication with the Judges of the Court and at any time previous to the expiration of two years from the date of establishment of the Court, furnish me with any suggestions they make, or any amendments they may propose in the Letters Patent now transmitted and I shall be glad if, in proposing alterations, the Judges will put their recommendations as nearly as possible in the form in which they wish them to appear in the future Letters Patent

8 I proceed to notice in order, such of the provisions of the Charter as appear to me to call for special remark

9 By clause 6 power is given to the Chief Justice to appoint the officers of the Court, and to fix their salaries subject however, in both cases, to the approval and confirmation of the Governor General in Council This provision does not refer to the setting of tables of fees, where fees are allowed, which, under section 15 of the Act is required to be done by the Court

III The Supreme Court exercise an authority entirely independent of the Government in regard to its ministerial officers. The Government, however has always considered itself at liberty to receive representations from any of the officers of the Subordinate Courts who felt themselves aggrieved by the orders of the Judicial Authorities, and to express its opinion on the propriety or otherwise of the proceedings of the Courts in such cases It will be expedient for you to take the question into your consideration in regard to the Court's rule in relation to the Government's power to remove it but as a question of policy, the extension of the liberty of application to the Government to those who have not hitherto enjoyed it appears to me preferable to taking it away from those who have heretofore been permitted to avail themselves of it as a mode of obtaining redress against proceedings alleged by the applicants to be unjust and oppressive

Despatch from Secretary of State.

11 In regard to the admission of Advocates Vakeels and Attorneys the recommendations of the Law Commissioners have been followed

Clause 10

Under the existing practice the Advocate pleads and the Attorney acts for the suitors of the Supreme Court and the Vakeel both pleads and acts for the suitors of the Sudder Court of which Court the Advocate and Attorney of the Supreme Court are ex-officio Vakeels. The ex-officio terms are employed in the Charter simply to express the functions of these several classes of practitioners. The Advocate and Attorney will respectively plead and act in the High Court and the Vakeel will both plead and act in the High Court as he did in the Sudder Court. Any person may apply to be admitted either as an Advocate or Vakeel or Attorney under the rules which the Court is authorized by the Charter to make and there is nothing in the Charter to prevent the admission of Advocates and Attorneys to be also Vakeels of the High Court should the Judges consider such a course to be expedient.

12 The provisions in the Act section 9 clause 4 which declares that Pleaders of the Sudder Court who shall have been admitted as Pleaders of the High Court shall be eligible under certain conditions to the Bench of the Court implies that a discretionary power may be exercised as to the admission of the present Pleaders of the Sudder Court to the Bar of the High Court. This enactment will account to you for the omission from the Charter of any provision appointing all the present practitioners of the Supreme and Sudder Courts to the High Court. I conclude however that unless in any special case there are strong reasons to the contrary the Court will admit the whole of the practitioners in the abolished Courts at the date of their abolition to be the first Advocates Vakeel and Attorneys of the High Court.

III With reference to the concluding sentence of clause 10 it is to be observed that the Letters Patent contain no provision reserving to the Attorneys of the present Supreme Court the right of pleading after the issue of this Charter in the Insolvent Court as newly regulated by clause 17. No such provision however is necessary as the Insolvent Court is a separate tribunal not affected by the Act authorizing the Letters Patent and will continue a separate Court though for the future presided over by a Judge of the High Court. The Attorneys therefore will as heretofore practise in accordance with the rules of the Insolvent Court itself.

14 By the important provisions contained in the clauses of the Charter 11 to 33 inclusive effect is given to the 9th section of the Act respecting the jurisdictions and powers to be exercised by the High Court.

15 The original civil jurisdiction now exercised by the Supreme Court within the limits of the Presidency Town will henceforth be exercised will be added to

Clause 11

under the Charter by the High Court including in that term (Clause 36 of the Charter) a Judge or Division Court of the High Court appointed or constituted under the provisions of the 13th section of the Act.

III As it is very desirable that every suit should be instituted in the Court of the district in which the property forming the subject of dispute is situated or in which the cause of action has its origin or in which the defendant resides or carries on business the jurisdiction hitherto exercised by the Supreme Court (on the ground of constructive inhabitancy or otherwise) over persons and property beyond the local limits of the Presidency Town but within the limits of the Presidency or Division subject to the authority of the High Court has not been vested in the High Court. The concluding provision of clause 11 provides that the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court shall be confined to the local limits of the Presidency Town, with power however, to the Court, under clause 13, to call for and try any suit instituted in any Court subject to its superintendence, when, for reasons to be recorded, it shall think proper to do so

17 The terms of clause 12, defining the original jurisdiction of the High Court as to suits, are nearly similar to those employed in section

Clause 12 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859) and are intended to include every description of case over which the Mofussil Courts have jurisdiction By the 8th section of the 21st George III C 70 the Supreme Court is precluded from exercising any jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue Further, a decision* of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, pronounced in April 1856 ruled against the exercise of the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in matters matrimonial between others than Christians, and even expressed some hesitation as to whether that Court should administer a remedy in such cases on the Civil side It is one object of the present Charter to do away with all such restrictions and limitations, as far as this can be done without trenching on the proper province of legislation. It has therefore, been sought to invest the High Court, in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction, with as ample powers in receiving and determining cases of every description, and in applying a remedy to every wrong as are exercised by the Courts not established by Royal Charter and thus to place the Courts of first instance in the Presidency Towns and in the interior of the country in this respect as nearly as may be, on the same footing of Calcutta in which the debt or damage or value of the property sued for does not exceed might be instituted in the Small Cause Court, it may become a question whether the sum, excluding the jurisdiction of the High Court, might not be raised to, say, 300 or 500 Rupees.

Courts This subject, if desirable, is properly to be attained by legislation. It is of opinion that the Small Cause Court ought to be placed in the same relation to the High Court as any other Court subject to its appellate jurisdiction and general control, the measure can be carried into effect by an Act of the Governor General in Council.

20 As already observed the effect of clause 12 will be to confine the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court within narrower limits than the Civil jurisdiction exercised by the Supreme Court By clause 13, however, the High Court is empowered to call for and to try, as a Court of first instance, any suit which the law requires to be instituted before some other tribunal. By the exercise of the power thus conferred on it, the High Court will be enabled to obviate all reasonable ground of complaint, when it shall deem that any hardship or injustice is likely to result from the compulsory institution in a Zillah Court of a suit which, but for the change in the system, might have been instituted in the Supreme Court.

21 The introduction of the words "whether within or without the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William" in this and in several other clauses, may appear to require explanation. The Court about to be established is called in section 2 of the Act, 24 and 25 Victoria, C 101, a Court "for the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William." That title is of course preserved in the Charter. By section 8, the Supreme and Sudder Courts are abolished and by section 9 all their jurisdiction, power, and authority, except when otherwise provided, are vested in the High Court. But the Supreme Court has various original jurisdictions, extending over the whole of the Presidency of Fort William, and also over some of the Non Regulation Provinces under the Government of India, and the Sudder Court has various appellate jurisdictions extending over the Bengal Division of the Presidency, and also over the Province of Assam and others, which are not properly parts of the Presidency. The result is, that the High Court "for the Bengal Division," succeeding to the powers of both the Supreme and the Sudder Courts, has, in several respects, jurisdictions in territories not within the Bengal Division. As this is the result of the Act, it might not have been necessary to notice it in the Charter. But for the sake of clearness, and in order to show distinctly that the Charter is meant to apply to these extra local jurisdictions, as well as to the strictly local jurisdiction within the Bengal Division, it has been deemed advisable to introduce these words.

22 Clauses 14 and 15 give effect to the recommendation of the Law Commissioners, that the High Court shall have all the appellate jurisdiction which is now exercised by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, and a new appellate jurisdiction in civil cases, from the Courts of original jurisdiction, constituted by one or more of its own Judges, except that in the case of a decision which has been passed by a majority of the full number of the judges of the Court, the appeal shall lie to Her Majesty in Council.

It will appear, from a subsequent clause on the Letters Patent, that the proceedings in the High Court in civil cases are to be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure enacted by the Legislature of India, of which Act XXIII of 1861 forms a part. By section 23 of the last mentioned Indian Act, provision has been made for a difference of opinion on the hearing of an appeal. A difficulty, however, may occur when two Judges, constituting a Division Court for the trial of cases in the exercise of original jurisdiction, differ as to the judgment to be given. For such a case, the Code of Civil Procedure, which is adapted to Courts of first instance presided over by single Judges only, contain no provision. To call in a third Judge, and to re try the case, with a view to a judgment from which there may be an appeal to the High Court under clause 14 would be productive of unnecessary delay and expense to the parties, and I am of opinion that the Court should make provision for such a contingency, by a rule made under the 13th section of the Act of Parliament, providing either that the judgment shall be in accord ance with the opinion of the senior of the Judges constituting the Division Court, or that the final judgment shall be entered pro forma, according to such opinion, such judgment being a judgment for the purpose of an appeal against the same, but not for any other purpose.

Despatch from Secretary of State.

24 The substantive civil law to be administered by the High Court within the jurisdiction of the Supreme and Sudder Courts, respectively, will, until otherwise provided, continue as at present. This as I have said, it was no part of the purpose of the Act of Parliament or Charter to effect. And the clauses on which I am now commenting are probably superfluous. But they have been introduced to obviate any apprehension which might have been entertained that in fusing the two Courts together, it was intended to fuse also the law which they have respectively hitherto administered, and thus to make a substantial innovation, not only in the tribunals for administration of the law but of the law itself. I trust, however, that measures may be taken ere long for effecting great improvements in this respect, by enacting for the British possessions in India a body of substantive law, by which all classes shall be governed and all transactions shall be regulated except in cases to which our Judicatures are required to apply the personal laws of any classes of our Indian subjects.

25 Under clauses 21, 22, and 38, no change will be effected by the Charter in the administration of criminal justice in the Presidency Town or in respect of persons subject to its criminal jurisdiction, residing in the interior of the country. It appears, however, to Her Majesty's Government that some modification of the existing practice, both at the capital and in the provinces, is necessary and on these points I shall address you in a separate despatch.

26 The Sudder Court exercises no original jurisdiction, but by clause 23, original criminal jurisdiction, throughout the territories subject to its authority, has been given to the High Court, the principal object being to enable the Judges to hold trials for offences committed out of the Presidency Town at which from their importance or for other specific cause it may be expedient that a Judge or Judges of the High Court should preside.

27 The remaining clauses of the Letters Patent on the subject of the criminal jurisdiction of the High Court do not call for any particular notice. They contain no special provisions respecting the transfer to that Court of the criminal jurisdiction exercised by the Supreme Court over inhabitants of such parts of India as are not comprised within the local limits of the Letters Patent that having been fully provided for by section 10 of the Act under the authority of which the High Court is established.

28 As in the case of the Small Cause Court, you will consult the Judges in regard to the relation in which the High Court is to stand to the Magistrates of Calcutta.

29 Clause 30, respecting the exercise of the jurisdiction by the High Court elsewhere than at its ordinary place of sitting, is a very important provision and one which, I have no doubt, if judiciously carried into effect, will materially tend to the greater efficiency of all the judicatures subject to the superintendence and authority of the High Court. Circumstances may frequently arise when the deputation of a Judge or Judges of the High Court would be a measure of the highest expediency. For such cases the clause under consideration will enable the Government to provide by deputing one or more Judges from the High Court, who would avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded them of making a searching inquiry into the manner in which the local Courts were performing their duties.

Despatch from Secretary of State.

31 With reference to this clause, it has been considered whether the precedence of section 14 of the Act of Parliament should not be followed and the authority to make the necessary arrangement for exercise of the Court's jurisdiction out of the usual place of sitting vested in the Chief Justice. On the whole, it was thought that acts partaking so much of an administrative character might be more perfectly performed by the Governor General in Council. But it is scarcely for me to add that Her Majesty's Government entertain full confidence that the Chief Justice will be the authority habitually consulted in the matter.

■ The Supreme Court exercise, at present Admiralty Jurisdiction under its Charter. The Chief Justice has Vice Admiralty Jurisdiction under the commission of the 19th July, 1822, and all or any of the Judges of the Supreme Court may be appointed Commissioners, under the provisions of 39 and 40, George III, C. 79, section 25, for the trial and adjudication of prize causes and other maritime questions arising in India. By the present Charter, the whole of these jurisdictions and power will be vested in the High Court, and as in the Act above cited, by the expression "other maritime questions" in general mention is made of all the jurisdictions conferred as above mentioned in the clauses of the Charter, providing both for the civil and criminal maritime jurisdiction of the High Court.

Clauses 33 and 34 32 The clauses respecting testamentary and intestate jurisdiction do not call for any remark.

■ Her Majesty's Government are desirous of placing the Christian subjects of the Crown within the Presidency in the same position under the High Court, as to matters matrimonial in general as they now are under the Supreme Court and thus they believe to be effected by clause 35 of the Charter. But they consider it expedient that the High Court should possess, in addition, the power of decreeing divorce, which the Supreme Court does not possess, in other words that the High Court should have the same jurisdiction as the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England, established in virtue of 20 and 21 Vic, C. 85, and in regard to which further provisions were made by 22 and 23 Vic, C. 61, and 23 and 24 Vic, C. 144. The Act of Parliament for establishing the High Court however does not purport to give to the Crown the power of importing into the Charter all the provisions of the Divorce Court Act, and some of them the Crown clearly could not so import, such for instance as those which prescribe the period of marriage, or those which exempt from punishment clergymen refusing to marry adulterers. All these are, in truth, matters for Indian legislation and I request that you will immediately take the subject into your consideration and introduce into your Council a Bill for confirming upon the High Court the jurisdiction and powers of the Divorce Court in England, one of the provisions of which should be to give an appeal to the Privy Council in those cases in which the Divorce Court Act gives an appeal to the House of Lords.

34 The object of the proviso at the end of clause 35 is to obviate any doubt that may possibly arise as to whether by vesting the High Court with the powers of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England it was intended to take away from the Courts within the divisions of the Presidency not established by Royal Charter any jurisdiction which they might have in matters Matrimonial, as, for instance, in a suit for alimony between Armenians or Native Christians. With any such jurisdiction it is not intended to interfere.

Despatch from Secretary of State.

- 35 Clause 30 refers to the powers of single Judges and Division Courts appointed or constituted under the provisions of the 13th section of the Act By section 14 of the Act, the power of determining from time to time what Judge in each case shall sit alone, and what Judges shall constitute Division Courts, is placed in the hands of the Chief Justice It will be observed that the law does not require that a Judge selected from the Bar shall necessarily form a part of every Division Court, and it will be for the Chief Justice to consider whether, in cases exclusively between Natives, it will not be desirable to follow, as far as possible, the course which has already been resolved upon in regard to the cases under appeal to the Sudder Court at the time of its abolition, and to constitute the Division Court of Judges trained in the country, whose knowledge of the Native language will obviate the expense and delay of translating the proceedings

- 36 Clause 37 is a very important one, and there is little doubt, will prove a very salutary provision It has, therefore, been inserted, although

Clause 37 the change introduced is somewhat greater and more substantial than is generally aimed at in this Charter It extends to the High Court the Code of Civil Procedure enacted by the Legislature of India for the Court, not established by Royal Charter, and thus accomplishes the object so long contemplated of substituting one simple Code of Procedure for the various systems (corresponding to its common law, equity and admiralty jurisdiction) which have been in operation in the Supreme Court since the date of its establishment

37 In regard to the rules respecting appeals to the Privy Council the object has been to avoid unnecessary innovation where so much of change, with its necessary inconvenience, is unavoidable The existing rules which regulate these appeals are therefore, left in force, with one or two additions only, which experience in the Court of the Judicial Committee has found advisable For instance, clause 40 is introduced, as it had been commonly introduced, of late years in the appeal rules of other dependencies of Great Britain in order to remove all doubts as to the power of the High Court to allow an appeal to the Council from interlocutory judgments

38 It will, however, be obvious to you that the rules, as now framed, will be liable to the reproach of confusion, and perhaps of uncertainty They will be compounded of those contained in the Charter and those already in force which will necessitate reference to several documents You will agree with me that a simple and intelligible Code of Rules, to regulate appeals to the Privy Council from the new High Courts, or rather from the High Courts in general which may be constituted under the Act of Parliament will be of great advantage to the suitors and the public I should wish, therefore that one of the first objects of the Judges, as soon as the amount of labour thrown on them by their new position may allow it, might be to prepare suggestions for such a Code of Rules which might then be reduced into a complete shape by the authority of the Privy Council at Home

39 In forwarding the Letters Patent to the Judges of the High Court, you are requested to furnish them with a copy of this despatch I trust that the Letters Patent taken in connection with the Act for establishing the Court, will be found to contain everything requisite for enabling the Court to proceed at once to the discharge of its important duties It is possible that omissions may be discovered by the legal authorities in India, which may impede the proper action of the Courts, and should the Judges represent to you that such is the case you will take immediate steps for supplying what is wanting by such legislative measures as you may consider most expedient for remedying the defects brought under your consideration

Despatch from Secretary of State.

40 I cannot conclude this despatch without expressing the deep interest felt by Her Majesty's Government in the success of this important measure. The Crown by its Letters Patent has sanctioned the establishment of a tribunal as the Chief Court of Justice in India, which in the trained learning of the Judges selected from the Bar, and in the knowledge of the language, feelings, and habits of the Natives of that country possessed by the other members of the Court, combines the most material elements of success. And Her Majesty's Government look with confidence to the zealous exertions and cordial co-operation of the Judges to place the administration of Justice in India under the controlling authority of the Court in such a state of efficiency as will render it in every respect adequate to its ends, and satisfactory to the people and to the Government.

I have the honour to be,

My Lord

Your Lordships most obedient, humble Servant empowered to remove or to suspend from practice on reasonable cause, the said Advocates, Vakeels or Attorneys at law, and no person whatsoever but such Advocates, Vakeels, or Attorneys shall be allowed to act or to plead for, or on behalf of any suitor in the said High Court except that any suitor shall be allowed to appear, plead, or act on his own behalf or on behalf of a co suitor

Power to remove or suspend on reasonable cause—The words on reasonable cause are not confined to purely professional misconduct but embrace all causes which may afford reasonable ground for suspension or removal (c). As to what is reasonable cause see the undermentioned cases (d)

An Attorney is an officer of the Court and any person aggrieved by the misconduct of an Attorney has the right to invoke the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Court (e)

Proceedings in the disciplinary jurisdiction are not of a criminal nature and the rules of Criminal Procedure such as filing a written statement by the accused do not apply (el)

Professional etiquette affecting counsel—It is unprofessional for counsel to cross examine a witness as to facts about which he has no instructions but are within his personal knowledge. When counsel during the hearing of a case calls for the production of a book which is produced and handed to him by his opponent with certain pages marked is those only to which he may refer in respect of the subject matter of his cross examination it is improper for counsel who calls for the book to inspect any of the other pages. There is nothing unprofessional in counsel giving evidence in a case in which he appears as counsel though as a general practice it is undesirable (f). Where counsel accepts brief to appear at the trial of a case and is paid the consultation fee and the fee for attending the trial he should return both the fees if after holding consultation he leaves for another place and is unable to attend the trial of the case the consultation must be deemed to be held with a view to his attending the trial (g).

Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court

11. And We hereby ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall have and exercise ordinary original civil jurisdiction within such local limits as may, from time to time, be declared and prescribed by any law made by competent legislative authority for India and until some local limits shall be so declared and prescribed within the limit declared and prescribed by the proclamation fixing the limits of Calcutta issued by the Governor-General in Council, on the 10th day of September, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four and the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the said High Court shall not extend beyond the limits for the time being declared and prescribed as the local limits of such jurisdiction (h)

Local limits—Power is given by s. 109 of the Government of India Act to the Governor General in Council to alter the local limits of the jurisdiction of High Courts.

Issue of warrant—The High Court has no power in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction to issue a warrant against the person of a judgment debtor and appoint a special bailiff to execute it against the judgment-debtor wherever he might be found in the Presidency (i) Such an order however may be made for the arrest of a defendant who has been guilty of a contempt of Court (j) The reason is that an order for attachment for contempt is not an order made in exercise of the High Court's civil jurisdiction (k)

12. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction shall be empowered to receive, try, and determine suits of every description, if, in the case of suits for land or other immoveable property, such land or property shall be situated, or, in all other cases, if the cause of action shall have arisen either wholly, or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part, within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the said High Court, or if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit shall dwell or carry on business, or personally work for gain, within such limits except that the said High Court shall not have such original jurisdiction in cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court at Calcutta, in which the debt or damage, or value of the property sued for does not exceed one hundred rupees

CL 12.

Scope of the clause—Barring certain suits specified at the end of this clause, the High Courts of Calcutta Madras and Bombay are empowered to try the following suits in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction namely—

I Suits for land or other immoveable property—

- (a) if the land or property is situated wholly within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the said High Courts, or
- (b) where the land or property is situated in part only within the said limits if the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained (f) See notes below, "Suit for land of which a part is within jurisdiction, p 1152

II. Suits other than those for land—

- (a) if the cause of action has arisen wholly within the said limits, or
- (b) where the cause of action has arisen in part only within the said limits if the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, or
- (c) if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit dwells or carries on business or personally works for gain within such limits

"Suits for land or other immoveable property"—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a "suit for land" within the meaning of this clause is a suit substantially for land that is for the purpose of acquiring title to or possession of land (m), or for declaring any interest in land (n) A agrees in Calcutta to sell to B land situated outside the original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court If A fails to perform his contract and B sues A for specific performance, the suit is one for land and it will not be entertained by the Court the land being situated outside its jurisdiction But if B fails to perform his contract, and A sues B for specific performance the suit is not one for land, and hence the suit will lie in the Calcutta Court (o) Similarly, a suit by a mortgagee for specific performance of an agreement to execute a mortgage of land is a suit for land and it will not be entertained by the Calcutta Court if the land is situated beyond the original jurisdiction of the Court (p) And it has been laid down by the same High Court that suits for redemption or foreclosure or for sale of mortgaged property are all suits for land and they will not be entertained by that Court if the land is situated beyond its original jurisdiction (q) also that a suit by a lessee for a declaration that the lease was a subsisting lease and for rents and profits is a suit for land and it will not be entertained if the land and though curiously enough the judgment does not refer to this fact that was the circumstance which brought the case within Holkar v Dadabhai. Nevertheless the Court overruling Holkar v Dadabhai said the suit was not competent. The Court entirely agreed with the Calcutta decisions and quoted with approval the dictum of Jenkins C J, in Sudamdih Coal Co v Empire Coal Co (x) that regard must be had to the substance of the suit in deciding whether it was a suit for land.

The Pombay decisions in the interval (y) are now of little importance, for they are all tainted by Holkar v Dadabhai and take no notice of the fact that the defendant resided out of jurisdiction. But there are some exceptions. In Vaghoj v Camaj (1) Jenkins C J correctly summarised the principles on which the Courts in England exercise jurisdiction in suits relating to land abroad and refused to make a declaration as to title of land outside jurisdiction. In Jeshtheadabai v Janardhan (a) Fawcett, J, held, following a Madras case (b) that a suit by a wife praying that her maintenance be secured by a charge on her husband's immovable property which was situated in Bombay was a suit for land. In Rajah Aotallal v Malabar Timber Co (c) the same learned Judge held that when the land was situated outside the local limits of the Court, the expression suit for land should be read subject to the proviso that the Bombay High Court in its original jurisdiction has a jurisdiction in personam similar to that exercised by a Court of equity in England and by a Munsif Court under the proviso to sec 10 of the Code and that if the defendant was within jurisdiction the Court had jurisdiction to declare a charge on land situated outside Bombay. And lastly in Pranlal v Cuckles (d), Pratt, J, held that the Court had no jurisdiction to make a declaration as to which of two mortgagees of land outside jurisdiction had priority, referred to Harendra Lal v Hari Das (e) where in a mortgage suit for sale of land the Privy Council said that the Court would have no jurisdiction if the land was situate out of jurisdiction, and suggested that Holkar v Dalabhai should be overruled.

Cl. 12.

Suits for the partition of land and suits for a declaration of title to land are suits for land and will not be entertained if the land is outside jurisdiction (f). A suit for damages for trespass to land is a suit for land (g). Suits for the recovery of title deeds are according to the Calcutta High Court not suits for land (h), but the Bombay High Court has held that they are, if a question of title to land is involved (i). This seems incorrect, for as said in India Spinning and Weaving Co v Climax Syndicate (j), "it is difficult to see how a suit to recover title deeds can be beyond the jurisdiction of the Court if the defendant is within the jurisdiction."

The Bombay High Court has held that an administration suit is not a suit for land although there are immoveable properties alleged to belong to the estate of the deceased beyond jurisdiction, and the High Court therefore can entertain such a suit and determine the question whether they belonged to the deceased at the time of his death. If the suit is otherwise within jurisdiction, no leave under cl. 12 is necessary merely because the immoveable properties or some of them are situated beyond jurisdiction (k). The High Court of Calcutta has held that a suit for administration, and as incidental to that suit, for a declaration that certain leaves granted by the executors of the estate cannot stand as against the plaintiff (the beneficiary), is not a suit for land (l). In a Privy Council case where a suit was brought by three out of four executors against the fourth executor for his removal from the office of trustee and executor and for accounts of the assets of the deceased, and for administration of his estate, it was held that the suit was not one for land, and that the High Court of Madras had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, though the property left by the deceased was outside jurisdiction, as a part of the cause of action had arisen within the jurisdiction, and the defendant was dwelling in Madras at the time of the institution of the suit (m). In a Calcutta case it was held that the High Court may entertain a suit by an executor for a declaration and injunction (though not for possession) in respect of the estate of the testator consisting of several immoveable properties, provided one at least of the properties is situated within its original jurisdiction, and leave of the Court is obtained, it is not necessary that the cause of action should arise within the local limits, or be specifically with reference to that property which is situated within those limits (n).

We have seen that to constitute a suit a "suit for land," the suit must have been brought for the purpose of acquiring possession of, or of establishing a title to, or an interest in, the land which is the subject of dispute. But it does not follow that every suit which has any reference to land is therefore a suit for land (o). In the Land Mortgage Bank v. Sudurudeen Ahmed, Trevelyan, J., said "I decline to hold that wherever land has anything to do with a suit it is therefore a suit for land" (p). Thus a suit by a trustee against "All other cases"—suits for partition of moveable and immoveable property, the latter being situated wholly outside jurisdiction.—The words "all other cases" in this clause do not include cases of suits for immoveable plus moveable property. They refer to cases in which immoveable property is not involved. Hence if A sues B for partition of moveable and immoveable property and the immoveable property is situated wholly outside jurisdiction, the suit must be dismissed as to such property, even if the leave of the Court has been obtained. The reason is that the immoveable property being situated wholly outside jurisdiction, the Court has no power to grant leave to sue as regards such property (s). In such a case the plaint may be amended with the leave of the Court by omitting therefrom so much as relates to immoveable property, and the suit may be proceeded with so far as it relates to moveable property (t).

Suit for land of which a part is within jurisdiction—Where there are several immoveable properties, then if even one of them is situated within jurisdiction, the Court can entertain a suit for a partition of all the properties including those situated outside jurisdiction, provided the leave of the Court has been first obtained. Such a case comes within the following words of cl 12, namely, "the said High Court shall be empowered to determine suits of every description, if, in the case of suits for land, such land shall be situated either wholly, or in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part, within the local limits" (u). If some of the properties are situated within and some outside jurisdiction, but no leave is obtained, the Court can proceed only with the suit so far as it relates to the immoveable properties situated within jurisdiction (v). Similarly if some of the properties included in a deed of mortgage are within, and some outside the jurisdiction, the Court has jurisdiction, on leave to sue being obtained, to entertain a suit on the mortgage in respect of all the properties including those situated outside jurisdiction (w), but not if the properties outside jurisdiction are the subject of a separate mortgage (x). The same rules apply where some of the properties are situated in British India and some outside British India (y). See notes "Scope of the clause," p 1149 above.

Leave of Court—The leave under this clause is a condition precedent to jurisdiction so that unless the condition is fulfilled by obtaining the necessary leave to sue, the Court will have no jurisdiction to entertain the suit (z). Such leave affords the very foundation of the jurisdiction hence it must be obtained before the institution of the suit, it cannot be granted after the suit has been instituted. The leave granted is confined to the cause or causes of action set forth in the plaint at the time when the leave was granted hence the plaint cannot be amended so as to alter the cause of action (a) But if the cause of action is not altered, there is no objection to an amendment (b) If a suit is brought in a Chartered High Court with leave of the Court, but there is nothing on the face of the plaint to show that any part of the cause of action arose within its jurisdiction, the plaintiff may be allowed to prove by evidence that part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction, and if it is necessary to amend the plaint by adding a statement that part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction, the amendment may be allowed, for such an amendment does not alter or add to the original cause of action (c) Where a defendant who does not reside within the jurisdiction and against whom the cause of action has arisen in part only within the jurisdiction, is added after the institution of the suit leave under this clause must be obtained at the time of the application for adding him as a party, though leave was obtained when the suit was originally filed (d) The force of an order granting leave to institute a suit is exhausted when the suit is instituted in pursuance of the order Hence if the suit is withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit upon the same cause of action, and a fresh suit is brought, there is nothing to prevent the Court from granting fresh leave to institute the fresh suit (e)

The leave under this section must be distinctly applied for and obtained, it cannot be implied from the fact that the plaintiff was granted leave to sue as a pauper (f) Nor can it be presumed from the fact that the Court orders a third party notice to be served on a party resident outside its jurisdiction The defendant taking out such notice must apply for leave under clause 12, and the leave must be endorsed on the notice as it is on a plaint (g) When it is said that the Court has no jurisdiction, this does not mean that there is no inherent jurisdiction, for the Court is competent to grant leave and to try the suit Therefore this objection to jurisdiction may be waived and the decree is valid if the defendant has accepted the jurisdiction of the Court (h)

Cause of action—See notes to s 20 of the Code, "Cause of action," "Cause of action in suits on contracts," and "Cause of action in other suits," on pp 90 93 above

If the cause of action shall have arisen in part.—It has been said in two Bombay cases that the words "if the cause of action shall have arisen in part" refer to a material part of the cause of action (i) There is nothing, it is submitted, in the language of this clause to warrant such a construction, though the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse to grant leave to sue if a material part of the cause of action did not arise within its jurisdiction The High Court of Madras has held that in dealing with applications for leave to sue under this clause, the Court is not precluded from taking the question of convenience into consideration (j)

Defendant—The word "defendant" in this clause means all the defendants where there are two or more defendants to a suit. It is not sufficient that one of the defendants dwells or carries on business within the jurisdiction (l)

Jurisdiction over non-resident foreigners.—See notes to s 20 of the Code, "Suits against non resident foreigners," on p 94 above

The question whether the fact of carrying on business through an agent within the local limits of jurisdiction would give the Court jurisdiction over a non resident foreigner was raised before the Privy Council but was not decided (l). The Madras High Court has held that it does (m)

Dwell—See notes to s 20 of the Code, "Dwell within the meaning of clause 12 of the Charter," on p 88 above

"Carries on business"—See notes to s 20 of the Code, under the same head on p 88 above

Personally works for gain—See notes to s 20 of the Code, under the same head on p 89 above

Suits against companies—See notes to s 20, "Suits against corporations Explanation II," on p 94 above

Ordinary Jurisdiction—The "ordinary" jurisdiction of the High Court embraces all such as is exercised in the ordinary course of law, and without any special occasion or special order being necessary therefor (n)

Appeal—The leave under this clause is granted on an ex parte application. If an order is made granting leave, the defendant may apply to have the order set aside or he may wait until the hearing or the legality of the order may be called in question as a separate issue for trial at the hearing of the suit (o). If the defendant does not wait until the hearing, and applies to have the order granting the leave set aside, and if the application is rejected, he may appeal from the order rejecting the application (p). Similarly if the plaintiff applies for leave, and leave is refused, the plaintiff may appeal from the order (q). The appeal would be one under cl 15 of the Letters Patent

The order granting or refusing leave by one Judge cannot be superseded by another Judge except on appeal from the order (r)

Waiver—There are two classes of cases to be considered under this head, namely,—

- (1) where the plaintiff in his plaint alleges that portion of the cause of action arose outside the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction and fails to take leave of the Court and the case comes on for trial,
- (2) where the plaintiff in his plaint alleges that the whole cause of action arose within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction but it turns out at the trial that portion of the cause of action arose within and part outside the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction

In case (1) the defendant may by appearing and pleading waive the objection to the jurisdiction. Thus it was held by the High Court of Calcutta (s), following Moss v

Gangce (f), in a case where the plaintiff alleged in his plaint that portion of the cause of action had arisen within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction but no leave was obtained by the plaintiff under clause 12 and the defendant without raising any objection to the jurisdiction filed his written statement and applied subsequently for a commission to examine witnesses that the defendant had waived his objection to the jurisdiction. This decision proceeded on the ground that the absence of leave under this clause did not go to the root of the jurisdiction of the Court. This decision is hardly consistent with the observations of Sir Richard Couch in Hadjee Ismail v. Hadjee Mahomed (u), where the learned Judge said that an order under clause 12 was not a mere formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure in the suit but one that has the effect of giving jurisdiction to the Court which it otherwise would not have, and the judgment of Telang J in Rampurab v. Premsookh (v) in which it was said that such leave affords the very foundation of the jurisdiction.

As to case (2) it has been held that where the plaintiff sets up a complete jurisdiction in the Court to try the case and if it turns out at the trial that the Court had not complete jurisdiction, the defendant cannot be held bound by the doctrine of estoppel on the ground that he waived the objection of want of jurisdiction (w).

S 21 of the Code which is a new section is not one of the sections mentioned in s 120. Does it therefore apply to Chartered High Courts? If it does, it follows that there can be a waiver of an objection as to the place of suing. But does not the word 'revisional' in s 21 show that the section was not intended to apply to Chartered High Courts, but to those Courts only to which ss 16, 17 and 20 apply? See in this connection cl 44 below.

"When the High Court shall think proper to do so"—In a suit for immovable property instituted in the Dinagepur Court, the defendant applied for its transfer to the Calcutta High Court under this clause, the grounds of the application being (1) that questions of difficulty arose in the suit, (2) that the defendant's witnesses lived in Calcutta and that it would be impossible for her to go to Dinagepur and take her witnesses there owing to the expenses (3) that the agreement upon which the suit was brought was executed in Calcutta and (4) that even the plaintiff resided and carried on business in Calcutta. It was held that the case was a proper one for transfer to the High Court (x).

Let. Pat. [Cal., Bom., and Mad.]

Cls. 13, 14. "Subject to its superintendence"—Note that the words used in this clause are "subject to its superintendence," while those used in sec 15 of the Charter Act (now s 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915) are "subject to its appellate jurisdiction." The power of transfer contained in sec 15 of the Charter Act has nothing to do with the power of removal conferred by the present clause, and the Letters Patent make superintendence, not appellate jurisdiction, the condition of the exercise of the power of removal conferred by this clause. It has accordingly been held that the Court of the Political Resident at Aden being a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court of Bombay within the meaning of the present clause, the High Court of Bombay has power to remove a suit from that Court to itself for trial and determination, though the Aden Court is not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court (y)

Transfer of suit from Presidency Small Cause Court to High Court—The High Court has power to transfer to itself a suit from the Presidency Small Cause Court, and the order for such transfer can be made, if allowed by the rules of the High Court, by a single Judge of that Court (z)

Powers of High Court in dealing with suits transferred under this clause—The powers of the High Court in dealing with suits transferred under this clause would seem to be confined to the powers which, but for the transfer, might have been exercised by the Court from which the suit is transferred (a) See C) 20 below

14. And We do further ordain that, where plaintiff has several causes of action against a defendant such causes of action not being for land or other immoveable property, and the said High Court shall have original jurisdiction in respect of one of such causes of action, it shall be lawful for the said High Court to call on the defendant to show cause why the several causes of action should not be joined together in one suit, and to make such order for trial of the same as to the said High Court shall seem fit.

Joinder of several causes of action

Joinder of causes of action—Where a suit is founded upon two causes of action, one of which is alleged to have arisen partly within the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court and the other wholly outside the jurisdiction, the High Court has power, after granting leave to sue in respect of the former cause of action under clause 12, to allow the plaintiff to join the latter in the same suit. There is nothing in the present clause to show that the power of the Court to make such an order under this clause is limited to cases where one of the causes of action has arisen wholly within the jurisdiction (b)

And We do further ordain that an appeal shall lie to the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, from the judgment (not being an order made in the execution of revisional jurisdiction and not being a sentence or order passed or made in the revision of the power of superintendence under the provisions of section one hundred and seven of the Government of India Act, 1915, or in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction) of one Judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division Court, pursuant to section 13 of the said recited Act, and that an appeal shall also lie to the said High Court from the judgment (not being a sentence or order as aforesaid) of two or more Judges of the said High Court, or of such Division Court, whenever such Judges are equally divided in opinion, and do not amount in number to a majority of the whole of the Judges of the said High Court at the time being, but that the right of appeal from other judgments of Judges of the said High Court, or of such Division Court, shall be to Us, Our heirs or successors in Our or Their Privy Council, as hereinafter provided.

Appeal from the Courts of original jurisdiction to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction

Alterations in this clause—The words in italics were substituted for the words 'not being a sentence or order passed or made in any criminal trial' by the Amended Letters Patent of 1919

Meaning of 'judgment' as used in this clause—

1 Calcutta High Court—The leading case on the subject is that of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v The Oriental Gas Co (c) decided by the High Court of Calcutta so far back as 1872 In that case Couch C J, said 'We think "judgment" in clause 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability It may be either final or preliminary or interlocutory the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it leaving other matters to be determined This definition is now of some antiquity and is rapidly becoming if it has not already become almost classical (d) The point actually decided in The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v The Oriental Gas Co was that no appeal lies under this clause from an order directing the issue of a mandamus to the Justices of the Peace for Calcutta to compel them to refer to arbitration a question of compensation The above decision was followed by a decision of the same Court in Hadjee Ismail v Hadjee Mahomed (e) where it was held that an appeal lies under this clause from an

Cls. 13, 14. "Subject to its superintendence"—Note that the words used in this clause are "subject to its superintendence," while those used in sec 15 of the Charter Act [now s 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915] are, "subject to its appellate jurisdiction." The power of transfer contained in sec 15 of the Charter Act has nothing to do with the power of removal conferred by the present clause and the Letters Patent make superintendence, not appellate jurisdiction, the condition of the exercise of the power of removal conferred by this clause. It has accordingly been held that the Court of the Political Resident at Aden being a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court of Bombay within the meaning of the present clause, the High Court of Bombay has power to remove a suit from that Court to itself for trial and determination, though the Aden Court is not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court (y)

Transfer of suit from Presidency Small Cause Court to High Court—The High Court has power to transfer to itself a suit from the Presidency Small Cause Court and the order for such transfer can be made, if allowed by the rules of the High Court, by a single Judge of that Court (z)

Powers of High Court in dealing with suits transferred under this clause—The powers of the High Court in dealing with suits transferred under this clause would seem to be confined to the powers which, but for the transfer, might have been exercised by the Court from which the suit is transferred (a). See Cl. 20 below

14. And We do further ordain that, where plaintiff has several causes of action against a defendant such causes of action not being for land or other immoveable property, and the said High Court shall have original jurisdiction in respect of one of such causes of action, it shall be lawful for the said High Court to call on the defendant to show cause why the several causes of action should not be joined together in one suit, and to make such order for trial of the same as to the said High Court shall seem fit.

Joinder of several causes of action—Where a suit is founded upon two causes of action one of which is alleged to have arisen partly within the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court and the other wholly outside the jurisdiction, the High Court has power after granting leave to sue in respect of the former cause of action under clause 12, to allow the plaintiff to join the latter in the same suit. There is nothing in the present clause to show that the power of the Court to make such an order under this clause is limited to cases where one of the causes of action has arisen wholly within the jurisdiction (b)

15. And We do further ordain that an appeal shall lie to the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, from the judgment (not being an order made in the execution of revisional jurisdiction and not being a sentence or order passed or made in the revision of the power of superintendence under the provisions of section one hundred and seven of the Government of India Act, 1915, or in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction) of one Judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division Court, pursuant to section 13 of the said recited Act, and that an appeal shall also lie to the said High Court from the judgment (not being a sentence or order as aforesaid) of two or more Judges of the said High Court, or of such Division Court, whenever such Judges are equally divided in opinion, and do not amount in number to a majority of the whole of the Judges of the said High Court at the time being, but that the right of appeal from other judgments of Judges of the said High Court, or of such Division Court, shall be to Us, Our heirs or successors in Our or Their Privy Council, as hereinafter provided

Cl. 15. order refusing to set aside an order granting leave to sue to the plaintiff under cl 12 of the Letters Patent Referring to the said order, Couch, C J, said "It is not a mere formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure in the suit but one that has the effect of giving a jurisdiction to the Court which it otherwise would not have. And it may fairly be said to determine some right between them viz, the right to sue in a particular Court and to compel the defendants who are not within its jurisdiction to come in and defend the suit, or, if they do not, to make them liable to have a decree passed against them in their absence" In a later case, Garth C J said "I think that the word judgment means a judgment or decree which decides the case one way or the other in its entirety, and that it does not mean a decision or order of an interlocutory character which merely decides some isolated point, not affecting the merits or the result of the entire suit (f)

The definition of ' judgment ' in the case of Justices of the Peace for Calcutta (g) was adopted by a majority of the same High Court in a later case where it was held that an appeal lies under this clause from an order made by a single Judge of that Court under O 45, r 15, refusing to transmit for execution an Order of His Majesty in Council (h) The decision was affirmed on appeal to the Privy Council (i) Referring to the judgment of the majority, their Lordships said "These learned Judges held (and their Lordships think rightly) that whether the transmission of an order under s 610 (now O 45, r 15) would or would not be a merely ministerial proceeding Mr Justice Pontifex [whose order was appealed from] had in fact exercised a judicial discretion, and had come to a decision of great importance, which if it remained would entirely conclude any rights of Halsunderi for an execution in this suit They held therefore, that it was a judgment within the meaning of cl 15" In a later case Sanderson, C J, said that the definition of judgment given by Couch, C J, had never been regarded as absolutely exhaustive, and that in every case where the Court was called upon to decide whether the decision under appeal was or was not a "judgment," regard must be had to the nature of the order (j)

2 Bombay High Court—The definition of judgment as given in the two Calcutta cases cited above has been adopted by the High Court of Bombay In Miya Mahomed v Zorabi (k) Scott, C J, referring to the above Calcutta cases said "For a considerable number of years in this Court those two decisions (i) have to my knowledge been regarded as the leading decisions to be followed on the question whether an order in any particular case is a 'judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent The leading Bombay case is Sonbai v Ahmedbhai decided in the year 1872 (l)

3 Madras High Court—Turning now to the Madras decisions the earlier leading case on the subject was De Souza v Coles (m) decided in the year 1869 The modern leading case is that of Tuljaram v Alagappa (n) decided by a Full Bench of that Court in 1910 In the former case, Bittlestone, J, said "The word 'judgment' cannot be limited to the final judgment in the suit, but must be held to have the more general meaning of any decision or determination affecting the rights or the interest of any party to applicant . . . When the language giving the appeal is so general in its terms as that contained in the 15th clause of the Charter, it is, we think, impossible to prescribe any limits to the right of appeal founded upon the nature of the order or decree appealed from." This definition has now been rejected as too wide, and instead thereof, we have another definition of the term 'judgment' laid down in Tuljaram's case. In that case White, C J., said as follows —

"The test seems to me to be not what is the form of the adjudication, but what is its effect in the suit or proceeding in which it is made. If its effect, whatever its form may be, and whatever be the nature of the application on which it is made, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, I think the adjudication is a "judgment" within the meaning of the clause. An adjudication on an application which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication in the suit is not, in my opinion, a "judgment" within the meaning of the Letters Patent, I think, too, an order on an independent proceeding which is ancillary to the suit (not instituted as a step towards judgment, but with a view to rendering the judgment effective if obtained),—e.g., an order on an application for an interim injunction, or for the appointment of a receiver is a 'judgment' within the meaning of the clause."

It will be seen that the definition of 'judgment' as stated by White, C J., is wider than that in Justice of the Peace for Calcutta, and narrower than the one in De Souza v Coles. Referring to the former case, White, C J., said that he was not prepared to say as was said in that case that judgment within the meaning of this clause must be a decision which affects the merits by determining some right or liability. The learned Chief Justice added "I think the decision may be a judgment for the purposes of the clause, though it does not affect the merits of the suit or proceeding and does not determine any question of right raised in the suit or proceeding." The result is that some orders which have been held not to be appealable by the Calcutta High Court have been held to be appealable by the Madras High Court, e.g., an order under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent transferring a suit from a subordinate Court to the High Court (p). Referring to the definition of 'judgment' in De Souza v Coles, the learned Chief Justice said that it was too wide.

4 Allahabad High Court—L P, cl (10)—The Allahabad High Court has not felt the necessity of defining the term "judgment," because it has held that the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent is, in respect of an order made under the Code, controlled by the provisions of s. 104 above as understood by that Court. The result is that no order from which an appeal is not allowed under s. 104 and O 43, r. 1, is appealable under the present clause (g). And, further, no appellate order from which a second appeal is excluded under that section can be appealed from under this clause (r). Conversely, an order from which an appeal is allowed under s. 104 and O 43, r. 1, to the High Court from a subordinate Court is an order from which an appeal will lie under this clause (s). The only definition hitherto given by that Court of the word "judgment" is that it must be "such a judgment on the part of all the learned and honourable

■ Lahore High Court—L P, cl (10)—The High Court of Lahore has adopted the definition of 'judgment' as given by White C.J., in Tuljaram's case referred to above under the head "Madras High Court (u)"

■ Rangoon High Court—L P, cl (10)—In Leo Eng Buan v Beng Seng & Co (r) Robinson, C.J., after setting out the passage cited above from the judgment of White, C.J., in Tuljaram's case, said as follows —

With these dicta I am in general agreement. I agree that a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability may rightly be held to be a 'judgment', and I think that an order which merely paves the way for the determination of the question between the parties cannot be considered to be a 'judgment', nor can a mere formal order merely regulating the procedure in the suit or one which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication.

In Vooljee Dharve & Co v Moola (u) a Divisional Bench of the same High Court after referring to the case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta and Tuljaram's case said as follows —

'The result of these rulings seem to be that the effect of the order as a whole must be considered. If when considered as a whole the decision is one which to use the language of Couch, C.J. 'affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability,' then it will be appealable. Almost every order does, in a sense, determine some right or liability but that this dictum of the learned Chief Justice was not to be understood in the wide sense is shown by the succeeding sentence where he states that a final judgment determines the whole case or suit and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it.

Interlocutory Orders—All the High Courts are now agreed that no appeal lies under this clause from an order merely regulating procedure in a suit or from an order on an application which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication in the suit. It has thus been held that no appeal lies from the following orders, namely, an order directing a party to produce and give inspection of documents (x) an order directing the issue of a commission for the examination of witnesses (y) an order refusing to try certain issues as preliminary issues (z) an order refusing to frame an issue asked for by one of the parties (a) an order amending the title of a plaint so as to convert a summary suit into a short cause (b) an order under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent transferring a suit from the Presidency Small Cause Court to the High Court (c) (though the contrary has been held on the last mentioned point by the High Court of Madras) (d) an order dismissing the defendant's application to take the plaint off the file on the ground that the suit was not for the benefit of the lunatic plaintiff (e), an order refusing to direct certain allegations in a party's pleading to be struck out as scandalous (f), an order refusing to give directions for the simultaneous trial of issues between the defendant and a third party (g) an order restoring a suit dismissed for default (h), an order settling the terms of a proclamation for sale (i), an order as to the sufficiency of security for stay of execution (j) and an order for security under O 38, r 5 (l). The decision in an earlier Madras case (l) that an appeal lies under this clause from an order fixing a distant date for the hearing of a suit has been disapproved in later decisions of the same Court (m) such an order is one relating merely to the date of hearing and is not a judgment.

But an appeal lies from the following orders namely an order directing a plaintiff to give security for costs (n), an order refusing a stay of execution (o) an order rejecting an application to set aside the abatement of a suit or appeal (p), an order refusing to stay execution of a decree of a Mufassal Court pending an appeal therefrom to the High Court (q) an order directing payment to a party of a certain sum per month for his maintenance pending the suit (r), an order made by a single Judge of the Calcutta High Court dismissing a suit for want of prosecution under Chapter 10 rule 30 of the High Court Rules (s) an order giving plaintiffs leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to take such action thereafter as they may be advised (t) an order for attachment (u) an order setting aside an abatement of suit (v), and an order rejecting an application under O 41, r 19 (w).

Whether wrong exercise of discretion may be a ground of appeal—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the fact of a matter being within the discretion of the original Judge is a ground for refusing to entertain the appeal (x). On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Madras that the fact that the making of an order was a matter of discretion is not a ground for refusing to entertain an appeal though it may be a good reason for declining to interfere with that discretion in appeal (y).

Orders in suits and appeals—We have already noted in their proper place what orders made under the Code are appealable under this clause and what orders are not so appealable. The following is a list of such orders—

Orders in proceedings other than suits and appeals.—A "judgment" within the meaning of this clause need not be an adjudication in a suit or appeal as technically understood. An adjudication which terminates what may be called an original petition like an application for the custody of a minor may be a "judgment" as to be appealable under this clause. The following is a list of such adjudications—

- 1 Habeas corpus.—An appeal lies under this clause from an order deciding the claim of relatives to the custody of a minor on a writ of Habeas corpus (i)
- 2 Leave to sue under cl. 12 of the charter.—An appeal lies from an order refusing to set aside an order granting leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent and also from an order refusing to grant leave to sue. See notes to cl. 1 "Appeal," p 1161 above.
- 3 Administrator General's Act 3 of 1913.—An appeal lies from an order allowing to the Administrator General commission at a certain rate (a)
- 4 Probate and Administration Act, 1881, s 90 [now Indian Succession Act 37 of 1925, s 307].—An appeal lies from an order purporting to be made under s 90 of the Probate and Administration Act at the instance of a beneficiary (a) case in which there is no restriction imposed by the will on the power of the executor to sell immoveable property forming part of the estate of the deceased. Such an order is really one made without jurisdiction (b). An appeal also lies from an order granting probate (c).

5 Limitation Act, s 5—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that no appeal lies from an order refusing to excuse the delay in filing an appeal or application (d). The High Court of Bombay has held that an appeal does lie from such an order (e).

6 Mandamus—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in the leading case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v The Oriental Gas Co (f), that no appeal lies from an order which directs a mandamus to issue to a public body to compel them to refer a question of compensation to arbitration, the reason given being that such an order does not determine any question whatever between the parties, but only initiates proceedings by which the liability of the public body to make compensation is to be ascertained and determined. This decision was dissented from by White, C J, in the Madras case of Tuljaram v Alagappa (g).

7 Contempt—An appeal lies from an order of committal for contempt (h) as well as from an order refusing an application to commit for contempt of Court (i).

8 Vice Admiralty jurisdiction—An appeal lies from the decision of a single Judge of a Chartered High Court exercising Admiralty or Vice Admiralty jurisdiction (j).

9 Arbitration Act 9 of 1899—An appeal lies under this clause from an order refusing to set aside an award made and filed under the Arbitration Act (k). An appeal also lies from an order dismissing an application for a stay of proceedings under s 19 of that Act (l).

10 Land Acquisition Act 1 of 1894—See notes below, 'Land acquisition appeal'.

11 Indian Companies Act 6 of 1882—No appeal lies from an order refusing an application under s 169 of the Indian Companies Act for extension of time for serving notice of an appeal under that Act (m).

12 Income Tax Act, 1922—No appeal lies from the decision of a single Judge in a Reference under s 66 of the Income Tax Act (n).

Orders made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction—The words 'not being an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction' were added into this clause by the Amended Letters Patent of 11th March 1919. The addition of these words makes it clear that no appeal lies under this clause from orders made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction (o). See notes to s 115, Appeal p 320 above.

Cls. Orders made in the exercise of the power of superintendence—The 15-17. words "not being a sentence or order passed or made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under the provisions of section one hundred and seven of the Government of India Act, 1915," were added into this clause by the Amended Letters Patent of 11th March 1919. The addition of these words makes it clear that no appeal lies under this clause from orders made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under s. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915.

The appeal given to the Full Court under this clause is not confined to the points on which the Judges of the Division Court differ, the whole appeal is open before the Court for decision (s).

Land acquisition appeal—The decision of the High Court in a land acquisition appeal is not a "judgment" within the meaning of this clause so as to enable a party to file a further appeal to the High Court under this clause (f). See notes to cl 39, "The decision must amount to a judgment, decree or order"

Sentence or order in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction—An order granting sanction under s 193 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code is one made in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction and is not a "judgment" within the meaning of this clause (u). See the undermentioned cases (v).

Review —It is competent to the High Court to review judgments in appeals preferred under cl 15 above (u)

16. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall be a Court of Appeal from the Civil Courts of the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, and from all other Courts subject to its superintendence, and shall exercise appellate jurisdiction in such cases as are subject to appeal to the said High Court by virtue of any laws or regulations now in force.

17. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall have the like power and authority with respect to the persons and estates

Subject to its superintendence.—Note that the words used in s 10 of the Charter Act [now s 107 of the Government of India Act 1915] are "subject to its appellate jurisdiction while those in the present section are "subject to its superintendence" (1) Compare cl 13 above

Admiralty jurisdiction of Supreme Courts—See cl 26 of the Charter of the Calcutta Supreme Court, cl 41 of the Charter of the Madras Supreme Court, and cl 53 of the Charter of the Bombay Supreme Court

Necessaries supplied to a ship—It was settled to be the law in England that prior to the passing of 3 and 4 Vict., c 65 the Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction in the case of necessaries supplied to a ship, though perhaps it occasionally purported to exercise the jurisdiction where not prohibited (h). The same view has obtained in India (i), but there is a difference of opinion as to whether the extended powers under 3 and 4 Vict., c 65 and 24 Vict., c 10, became vested in the Indian High Court by virtue of the several Letters Patent (j). Assuming that the High Court in its Admiralty jurisdiction had no jurisdiction over claims for maritime necessaries under any previous enactment such jurisdiction would now rest on the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890, which vests in it the power described in sec 5 of the Admiralty Act, 1861 [24 Vict., c. 10]. The effect of the two Acts is to invest the Indian High Court with jurisdiction over claims for necessaries supplied to a ship elsewhere than in the port to which the ship Court belongs unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that at the time of the institution of the suit the owner is domiciled in British India or Burma (l).

33. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, shall have and exercise criminal jurisdiction as may now be exercised by the said High Court as a Court of Admiralty or of Vice-Admiralty, or otherwise in connection with maritime matters or matters of prize.

Where the Judges are equally divided—This clause is not controlled by s 98 of the Code and if the Judges are equally divided the opinion of the senior Judge prevails (p) From the decree passed in conformity with the opinion of the senior Judge an appeal lies under cl 15 and the whole appeal is open on appeal and not merely the points on which the Judges differed (q) See notes to s 98 of the Code Letters Patent Appeal on p 268 above Where an application is made to the High Court under s 193 clause (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code to revoke a sanction granted by a lower Court or to give a sanction refused by it and the Judges composing the bench hearing the application are equally divided in opinion the case is governed by the present clause and not by s 422 or s 439 of that Code (r)

Subject always to such rules and orders as are now in force, or may, from time to time, be made, respecting appeals to Ourselves in Council from the Courts of the said Presidency, except so far as the said existing rules and orders respectively are hereby varied, and subject also to such further rules and orders as We may, with the advice of Our Privy Council, hereafter make in that behalf.

Decisions appealable to the Privy Council.—No appeal lies to His Majesty in Council under this clause, unless—

- (i) the decision from which an appeal is sought to be preferred amounts to a judgment, decree, or order,
- (ii) the decision is a final one; and
- (iii) the decision is passed on appeal, or in the exercise of original jurisdiction

The decision must amount to a judgment, decree or order.—No appeal lies to the Privy Council from an award made by a High Court on appeal from a District Court under s 54 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. Such an award is not a judgment, decree or order within the meaning of this clause (a). Similarly no appeal lies from a decision of the High Court upon a case referred by the Chief Revenue Authority under s 15 of the Income Tax Act, 1918. The judgment given on such a reference is merely advisory (i).

The judgment, decree or order must be final.—See notes to s 109 of the Code under the head "Final order," s 288 above

The final judgment, decree or order must be one made on appeal or in the exercise of original jurisdiction.—Cl 10 of the Charter empowers the High Court to deal with professional misconduct by suspension or removal. An order made under that clause is not in the exercise either of the original or appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, and is not therefore appealable to His Majesty in Council (u). of revisional jurisdiction under section 11a of the Code (x), is appealable to the Privy Council. It may here be stated that cl 15 of the Letters Patent was amended by the Amended Letters Patent of 11th March 1919 by adding into the clause certain words which make it clear that no appeal lies to the High Court under that clause from an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction or from an order made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under s 107 of the Government of India Act 1915. But if the order in revision is made by a single Judge section 111 of the Code bars an appeal to the Privy Council (x).

"Made on appeal"—An order made by the High Court rejecting an application to amend a decree passed by that Court on appeal is not an order made on appeal within the meaning of this clause (y) nor is an order made by the High Court rejecting an application to review a judgment passed on appeal (z). Such an order is not an order made on appeal against the judgment sought to be reviewed; it is an order in the appeal in which the judgment sought to be reviewed was given (a).

Appeal from interlocutory judgment

the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, at its discretion on the motion, or if the said High Court be not sitting, then for any Judge of the said High Court upon the petition of any party who considers himself aggrieved by any preliminary or interlocutory judgment, decree, order, or sentence of the High Court, in any such proceeding as aforesaid, not being of criminal jurisdiction, to grant permission to such party to appeal against the same to Us, Our heirs and successors, in Our or Their Privy Council, subject to the same rules, regulations, and limitations, as are herein expressed respecting appeals from final judgments, decrees, orders and sentences.

Appeal from Interlocutory judgment—No appeal lies to the Privy Council from an interlocutory judgment or order of a Judge of a High Court until such judgment or order has been subjected to an appeal to the High Court under cl 15 except in those cases in which by reason of the number of Judges who have made such order an appeal under cl 15 is given directly to the Privy Council (b). The High Court will not it seems in the exercise of its discretion under this clause grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council upon a mere question of practice such as an order for inspection of documents (c) or an order refusing the appointment of a receiver in a suit (d). But an order made by the High Court of Bombay under cl 13 of the Letters Patent transferring to itself a suit from the Court of the Resident at Aden raises a question of jurisdiction as distinguished from practice and leave may be granted from such an order to appeal to the Privy

And We do further ordain that, from any judgment, order or sentence of the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, made in the exercise of original criminal jurisdiction, or in any criminal case where any point or points of law have been reserved for the opinion of the said High Court in manner hereinbefore provided, by any Court which has exercised original jurisdiction, it shall be lawful for the persons aggrieved by such judgment, order, or sentence to appeal to Us, Our heirs or successors in Council, provided the said High Court shall declare that the case is a fit one for such appeal and under such conditions as the said High Court may establish or require, subject always to such rules and orders as We may, with the advice of Our Privy Council, hereafter make in that behalf

Powers of the Indian Legislature preserved

44. And We do further ordain and declare that all the provisions of these Our Letters Patent are subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Legislative Council, and also of the Governor-General in Council under section seventy-one of the Government of India Act, 1915, and also of the Governor-General in cases of emergency under section seventy-two of that Act and may be in all respects amended and altered thereby Alterations in this clause—This clause was substituted for the original clause 44 by the Amending Letters Patent of 11th March 1919. The material alteration consists in substituting the words ‘powers of the Governor General in Legislative Council and also of the Governor General in Council’ for the words ‘powers of the Governor General in Council’.

Legislative powers of the Governor General in Council—The powers of the Governor General in Council to make laws are derived from the Indian Councils Act of 1861 (24 and 25 Vict. = 67). By sec. 22 of that Act the Governor General in Council is given power to make laws in the manner provided including power to repeal or amend existing laws and including the making of laws for all Courts of justice and for all persons whatever British or Native foreigners or others. But a proviso to that section enacts that there is to be no power to repeal or in any way affect any Act passed in the same session of Parliament with the Indian Councils Act. The High Courts Act of 1861 (24 and 25 Vict. c. 104) is such an Act and the Governor General in Council therefore has no power to alter its provisions unless such power is expressly given by the Act itself. Thus the Governor General in Council has no power to alter the provisions of that Act as to the qualifications of the judges of the High Courts (sec. 3) or the provisions of sec. 15 thereof giving the High Courts superintendence over the Courts which are subject to its appellate jurisdiction (A). But the Governor General in Council has power to remove any place or territory from the jurisdiction of a High Court the reason being that such power is distinctly recognized by sec 9 of the said Act and it is also consistent with the Letters Patent (cl. 44) as required by the said sec. 11 (i)

Further, there is a proviso to sec 22 of the Indian Councils Act, which enacts that there is to be no power to repeal or in any way affect any provision of the Government of India Act of 1858. Sec 65 of the latter Act provides that all persons shall have and take the same suits remedies and proceedings against the Secretary of State for India in Council as they could have done against the East India Company. Before the Government of India Act, 1858, a British subject could sue the East India Company to determine his claim to any right over land. The Governor General in Council has therefore no power under the Indian Councils Act to pass an Act taking away the right of a British subject to sue the Secretary of State in a Civil Court to determine his claim to any right over land (j). See now the Government of India Act, 1915, s 106 (2)

An order made in revision by a single Judge is final since the amendment of cl. 13 and would therefore be appealable to Privy Council under cl. 39, but as Letters Patent are subject to Imperial Legislation that appeal is taken away by Section 111 of the Code (k)

45. And it is Our further will and pleasure that these

Provisions of former Letters Patent inconsistent with these Letters Patent to be void

Letters Patent shall be published by the Governor-General in Council, and shall come into operation from and after the date of such publication, and that from and after the date on which effect shall have been given to them, so much of the aforesaid Letters Patent granted by His Majesty, King George The Third, as was not revoked or determined by the said Letters Patent of the fourteenth of May, one thousand eight hundred and sixty two, and is inconsistent with these Letters Patent, shall cease, determine and be utterly void, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.
